Werle testifies for prosecution

Kidnapper points finger at May

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

In a move which Riley County Attorney Dennis Sauter described as "shocking," Stephan Werle, 21, convicted kidnapper of 5-year-old Gary Thomason, took the stand for the state Thursday in the kidnap trial of Darwin May in Riley County District Court.

Werle was not expected to testify for the state and Sauter would not elaborate on why We le decided to testify.

Werle was arrested Oct. 11 with May, 26, of Junction City and Marlon Holum, 21, an admitted Ft. Riley deserter, for the Oct. 4 kidnapping of the boy. Werle and Holum both pleaded guilty last week to the kidnapping charges and were both sentenced to nine years to life in prison.

Holum, May and Werle met at May's apartment Sept. 30 and planned to kidnap a child in the affluent west side of Manhattan, Werle said. The three decided to abscond with a child because a child would not be able to identify them as easily as an adult.

In his testimony, Werle said he and Holum attempted two or three times to kidnap a woman who lived west of Manhattan. May was not included in those attempts, he said.

BUT WERLE said he asked May to join them in the abduction of the child because he said he didn't want to work wwith Holum anymore because "he (Holum) was stupid."

In another meeting, Oct. 3, Werle said they finally decided to attempt the kidnapping because he said he lost his job the day before.

"I told Marlon I had to do something to get some money," he said.

It was decided May would go to the Hideaway Lounge, also known as the Walk-In Lounge, and pick up the $30,000 Werle said he and Holum would demand after they picked up the child. As established in earlier testimony, the Thomasons were told in the ransom call to leave the money in the men's room of the bar at 8 p.m. on the evening of Oct. 4.

In recounting the events of the kidnapping, Werle said they nabbed young Thomason at random.

As they drove down Beechwood Terrace, the street on which Thomason lives Werle said, they spotted three children walking down the street. One broke off from the other two and they decided to grab him. The child was Gary Thomason, son of Linda, a housewife, and Michael, who runs Manhattan's Woodard Mobile Homes Inc.

DURING THE ransom pick-up, some friends of the three agreed to act as a cover for May, as he went into the bar to take the money. If any trouble with police arose, Werle said, they were to create a diversion so May could escape. The tactics were unnecessary because May detected the police stakeout and did not attempt to take the money.

Cross examination of Werle begins today.

Another state witness, Jan Lee Meads, said she was in May's apartment with Holum, Werle and May on Sept. 30, and heard them make their kidnap plans. According to Meads, Holum said, "'we have to get the kid,'" and she said the others agreed.

Senate swears in new members; gives arena funding priority

By THE SGA STAFF

Student senators and student members of the Board of Student Publications elected Wednesday were approved and sworn into office during last night's Student Senate meeting.

Senate also approved a list of K-State funding priorities for the Student Legislative Network (SLN) on which to concentrate when lobbying the Kansas Legislature.

Funding for an arena and for campus capital improvements—including Farrell Library, Seaton Court and Willard Hall—are the top two priorities.

SLN also will work to get the Legislature to continue to support the coal-fired energy plant and to support formula funding as a basis for determining K-State's budget.

Sam Brownback, student body president, said it was especially important for students to support the coal-fired power plant.

"KP&L (Kansas Power and Light Company) has pulled all plugs and stops to stop this (the building of the plant)," Brownback said.

"I know it's not a heated issue among students, but we need to get fired up over it," he said.

THE BOARD of Regents has the arena included on their Building Committee agenda for today's meeting, Brownback said. A meeting for city, county, University and athletic officials, alumni and state legislators has been scheduled for Feb. 26 to discuss plans for raising funds now that the arena referendum has passed.

Senate voted unanimously to implement recommendations of the Library Task Force. The task force's final report was praised by Faculty Senate and examined by President Acker's Administrative Council, Brownback said.

"I'm convinced that in four or five years, we'll have a much better library at Kansas State," he said.

Senate approved unanimously an additional allocation of $300 to purchase a dictaphone machine. Senate had allocated $168 for the machine last fall, but the price was later found to be inaccurate, said Jenny Johnston, Student Governing Association (SGA) secretary.

THE TRANSFER Student Task Force reported to senate that allowing transfer students to enroll by mail and encouraging them to live in organized housing would be beneficial to such students. Revising orientation sessions for transfer students and providing more financial aid information also would be helpful, the group found.

Coal-fired plant alternatives volleyed at Audubon forum

By STANTON JANSSEN
Collegian Reporter

New sites for K-State's coal-fired power plant and ash disposal site, and the possibility of co-generation of electricity with steam heat were discussed at a Flint Hills Audubon Society forum last night in Ackert Hall.

Co-generation of electricity would use the primary steam produced at the plant to heat buildings on campus and divert secondary steam that would normally be exhausted to drive a steam turbine generator.

Proposed plant site E is located east of Manhattan near the old sewage plant, and would have its own coal storage on the site. The fourth ash disposal site, recommended by the College of Agriculture, is north of Manhattan near the K-State research farms. It was acquired by the University Foundation recently as a buffer zone for the livestock research farms, said Case Bonebrake, utilities superintendent for University Facilities.

Bonebrake and Robert Robel, professor of biology, were present to discuss the power plant and answer questions.

When asked if the plant would have co-generation capabilities, Bonebrake said, "It is not proposed to have any."

"It is my opinion, and that of the consulting firm (Lutz, Daily and Brain) that it would be most economical, and a wise investment to go with co-generation," Bonebrake said.

Bonebrake couldn't explain why a co-generation power plant hasn't been proposed by the University.

"To install co-generating facilities in this plant would cost an additional $6 million," Bonebrake said.

Bonebrake added that the possibility of burning refuse-derived fuel (RDF) has not been ruled out.

"It (the power plant) will not be constructed to eliminate the firing of RDF," he said.

Bonebrake said the University has stated if the county provides the RDF in a usable form at the plant site, K-State will pay for it based on the amount of coal saved by burning RDF.

Iranian factions battle; U.S. pullout prepared

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—The United States readied helicopters and big jets Thursday for a massive airlift of thousands of Americans from Iran, where anti-Americanism is running high and the anti-shah revolutionary alliance is splintering into hostile factions.

Iran's revolutionary government executed four of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's generals before dawn Friday and confiscated all properties of the royal family in Iran.

Bloody fighting raged for the third straight day in the northwest city of Tabriz, where hundreds were reported killed. Unconfirmed reports said rebels seeking local autonomy were battling forces of the provisional government of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini.

In Tehran, Marxist gunmen attacked an apartment building where they said agents of SAVAK, the shah's secret service were holding out. These "urban guerrillas" have rejected Khomeini's call to turn in their arms, distributed or stolen during last weekend's bloody climax to the year-long anti-shah campaign.

Some radicals have denounced the makeup of the 5-day-old government as not sufficiently leftist.

As the 78-year-old Moslem holy man Khomeini struggled to restore law and order in Iran, the monarch he forced out of the country, Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, moved from one guest house in Morocco to another, a possible sign he is ready for a long stay abroad.

"We cannot protect American lives in Iran," said the U.S. Embassy's announcement of the evacuation. "You are allowed one suitcase per person. Evacuation planes will begin flying 17 February."

The announcement came one day after scores of guerrillas stormed the embassy compound and briefly held 102 Americans hostage.

THE KHOMEINI camp, whose fighters rescued the Americans, identified the attackers as communists and rightists trying to discredit the new regime. Some of the guerrillas described themselves as communists.

There are believed to be 7,000 Americans left in Iran, down from a peak of about 45,000 one year ago. U.S. officials hope to reduce the number to about 2,000 with the evacuation.

Those expected to remain include skeletal staffs at the embassy and at some corporate headquarters, about 100 American journalists and many Americans married to Iranians.

Mehdi Bazargan, prime minister of the Khomeini government, directed that evacuees be given safe passage to Tehran's Mehrabad International Airport and sufficient guards for the movement of 1,000 persons a day.

Turkey gave permission to the United States to send five big helicopters and six C-130 transport planes to an air base at Incirlik, southern Turkey, for possible use in the evacuation.

But U.S. officials in Washington said these would be used only in an emergency. The evacuation will begin Saturday with at least two chartered Pan American World Airways jetliners that each can carry about 400 people, State Department spokesman Hodding Carter said.

Marijuana charges filed against 2 MPs

Nine members of the 977th M.P. Company at Ft. Riley were apprehended on suspected marijuana violations Wednesday. Charges were filed against two of the military policemen for drug violations, but court hearing dates have not been set.

Pfc. Carl Stroh, 19, of Mahopac, N.Y., was charged with use of marijuana on post and sale of LSD off post.

Spec. 4 Bruce Winn, 20, of Mt. Vernon, Mo., was charged with possession of marijuana, larceny and destruction of private property.

Rev. Taylor—the new Jim Jones?

TOPEKA—The Rev. Richard Taylor Jr., head of Kansas' anti-liquor forces, called Thursday on a state senator to apologize to what he said are 400,000 "concerned Kansans" fighting increased alcohol consumption.

The demand came after Sen. Frank Gaines (D-Augusta) accused Taylor of using the same kind of emotional manipulation as that employed by the late Rev. Jim Jones of the Peoples Temple cult.

Gaines replied that he was "halfway serious" in his comments, but stood by his assertion that Taylor evokes blind allegiance from his supporters. He said they "accept as Gospel" what Taylor says, sometimes in the face of facts that disprove what the dry leader claims.

"It's the same basic emotion Jimmy Jones was using in Guyana, and that's how he operates. And you know, he gets the people all worked up in the state," Gaines said.

Gaines' first comments, comparing Taylor and Jones, were made in an interview for a Wichita television news program.

In response, Taylor told The Associated Press that Gaines' analogy "is an indication of how desperate are those who want to make more money selling more alcohol."

Scotty hitches to ol' No. 23

BLYTHE, Calif.—He's 70 and she's 17. But, no matter, she'll just be ol' No. 23 for Glenn "Scotty" Wolfe, who says he has the utmost respect for marriage.

That's why he's done it 22 times before and will tie the knot for the 23rd time with Eva Mejias, who will appear at a court hearing later this month on a request that she be declared an adult and permitted to marry.

"This is as close to heaven as I can get," Wolfe said Wednesday.

Wolfe says he first experienced wedded bliss in 1927. His longest marriage lasted five years and his shortest ended after 30 days.

Nixon, U.S. reach papers agreement

WASHINGTON—Richard Nixon and the federal government have reached an agreement, after a year of negotiation, that may hasten the day when the public can read his papers and hear his tapes.

The two sides will still fight in court over Nixon's tapes and diaries and the settlement hinges on approval by a judge and action by Congress.

Nixon and the government have been bickering over the regulations that will govern public access to the huge cache of papers and tapes he left behind when he resigned as president in 1974.

Under the settlement, the administrator of General Services will submit a modified set of regulations to Congress refining definitions of which materials are personal and which are of historical significance.

Bee Gees catch Grammy fever

HOLLYWOOD—The Grammys' 21st birthday celebration turned into a disco fever party Thursday night as the Bees Gees and other top disco singers won major awards.

Billy Joel struck the major non-disco note of the evening, winning record of the year and song of the year honors with his hit, "Just The Way You Are."

The Bees Gees, a veteran rock group, took four awards—including album of the year, producer of the year, pop vocal performance, and best arrangement for voices—for their work on the sound track of the hit disco movie, "Saturday Night Fever."

The sound track is one of the biggest selling albums of all time.

Barry Manilow was named the top pop male vocalist for "Copacabana," his disco-flavored ballad about a fading showgirl. The top female vocalist was soft-voiced Anne Murray for "You Needed Me."

Donna Summer, widely acclaimed as the queen of disco, was voted the top female rhythm and blues performer for her recording of "Last Dance."

The best new artist of the year award went to a dark-horse candidate, A Taste of Honey, the group whose disco song, "Boogie Oogie Oogie" was a big hit.

In country music, veterans Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings were chosen for best vocal performance by a group for "Mamas, Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to Be Cowboys."

Weather

Good morning. Guess what, you've actually got a reason to celebrate tonight—it's K-State's 116th birthday. The weather won't be too wonderful for this great occasion, but here goes: today will be increasingly cloudy and cold with a high of about 10 degrees. There will be a chance of snow today and Saturday. Highs Saturday should reach 20 degrees.

No future for family farmers?

The second day of hearings by the House Agriculture Committee on the farmer's protests produced an unsettling question for concerned family farmers.

The question? Whether concerned urban consumers, who make up 97 percent of the population, want their food produced by family farmers.

They should. The take-over of the American farming system by large corporations can only produce the inefficiency, high prices and corruption exemplified by the leading corporations.

But in this country where mass production and the resulting mass employment is the standard and self-employment and ownership the deviation, can the farmer stand immune?

Has the time come in this country's development to incorporate the farming system?

It is a line of questioning most consumers haven't pursued. After all, their concern is with the price of food not its origins.

They have no sympathy for the farmer now because they see him as a group imposing on Washington and wasting precious fuel with its much-publicized tractorcade. They have no patience to listen to the lonely cry of the individual farmer.

—The cry of the fifth generation farmer who cannot advise his sixth generation son to continue in the business of the land.

—The cry of the sole farmer producing food for as many as 50 people who don't care if his liquidation is imminent and his take over inevitable.

It is a cry of fear for a future of mass production applied to farming in which the family farmer has no part.

There must be an answering cry. This 97 percent must shout its support of the family farmer even as it consumes the product of his labor.

America, the land of plenty—plenty of everything but loyalty to the men who have fed it through countless generations. The support of this 97 percent could determine the future of family farms, and could be the farmers' only hope for a future.

A two-sided view of the crosswalk

Since the last accident at the Mid-Campus Drive crosswalk, I've been observing my own driving habits. I seem to do a Jekyl-and-Hyde act of my own.

If most people are as selfish and careless when they drive as I am, it's no wonder there have been so many bodies scattered on Anderson Avenue over the years.

The road is mine, I tell them, so get the hell out of my way. The rest of dialogue is not as mild but usually goes something like this: (Some expletives deleted.)

Don't walk out in that crosswalk, I don't have time to stop for you. If you make me stop, I'll be driving around all day trying to find a parking place in the Union parking lot.

Who are you to make Me stop anyway? You're just a lowly pedestrian. You're no match for my Ford Tank.

It might hurt if I ran over you and I wouldn't be one bit sorry. It would be your own fault for walking in front of me in the first place.

GO AHEAD, just try it, we'll see who stops first. We'll see where your guts are, or were.

Why don't you go down to the corner and make the traffic stop there, but for god's sake,(why God's sake?), don't make me stop.

And you at the crosswalk with the stoplight, don't you dare push that button. I'll be damned if I'm going to wait five minutes (actually 30 seconds) so one person can cross the street without fearing for life.

After you get across, the light stays red for what seems like eternity while nobody else crosses the street.

Here I am, a loyal American taxpayer who's trying to conserve energy, and you make me sit here and burn away gallons of precious gasoline.

But you don't care, you don't have to fill my gas tank. It's no worry of yours, is it?

Damn pedestrians just don't have any respect for us drivers.

BUT WHEN I'm at the crosswalk hoping to escape with my life, the dialogue reverses.

Maybe after this car, nope, there's another one behind it. Damn, now there's a car coming from the other direction.

Thanks for not stopping fruitcake ears, that old clunker you're in should have found a rest home in the local junk yard anyway. It's no safer than your driving.

And take that, as I manage to land a snowball on his rear window.

Come on back for more if you can get that heap turned around.

Okay, I'm just going to walk out in the crosswalk and make the cars wait for me. After all, I have the right of way.

Here I go, I'll just put one foot in the crosswalk then they're legally bound to stop for me.

Screech, honk, scream—I don't think I'll try that again, it could be dangerous. (That's what the last accident victim said.)

OH COME ON, one of you frigging (did I fool you?) cars stop like you're supposed to and let me cross the street. It's cold out here, I could freeze my eyelids shut.

Uh oh, I see an opening. I'll just make a quick dash for it.

A few seconds later, after I've slipped twice, falling on my face but regaining my composure in the interest of self-preservation—thank God, I finally made it.

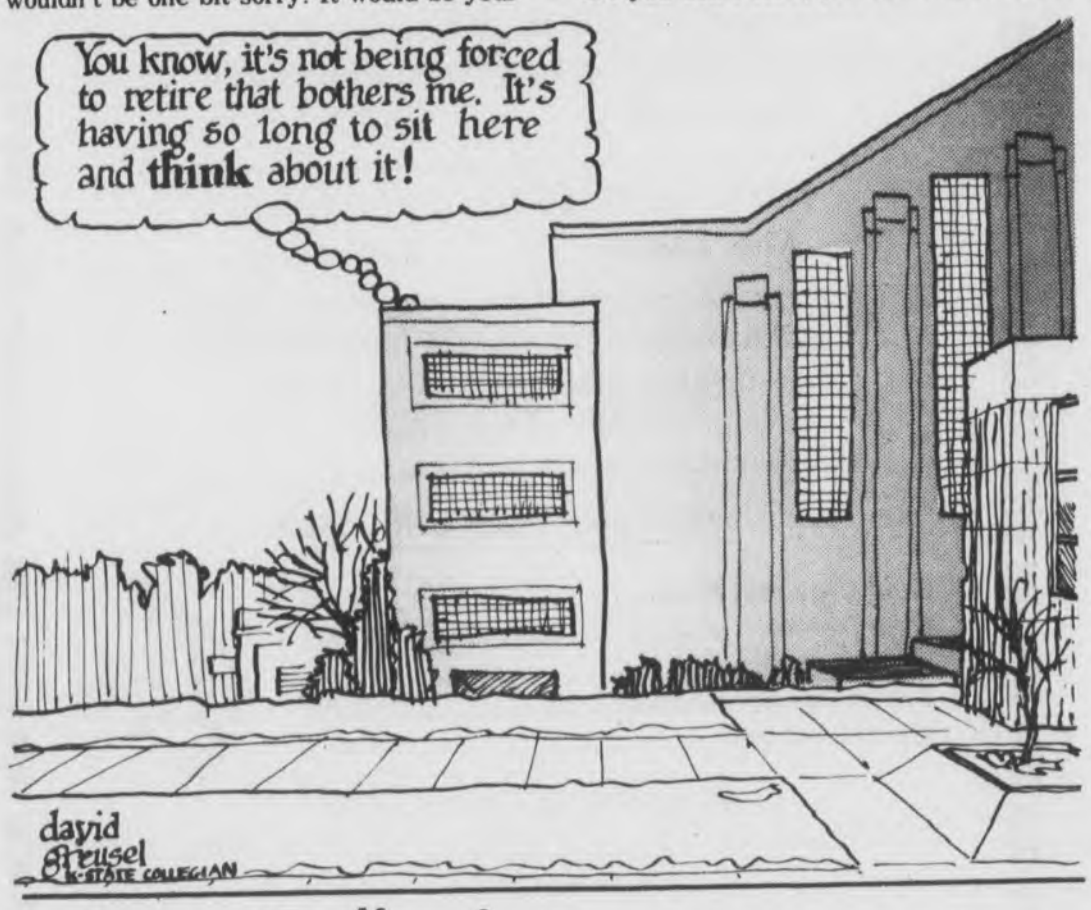
Why don't you damn drivers yield like you're supposed to, as I unleash another snowball.

Well, one of these days they'll run over someone and then they'll wish they'd been more careful, maybe.

All the selfishness and reckless abandon would leave them and they'd give anything to have that moment of time to play over again. They'd say they would have been more careful if they'd known somebody was going to get hurt.

BUT, OF COURSE, it's too late then.

But they don't really care. Damn drivers, they just have no respect for humanity.



I must admit there are times as a pedestrian when I get cocky walking through the crosswalk and walk slightly slower than I should, just to make the drivers mad—in revenge for the times they didn't stop for me.

I usually look at the drivers like, hey buddy, you'll just have to wait for me this time.

So whatever role I'm in, I only look out for myself. My self interest is most important.

But whatever happened good, old-fashioned courtesy? Maybe I should think about the other person for a change.

Maybe I should do something nice for pedestrians—let them live through the crosswalk.

One way to save energy

Editor,

In the early '30s, the average office temperature was about 55 degrees. Today offices and classrooms average—???

Let's turn down the thermostats before our bodies lose their ability to adjust to temperature extremes.

Who knows what benefits might accrue from lower temperatures: perhaps the instructors would develop liveliness by moving around to keep warm; perhaps the students would take notes instead of naps; perhaps we could have a steam bath someplace other than the gym; perhaps summer clothes could be saved for the summer; perhaps we could save some fuel.

Capital punishment, way to protect

Editor,

Ms. Rhein, your apparent naivete in regard to your article, "Murder not the answer," is, to say the least, extraordinarily disregardful of the murdered victims.

You stated that capital punishment wasn't the answer. Neither is murdering an innocent bystander.

Since it has been proven that the death penalty doesn't deter people from killing people the first time, it'll sure do the trick the second time, won't it?

Using the taxpayers' money to rehabilitate a convicted murderer parallels a slap on the hand. For instance, "We know you killed a grocery store owner for $15 in the cash register, so here is the chance to start all over again, OK?"

A few years back an elderly widow was mugged and killed in New York City for $1 and change. Is that the price you place on her life?

I hardly think that rehabilitation is the answer. Lessening the chances of the same murderer from ever committing another killing when innocent lives are at stake is what is, should and must be, paramount. Capital punishment in this respect is not an "atrocity," it's just ridding society of a great, unforgiveable and despicable deviance.

The state has the right, hell, the obligation to protect the lives of all its citizens. Those who go outside socially accepted values such as committing murder are no longer with or a part of the state, but, against it. The state therefore, has the obligation to protect the citizens who have stayed within legal bounds.

Stricter parole boards and mandatory sentences are not acceptable solutions because of the possibility that a convicted murderer may very well kill again if given the opportunity for future freedom.

Your article, Ms. Rhein, is indicative of your opinion, which I respect. However, it is not a very realistic solution to murder. Murder is an atrocity and capital punishment in the case of a convicted murderer is not "ironic" or "hypocritical," it's making for a safer society. Perhaps you wouldn't mind walking in some city or town and getting mugged and killed for a few dollars, which has happened to quite a few, but I sure as hell would.

Food prices low

Editor,

Well, what about food prices? They're too high? Too high compared to what? Certainly not compared to to income, since the average American worker spends only about 18 to 22 cents out of every dollar they make for food. Compare this with the 30 to 40 cents most other countries spend (some even send as much as 70 to 80 cents of every dollar) just for food.

And certainly food isn't too high as compared to the farmer's income. I've always wondered why it is that I never hear people complain about the price of a can of beer, or the cost of their new color television set. But let a pound of meat or a gallon of milk go up a few cents in a year, and they scream bloody murder.

Play a moving, personal experience

By CAROL HOLSTEAD
Arts and Entertainment Editor

"I found God in myself and I loved her" was the final revelation for the women in "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow Is Enuf."

In the Ebony Theatre Company's excellent adaptation of "For Colored Girls..." seven women struggle to find happiness, finally discovering the greatest happiness comes from self-respect.

Collegian Review

The play, written by Ntazake Shange, is not a traditional type of production with a definable plot and dialogue, but a collection of choreopoems (poems to be read aloud) tied together with music and choreography.

The women in the play are not identified by name, but by the color they wear. Each, however, is not without character. They all have personal lifestyles, needs and desires, but in the beginning none of them have self-respect.

All of the women in "For Colored Girls..." were born poor blacks. Many of them later turned to prostitution as a means of self-support and to help them find the love they so badly needed. Some had children, some had abortions.

Each of the women struggle against the control men often exert over them, and the way women are put down in society. The effect is powerful and moving as each woman tells of her struggle to overcome insecurity and insubordination, because of being black, but mostly because of being a woman.

There are some exceptional performances in the play. The Lady in Blue is played beautifully by Velina Houston, senior in journalism. One scene, in which she describes a past abortion, is especially good. The description she uses and her emotional intensity is chilling.

Another effective and believable character was the Lady in Red, played by Linda Roberts, sophomore in speech. One of the highlights of the show is a scene when she tells how her children were dropped from the window of her fifth floor apartment by their father, because she refused to marry him. The realism of the description and Roberts concentration and intensity painted a vivid image of the incident which is unforgettable.

A problem with the production is some of the monologues are hard to understand. Part of this is due to the way the Purple Masque Theatre is made. The audience is seated on three sides of the stage, and when an actress has her back to one side of the audience, some of the words get lost. If more projection and better diction were used by some of the actresses, the problem would be solved.

"For Colored Girls..." is a very personal play. The audience is seated only about 10 feet from the stage. Some of the characters actually perform in the isles and all of them use eye-to-eye contact with the audience. This might make a person feel uncomfortable at first, but it adds to the emotional effect.

Fisk choir to perform

By KATHY BINFORD
Collegian Reporter

The Fisk Jubilee Singers will present a concert of negro spirituals and folk songs at 8 p.m., Sunday in McCain Auditorium.

The Singers were formed in 1871. The group has travelled world-wide and given concerts all over the United States and Canada.

Five years after its opening, Fisk University was financially unstable, so the treasurer of the school, Reverend George White formed a musical touring group of nine students with outstanding voices to raise funds for the school.

With borrowed money Mr. White set out with four men and five women.

Concert pay was barely enough to take the singers from one town to another. Once in Cincinnati they gave a concert which netted them about $50. The great Chicago Fire broke out that night, so the singers donated the money to the Chicago Relief Fund and traveled on.

After reaching Columbus, Ohio, Mr. White decided to name them the "Jubilee Singers," from the Biblical reference to the year of Jubilee.

This first tour, lasting three months, literally saved the University and established the fame of the Jubilee Singers.

The Singers are directed by Matthew Kennedy, and members of the group come from all over the country.

The concert is being performed in conjunction with Black Awareness Week.

Marx Brothers' films moviegoers best bet

By LUKE BROWN
Collegian reviewer

The best movie bet this weekend is in K-State's Forum Hall, when a double feature of Marx Brothers movies is presented.

"A Day at the Races" and "A Night at the Opera" will be the featured movies. Both should be entertaining viewing, although "Races" was the only one available for preview.

"Races," one of the Marx Brothers later films, made in the mid-1940s, is still very good for contemporary audiences. The humor of Groucho, Harpo and Chico is as funny and relevant (irrelevant) as it was when the movie was made. It is one of the great comedy classics.

The story deals with a veterinarian, Dr. Hugo Hackenbush, played by Groucho, who poses as a medical doctor to swindle Mrs. Upjohn, played by Margaret Dumont, out of some money. With the Upjohn money, he hopes to get a female friend's sanitarium out of debt before the bank takes over and turns it into a casino.

MOST OF the action in the film takes placed in the sanitarium, with some hilarious scenes staged. The funniest include Groucho fooling the bank over the telephone and the brothers attempting to examine Mrs. Upjohn.

Chico plays Tony, an employee at the sanitarium, and Harpo portrays a horse jockey.

The film moves at a madcap pace, with the brothers exchanging the hilarious one-liners they are famous for.

THE BLACK and white film is in exceptional shape considering its age. The sound is adequate. As with other Marx Brothers films, the dialogue is a bit hard to follow sometimes, which stems from the rapid pace.

The film's pace drags almost to a halt near the middle as the brothers perform their musical numbers. Harpo plays his harp and Chico plays his piano, and a very elaborate musical number, complete with orchestra and ballet dancers, is performed. The musical numbers add almost nothing to the film, actually subtracting more than they add.

"A Night at the Opera," the mate in the double feature presentation, is one of the brothers' funniest movies, according to Marx Brothers hyper-enthusiast Scott Farina, graduate in journalism and mass communications.

"It's like controlled chaos, from beginning to end."

"Opera" contains the stateroom scene' according to Farina "the most famous Marx Brothers scene, second only to the speakeasy scene in 'Horsefeathers.'"

Newspapers reflect black lifestyles; offer audience different perspective

By BETSY DONNELLY
Collegian Reporter

More than 3,000 newspapers owned and edited by blacks have appeared since 1827, according to Robert Bontrager, associate professor of journalism and mass communications.

Mainstream newspapers in the United States often neglect news of the black culture and lifestyle. To fill the gap in coverage, more than 170 black-owned newspapers are published for 3.5 million readers.

Because many students are unaware of the black press, some of the more prominent black publications are on display in the K-State Union as part of Black Awareness Week, said Robert Harper, senior in physical education and member of the Black Student Union.

"Culturally, the black press is an important influence because it represents the race from a black viewpoint," Harper said. "There are many sides to the black culture that interest both black and white people."

Black newspapers don't follow journalism school rules of reporting, according to Cecile Wilson Terry, senior in accounting and former KU journalism major.

"The reporting is not the same type of writing as in standard journalism practice," she said. "Black newspapers don't necessarily follow the 'who, what, when, where and why' style in their reporting. This is probably because they are reaching for a different audience."

"The black press has been one of the important business endeavors of the black community," Bontrager said. "At first it was totally cause-oriented. Now, black newspapers reflect the black lifestyle. As long as there are racial inequalities, we need it."

Bontrager wrote his doctoral dissertation on the black press and has taught a class on the subject. Since the early 1970s, interest in the black press as an important aspect of journalism has decreased greatly and the class is no longer offered, he said.

"The need for the black press is fading," said David Hacker, visiting professor of journalism. "Black people are no different from white. I think the black press tends to set them apart from the rest.

Women celebrate victories the Susan B. Anthony way

In 1867 Susan B. Anthony, suffrage feminist, began her first campaign for the referendum on women's voting in Kansas.

Thursday Anthony's work was honored as the Women's Resource Center, Women's Studies Program and Women's Center of Manhattan sponsored the first celebration of her birthday.

"This celebration is to let people know what's going on for women in Manhattan," said Maxine Lentz, director of the Women's Resource Center.

The celebration consisted of displays in the Union representing such community and campus groups as the League of Women Voters, Sex Desegragation, Women's Studies Program, Pregnancy Counseling and La Femme.

"I think a celebration is appropriate because we should take stock of what's happening with women," said Sandy Coyner, director of Women's Studies Program.

All of these services and organizations deal with women. There is an increasing opportunity for women in Manhattan and the women's organizations are working to meet the special needs of women, Coyner said.

"This celebration is also to make people aware of the fact that women's roles are changing," she said.

Susan B. Anthony will be the first woman on the face of a coin. In the past the Statue of Liberty and other ficticious females have appeared on coins, but never has the picture of an actual female appeared on one, Coyner said.

Anthony's picture will be placed on the new silver dollars which will begin circulation in July. The coin is an unusual one in that it is not circular, but 11-sided.

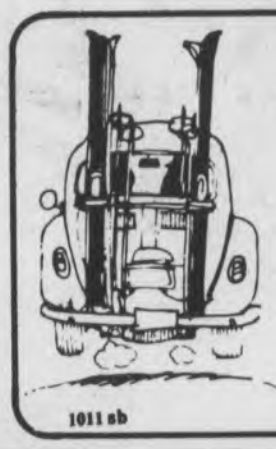
THERE'S A YUM YUM DOWN AT SWANNIE'S



(to the tune of YELLOW ROSE OF TEXAS)

There's a Yum Yum down at Swannie's
that I'm a gonna eat.
Nobody's ever ate so much,
not half as much as me.
I cried the night I left 'em,
goin' home for Christmas Break,
'Cause those Yum Yums down at Swannie's
are the best I ever ate.

Oh those Yum Yums down at Swannie's,
they're a sight to see,
So big and hot and tasty,
they're always sure to please.
I ate about a million,
and rolled right out the door.
I rolled right back the next night,
and ate a million more.

Pocket -sized sports

Yep, this is it. This is the entire sports section for today.

Due to the paper shortage, today's Collegian is only 12 pages, and on top of that, after preparing about 40 inches of fascinating sports copy Thursday, I found out that the classified ad section exploded to its present length.

Therefore, this is it. Talk about sports shorts.

You know how you've had trouble before, struggling with an entire fascinating sports section of several pages? Well, your troubles are over. The entire sports section will fit in your shirt pocket today.

1) K-STATE plays KU in basketball at 1:40 Saturday in Lawrence. The 'Cats are in second place in the conference, and if they can win on regional TV Saturday, and then beat Missouri next Wednesday and Oklahoma next Saturday, they will at least tie with league-leading Oklahoma for the championship.

K-State has been playing very good defense and rebounding well, according to Coach Jack Hartman, but "nobody has played as well as Kansas has lately," Hartman said before KU's loss to Iowa State Wednesday.

KU is third in the Big 8 with a 6-5 record.

2) THE WOMEN'S track team travels to Lincoln, Neb. for the Big 8 Championships Saturday and Sunday. Coach Barry Anderson expects a very tough meet, and called it one of the "best in the Midwest," and possibly one of the better women's meets in the nation. Just about all eight teams are tough, although Iowa State has been dominating Big 8 track in recent years.

3) DURING halftime of the women's basketball game Tuesday night, four students, Jane Handlos, Don Welborn, Corvin Alstot and Charlie Studyvin whipped Sports Info Director Glen Stone, Associate Athletic Director Conrad Colbert, volleyball and softball Coach Mary Phyl Dwight and Assistant Athletic Director Craig Helwig in a free throw shooting contest. The winners will receive student season football tickets for next year, and the contest will be held for other students, chosen from the crowd, at the two remaining women's games Feb. 19 and 23.

4) TICKETS for the men's Big 8 Track and Field Championships in Oklahoma City Feb. 23 and 24 are available now in the Athletic Ticket Office in Ahearn.

Thomason kidnapping

Jury finds May guilty

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

Darwin May, the third defendant charged in the Oct. 4 kidnapping of 5-year-old Gary Thomason, was found guilty Friday in Riley County District Court.

The six-man, six-woman jury returned its verdict on the 26-year-old Junction City man after an hour and 15 minutes of deliberation.

May was charged in the kidnapping Oct. 11 with Stephan Werle, 21, of Junction City and Marlon Holum, 21, a Fort Riley deserter. Werle and Holum changed their pleas to guilty earlier and were sentenced to nine years to life in prison.

Riley County District Court Judge Jerry Mershon said a pre-sentencing investigation probably would be conducted after the 10-day period for filing appeals motions. Mershon also said May would be sentenced only after the motions were disposed of.

MAY TOOK the stand Friday as one of three defense witnesses and contradicted many of the state's 19 witnesses in his version of the events and of his involvement in the crime.

Werle and Holum, who testified for the prosecution Friday, said May was a part of the planning of the kidnapping more than a week before Thomason was nabbed. The two and others said while he refused to participate in the actual kidnapping, May said he would pick up the money, suggesting the pickup place, the Hideaway Lounge, Junction City, and the amount of the ransom, $30,000.

May said he heard talk of kidnapping but he didn't pay any attenton to Holum because he often planned drug deals and bank robberies.

"He was always coming up with hare-brained schemes to get rich," May said.

However, May said he knew nothing of the Thomason kidnapping until the early hours of Oct. 5. He said a friend, a bartender at the Hideaway, told him he and another man were arrested for attempting to make off with $30,000 they discovered in the bar's men's room during the evening of Oct. 4.

THE MONEY was left by Michael Thomason, Gary's father, as ransom for the safe return of the boy. After questioning, the two men were released.

May said he was in the Hideaway Oct. 4 but said he was not aware of the ransom pickup scheme.

According to testimony Thursday by Robert Cogar, 19, Fort Riley, and Michael Campbell, 17, Attleboro, Mass., May knew about the ransom because he told them to alert Werle and Holum of police presence in the bar and to "drop the kid off."

Soviets warn China to back off while vowing to support Vietnam

MOSCOW (AP)—Warning China to "stop before it is too late," the Soviet Union pledged Sunday to honor a recent treaty with Vietnam calling for consultations and mutual support after an attack.

Immediately after the statement was made public, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko received Vietnamese Ambassador Nguyen Huu Khieu, apparently to discuss how far the Kremlin would go to help its ally after Saturday's invasion by China.

The treaty is not a military alliance and makes no specific provisions for sending troops. The statement said Vietnam "is capable of standing up for itself," indicating that a Soviet troop commitment was unlikely, at least for the moment.

One Western analyst here said Soviet "range of options is across the board" under the treaty. Another said he saw it as "raising the level of warning" to China's relatively new leadership.

IN WASHINGTON, a White House spokesman said there is no indication that "a major escalation and confrontation that would threaten our immediate interests is likely."

The Soviet statement said: "All responsibility for the consequences of continuing the aggression by Peking against the Socialist Republic of Vietnam will be borne by the present Chinese leadership."

Hundreds of demonstrators gathered outside the Chinese Embassy in Moscow in three protests Saturday night and Sunday denouncing the invasion.

Sunday's statement said Moscow would "honor its obligations" in a treaty of friendship and cooperation with Hanoi signed here Nov. 3.

ARTICLE SIX of the treaty says in part: "In case either party is attacked or threatened with attack, the two parties...shall immediately consult each other with a view to eliminating that threat and shall take appropriate and effective measures to safeguard peace and the security of the two countries."

The treaty promises Hanoi the firm backing of Moscow and was intended to shore up Vietnam's defenses against China and Cambodia.

It appeared to be a message to the West that arms sold to Peking would be used against its neighbors.

China contends its attack was in self-defense against Vietnamese border violations.

Claiming the invasion violates United Nations principles and international law, the Soviet Union "resolutely demands an end to the aggression and immediate withdrawal of the Chinese troops from the territory of the Socialist Republic of Vietnam. Hands off Socialist Vietnam!," the anouncement ended.

Wanted: K-State's intense studiers; for information, call Edwards Hall

By ELLEN STERNER
Collegian Reporter

Tired of noisy neighbors who make studying difficult? Don't dismay, Edwards Hall will soon be a peaceful refuge.

Beginning next fall, Edwards will be a "residence hall of intense studying."

"Edwards Hall is going to fulfill the need of students whose majors require intense studying," Paula Cooney, Edwards' director, said.

The housing system is geared for freshmen and sophomores just entering the system, Cooney said.

The system needs to be expanded for older students in curriculums that demand intensive studying, such as veterinary medicine, engineering and architecture, she said.

Residence halls have tried unsuccessfully to adapt programs for students in areas of intense study, Thomas Frith, director of Housing, said.

"Each dorm has tried to section off wings for quiet hours, but the compactness of the residence halls does not allow these sections to remain silent," Frith said.

"The answer to this problem is the future plan for Edwards Hall," he said.

THE DECISION to change priorities in the hall may not be please current residents, Frith said.

"We certainly don't want to inconvenience the residents living in Edwards now," he said. "I'm sure there is a sense of loyalty which might cause a resistance to change."

Although hall priorities will change, the cost will be the same as the other residence halls. Parking will be provided at Edwards and at Derby and Kramer food complexes where Edwards residents eat, Frith said.

The supervision of the hall will come from four resident assistants, the hall director and a hall governing board, Cooney said.

The plan is similar to West, Haymaker or Ford, but there will be no Thursday functions for Edwards.

"Don't think we are forming a convent. We plan to provide a social life," Cooney said. "It will depend on the people; they might want more of a private social life."

"We've always prided ourselves at K-State for having a variety and this is another way to fill the needs of more people," he said.

Student drowns in bathtub

A 21-year-old senior in architecture drowned Friday at the Chi Omega sorority house at 1516 McCain Lane, apparently having suffered an epileptic seizure while bathing.

The body of Joy Balderson was found in a bathtub at about 5 p.m. Friday, authorities said. She was last seen alive at about 3:30 p.m.

After examination by a local doctor, the body was taken to the Cowan-Edwards-Yorgenson funeral home. Balderson had been under a doctor's care for her epilepsy for about six months.

Joy was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James Balderson of Overland Park. She worked as a reporter and secretary for the Panhellenic Council, and was a member of the student chapter of the American Institute of Architects and president of Stardusters, little sister organization of the Kappa Sigma fraternity.

Memorial services will be at 2 p.m. Tuesday at All Faiths Chapel.

Local banks up charges

By BECKY VINING
Collegian Reporter

Banking in Manhattan may be more convenient than transacting with a hometown bank, but because of recent service charge increases at local banks, it also may be more expensive.

Within the last five months all four Manhattan banks have increased their service charges on checking accounts, while some banks across the state still provide students with free checking.

"It (increasing service charges) has been a national trend over the last six months," Richard Lashbrook, president of First National Bank, said. "Charges have been increased according to the price of doing the service."

John Lippman, junior in pre-veterinary medicine who banks with First National, is upset with the charge increases.

"My checking service charges will go up from $12 to $40 a year," Lippman said. "Any time they raise charges 200 percent, that's ridiculous."

Service charges increased five cents per check on the average at Manhattan banks. At First National and Union National Bank and Trust Company, the per-check charge was raised from three cents cents to eight cents.

In November, Kansas State Bank charged 10 cents per check and now charges 15 cents. Citizens State Bank and Trust Company charges seven cents for every check or deposit transaction, an increase of four cents since December.

THE STATEMENT charges and earnings credits in these plans vary at each bank. Earnings credits are subtracted from check service charges in accordance with the account's balance. For example, if a bank has an earnings credit of 48 cents per $100 and charges eight cents per check, a customer with $200 in his account may write 12 checks with no service charge.

The more balance you keep, the more checks you can write with no charge," Lashbrook said. "The net result is still a service charge-free account if there are fewer checks and a larger balance."

Some banks offer a plan benefitting students who keep less balance in their accounts and write fewer checks. These plans charge the customer for a statement every three months and about 15 cents per check but offer no earnings credit.

Most of seven banks surveyed in cities approximately the same size as Manhattan also charge students for checking accounts.

"Only senior citizens on fixed incomes and Social Security don't have service charges," said Tom Martin, president of Fidelity State Bank and Trust Company, Dodge City. "Two years ago nobody was charged, but with the increased cost of processing small accounts, service charges now have to be made."

Currently, students are not charged for checking at First National Bank and Trust Company in Salina, but probably will be within the next month, said Harold Eagleton, senior vice president.

Several banks in smaller Kansas towns such as Kanopolis, Ness City, Richmond and Osage City don't charge college students for checking accounts.

"We have never charged students," said Bill Herrington, president of Kanopolis State Bank. "We like to give them a helping hand. It's a courtesy, not to promote business."

Iran cuts diplomatic ties with Israel

TEHRAN, Iran—Iran's new Islamic governnment announced Sunday it had expelled Israeli officials after eliminating all relations with the Jewish state.

The announcement by Tehran Radio came as Palestine Liberation Organization chief Yasser Arafat met with Iranian leaders.

He conferred with Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the Moslem leader of Iran's anti-shah forces, and said the Iranian revolution had turned the strategic balance in the Middle East "upside down."

Tehran Radio, reporting on a statement from the Foreign Ministry, said support for the Palestinian people was the main principle of the provisional government's foreign policy. Israel once received most of its oil from Iran.

The broadcast said 22 Israeli trade and immigration officials and representatives of El Al Airline along with other Israeli technicians were expelled from Iran Sunday. All Iranian government employees in Israel were ordered to return home, the station said.

Will Kremlin 'madmen' spark WWIII?

LONDON—Exiled Soviet author Alexander Solzhenitsyn, in a Sunday broadcast, predicted "madmen" in the Kremlin will spark a third world war and that China will be the victor.

Solzhenitsyn, who won the 1970 Nobel Prize for literature and was exiled from the Soviet Union in 1974, spoke in an interview broadcast by the British Broadcasting Corp.'s Russian Service. It was recorded two weeks before China invaded Vietnam on Saturday.

The 60-year-old author said the world's undoing would result from a combination of Soviet "aggression" and Western malaise, a recurrent theme in his interviews, speeches and writing since he came to the West. He now lives in Vermont.

"We are clearly moving toward a world war, yet Western statesmen deceive themselves that we are moving toward detente," Solzhenitsyn said. "They surrender several countries a year to communism, and yet they do not tremble.... How long will the supply of countries last?"

Strike silences Mardi Gras festivities

NEW ORLEANS—A weary federal mediator got negotiations back on the track Sunday in a police strike that has threatened to ruin the city's Carnival and Mardi Gras festivals.

"Both the police union and the city have agreed to resume negotiations at three o'clock Monday," said mediator Ansel Garrett, who spent Sunday shuttling between city and police union represeentatives.

The break came after the president of the police union dared Mayor Ernest Morial to fire strikers, saying such action would immediately send garbage collectors and firemen into a sympathy walkout.

The strike has already forced the mayor to cancel several Mardi Gras carnival parades, and the city was glum and chill Sunday-usually a day for celebration during the festival.

Violators' forget 'how to escape'

NEW YORK—Two young men arrested for firearms violations were carrying written instructions for an appliance store heist that told them what to do and how to do it, police said.

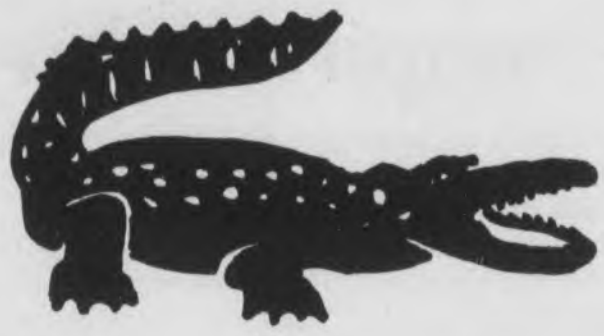
The instructions included a list of brand name goods and the amount buyers were willing to pay, police said.

The hand-written notes said in part: "Al wants a Sanyo Deluxe for $120. Robin T. wants a Nikon camera for $100. Rennie wants a JVC cassette recorder for $100."

The notes were found when officer Roy Zinkiewicz arrested Vernon Dixon, 19, and Richard Reid, 18, Friday night, police said.

The officer said he stopped them when he saw the outline of a gun in one of the suspect's pockets. A search turned up a .38-caliber revolver and a bayonet, he said.

Both men were charged with criminal possesion of a weapon, authorities said. No charges were filed in connection with the note.



The instructions said: "We must hit a store or a shop that has no hidden cameras. We must do it abruptly. First go into the place, wire up the employees or proprietor, take the money and then the merchandise."

A note labeled "supplies" listed stocking cap, ski cap, gun, knife, red coil wire, construction boots, scissors to cut the wires for the victims.

Weather

Good morning K-State. Warmer weather is in today's forecast. Really, no kidding. So take advantage of this nice weather and chop down a cherry tree—in George's honor, of course. Highs should reach the upper 30s today, but temperatures will dip into the 20s tonight. Highs Tuesday will be in the tropical low to mid 40s.

U. S.—umpire in Vietnam

With the memory of the smiles and charm that marked Teng's U.S. visit fresh in the minds of many Americans, mainland China chose to attack Soviet-backed Vietnam.

Teng's entire visit centered around courting the U.S. as an ally against the Soviet Union. Although no anti-U.S.S.R. statements were voiced publically by U.S. officials, there is no doubt that the U.S.-China ties made the Soviet Union uneasy.

Before Teng's visit, Leonid Brezhnev warned the U.S. of being used by the Chinese, even when it seemed that peace was their objective.

He might be right.

Now that the U.S. has finally recognized the "People's Republic," China obviously believes it is secure enough to attack a Soviet satellite.

In this confrontation, the U.S. is being pulled into the center of the ring, being used as a neutralizer by both the Soviets and the Chinese.

If China had attacked Vietnam before establishing firm ties with the U.S., the U.S. would still have had a role to play, but it wouldn't have been thrown in the ring to play umpire.

As it is, the U.S. will be forced to balance ties with the Chinese and the Soviets. The confrontation could be used as a test of friendship promises by the Chinese, while the threat of damaging further SALT talks with the Soviets remains.

So, the timing of this "counterattack to defend the country's borders" was carefully planned and might result in a deterioration of U.S.-U.S.S.R. ties.

Whether Carter wants it or not, this confrontation might force the U.S. a step closer to one camp, an idea that probably had something to do with the attack.

A 50-50 chance of weather

"An extraordinary example of meteorological journalism"—The New York Times.

"Weather news has never been presented in such a relevant, understandable manner"—Newsweek.

"Boffo, socko, hot damn"—Variety.

"Why the hell won't he write the weather news like a normal reporter?!"—Bill Brown, director of K-State Student Publications Inc.

Oh sure, I've received a lot of national acclaim for writing the Collegian's daily weather report, but rest assured I'm still the same ol' lovable guy from Wamego.

In case you're one of the obscure Collegian readers who haven't noticed, there's been a change in the "weather" this semester.

CLEVERLY disguised under the heading "Weather," K-Staters have been treated to a delightfully witty and creative weather report each day. (Just for the record, this last weather review was taken from Manhattan Mercury, but unlike those national publications mentioned previously, the Merc didn't want to put its reputation on the line.

Although I've been under "high pressure" to be creative, not all of the resulting praise and awards belong only to me. Editor Julie Doll deserves some of the credit because she assigned me to the weather beat this semester.

I'll never forget that snowy day in January when Doll gazed at me with her partly cloudy eyes and said, "Hey, I don't care what you do, just leave me alone!"

Then, with Doll's blessing, I set out to learn all I could about meteorological journalism. Oh sure, I was rushed to learn all that stuff in my 10:20 to 10:30 Monday morning break—but I perservered.

Upon mastery of the weather lingo, I sought to establish Collegian weather bureaus in strategic points around the city.

THE CAMPUS center—where we keep all the expensive weather gauges—is located in the Kedzie Hall loading dock. Two off-campus sites were selected because of their incredible weather-monitoring capabilities—Mel's Tavern and McDougal's Restaurant. (Actually their facilities aren't that great, we just like to go there.)

Each weather station is equipped with the finest meteorological instruments the Collegian could afford. The Kedzie location is the ultimate weather bureau, as it features an indoor-outdoor thermometer.

Actually, the Kedzie thermometer is the only piece of equipment we own. Despite our limited supply of "accepted" weather tools, each Collegian bureau is equipped with a special barometer that even the "established" weather stations don't have.

The barometers were installed outside the picture windows of Mel's and McDougal's and above the Kedzie dock. Believe me, by recording the barometers' readings, we can report the weather with unparalled accuracy.

EACH GUAGE consists of a seven-inch pieces of Pentagon-approved string. Through careful observation we can deduce such brilliant forecasts as:

When the string is dry—Fair.
When the string is swinging—Windy.
When the string is wet—Rainy.
When the string is frozen—Cold.

So simple, yet so complex. I just can't understand why none of our weather competitors haven't caught on to the Collegian's technique.

And speaking of techniques, I'm afraid that this new-found skill is making our newsroom staff a little uneasy. Why, just the other day, I stumbled into Kedzie with the news flash that it was really cold.

My fellow staffers were not impressed. Judging by the gloomy, stormy newsroom atmosphere I figured they didn't care about the weather reporter. However, upon closer examination—but staring into their smoggy eyes—it was obvious: they were jealous.

Despite some internal conflicts, my stint as weather editor has just begun, and I pledge to forge new fronts in the field of weather forecasting.

Why, I'm preparing for a meeting with Doll this afternoon to discuss the installation of an Action Weather Line. You see, this weather line will be unique because you won't call the Collegian for weather data—we'll call you. That way I don't have to drive all over Manhattan's frozen tundra reading weather gauges.

How do I do it?

Well, deadlines are fast approaching, so I must leave to compute this month's forecasts. As a parting thought, I'll leave you with the motto of the Roseanne Roseannadanna School of Weather Forecasting:

If it doesn't rain, it's gonna snow;
If it doesn't snow, it's gonna sleet;
If it doesn't sleet, it's gonna be clear;
If it ain't clear, you got a problem;

...but there's a 50 percent chance that there'll be a 50 percent chance of weather again tomorrow.

Letters

Watergate no. 2—at K-State

Editor,

I would just like to congratulate the Collegian for its coverage of the elections—another fine example of its talents that seem this time to be on a scandal that could equal and even surpass Watergate.

As we all know, the issues decided at the polls on Wednesday were of such major importance that they will, without a doubt, affect our future livelihood. And, more importantly, the results were so "close." After all, the arena only passed by 2,914 votes and Musil barely edged out Foster with a mere 2,353 vote margin.

It is therefore, of prime importance that the "incompetent" Elections Committee be duly castigated as advocated by the "voice of the students" (Collegian).

Mr. Woodward, I mean Sanborn, in his prime piece of investigative journalism has alerted us to the skullduggery-type tactics utilized by Brian Rassette in his attempts to help out the understaffed election tables.

However, most students on this campus are not even aware of most of the proposals for a new arena, let alone who masterminded the project. And even if the name was familiar, it is unlikely (not to insult Mr. Rassette's popularity) that all 15,000 or so students eligible to vote in Wednesday's election would recognize him in person.

In addition, I would like to add that being chairman of the Elections Committee is no easy task. It requires long hours of planning with damn little reward. Trying to find 180 people on this campus that can be conned into working at the polls in the first place and then organizing them into a "competent" group is surely a task comparable to getting the Collegian to cover women's athletics.

Of course, I am sure Ms. Conners, when confronted with the problems of graduate students voting at the wrong table could have chosen a more rational action, like trying to wade through the cast ballots to find the errant ones.

Or she could have invalidated the election right then and there, so that once more the elections could be planned, apathetic students could go out and vote, and we could all pay the extra $300-$400 for a new election instead of having it go for a new arena. Or maybe instead of a new arena, we should designate the money from the referendum to go to sending Mr. Rassette and Ms. Connors to San Clemente.

Slain U.S. ambassador returned; Carter expresses grief, anger

WASHINGTON (AP)—The body of slain Ambassador Adolph Dubs was returned to the United States on Sunday and met by President Carter, who expressed "sadness and outrage" at Dubs' killing in Afghanistan last week.

"We condemn those who would participate in such a despicable act of violence," Carter said.

Secretary of State Cyrus Vance, also at the ceremony, said, "We will fight terrorism with all our resolve and resources."

Dubs, 58, was shot to death last Wednesday in a gun battle between police and four terrorists who had kidnapped him in Kabul. He was the fifth U.S. ambassador killed in the line of duty in just over a decade.

His body was returned to Andrews Air Force Base near Washington on an Air Force jet dispatched by the president. The flag-draped coffin was greeted by a 19-gun salute, and a military band played "Ruffles and Flourishes."

Ebony Theatre aims at cultural awareness

By CAROLE SPEER
Collegian Reporter

One of K-State's lesser known assets is the Ebony Theatre Company—the only black theater company in Kansas.

The group, formed in 1977, produces one play each year as part of Black Awareness Week.

"There was a need for exposure in black theater, not only at K-State, but throughout the state of Kansas," said Joyce Smith, founder and adviser of the company.

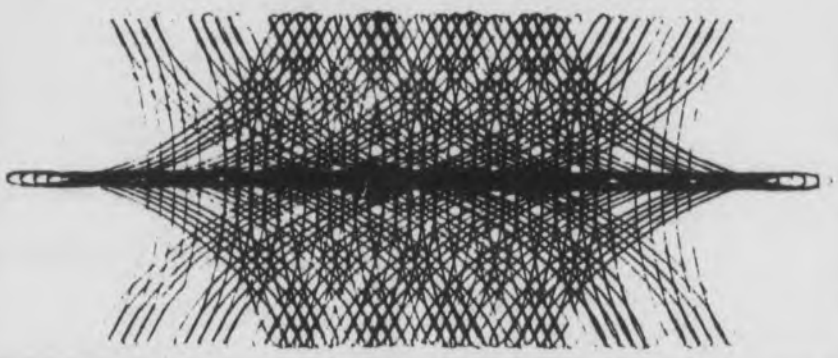
According to Smith, a student doesn't have to be black to be a member of the theater group. Any student interested in performing in black theater may join the company.

"Our group is to help students who don't have any theater background get started," she said. "We try to teach them the basics so they will be comfortable on stage." Smith said members of the group audition for productions at McCain.

The company also holds workshops for its members on proper breathing techniques, voice projection and other techniques needed to perform.

In its beginning, Ebony Theatre Company had problems financing its plays and finding a theater, Smith said. The company was told it couldn't perform in the Union Forum Hall because it is designed to show films, Smith said.

"McCain was too big, so the company moved to the Purple Masque Theatre," she said. "The Theatre gets us closer to our audience.



"We also had problems getting funds," she said. "We tried to get funds from the student government, but many of the senators had no idea what the Ebony Theatre Company was.

"The Black Student Union helped us out financially last year, and this year we are funded by the Fine Arts Council," Smith said.

"All of our material is based on black culture, and many people don't catch the full meaning of the plays. We're trying to pick material that will be easily understood by all," she said.

"For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When the Rainbow is Enuf" was this year's Ebony Theatre Company production.

Smorgasbord of area art served at Union gallery

DAVID GREUSEL
Collegian Reviewer

It may not be Alice's Restaurant, but you can get anything you want at the Flint Hills Artists' Pool exhibit in the Union Art Gallery.

A total of 22 artists, including several art teachers from K-State, have combined their abilities in this startlingly diverse show, and the result is a smorgasbord of media and methods guaranteed to have something for every level of sophistication and taste.

If "modern art" (one of the world's 10 great misunderstood phrases) scares you, you can look at two excellent pencil drawings by Lin Rose Mulkins, one a color fantasy and the other a perfectly understated portrait of a bird—though not one that would be confused with a painting by John Audoubon.

More variety is evidenced in the paintings and prints. Duane Noblett's reflection study is as simple in form as anything from the recent Richard Roth show, yet much more pleasing in its choice of color and sublety of application. James Swiler has extended the possibilities of hardline painting with his "Pit Viper Series," while Michael John Broadfoot's "Deadline" and George Thompson's "Matrix of Love" are more conventional abstractions. Fred Anderson's painting "Jazz" is exactly that.

It is, however, in sculpture that this exhibit really takes off and flies. Berit Greechie has evoked the most comment with her waste paper sculptures, which, while definitely forcing the viewer to look at paper in new and different ways, are not the kind of thing you would want hanging in your living room. Bob Clore's '2-1-Triptych," on the other hand, is a beautifully crafted piece I would be glad to have in my living room, if I could figure out where to put it.

ANOTHER interesting work using paper is a collage by Brian Pratt, "Cinque Demoiselles." Tiny slivers of bright color are employed efficiently in this piece.

The only real problem with this show is that the level of quality is so high the more conventional works in the exhibit seem weak by comparison. Tom Leopold's photography, and "Linda," a painting by Norma Morrison, might look a lot better in less brilliant company.

Another photographer, Holly Miller, steps out of the realm of monochromatic photography in "Queen of the Mardi Gras," a hand-tinted black-and-white photo that employs color selectively and successfully. Even more pleasing are Beau Vallance's color photographs. Vallance's work is the best color photography I have ever seen, and something I would like to see more of.

Special mention in the category of uncategorizable art goes to Elliot Pujol for his explosive copper form, "Six Sticks and 30 Seconds." The title and description of this handsome piece may give some clue as to how it was made. In the same category, Floyd Gompf contributes one of his perspective bronzes, which adds a touch of bizzare humor to a show that already has a little of everything.

Iran's oil will flow; U.S. to get its share

NEW YORK (AP)—Iranian Prime Minister Medhi Bazargan says Iran's new revolutionary government intends to resume oil exports as soon as possible "to all parts of the world, including the United States," The New York Times reported Sunday.

Bazargan also told the Times he is eager to maintain good relations with the United States and expressed regret for the attack on the American Embassy last Wednesday.

During an interview with the Times in Teheran, Bazargan said: "I have assured the Japanese ambassador that we want to supply oil continuously to all parts of the world."

THERE'S A YUM YUM DOWN AT SWANNIE'S

(to the tune of YELLOW ROSE OF TEXAS)

There's a Yum Yum down at Swannie's
that I'm a gonna eat.
Nobody's ever ate so much,
not half as much as me.
I cried the night I left 'em,
goin' home for Christmas Break,
'Cause those Yum Yums down at Swannie's
are the best I ever ate.

Oh those Yum Yums down at Swannie's,
they're a sight to see.
So big and hot and tasty,
they're always sure to please.
I ate about a million,
and rolled right out the door.
I rolled right back the next night,
and ate a million more.

SUDDEN SORROW...For a few fleeting moments Saturday afternoon Steve Solder saw a K-State victory vanish before his eyes after fouling KU center Paul Mokeski with only two seconds remaining. ABOVE...Paul Mokeski 7-1 pivot man for KU pulls down a rebound late in the second half.

Nealy opens fire, silences 'Hawks

By KENT GASTON

LAWRENCE—"It was luck! screamed a fat little red-haired kid wearing a KU Jayhawk T-shirt.

The ecstatic K-State Wildcats, however, were oblivious to the boy's shrieks as they escaped Allen Fieldhouse Saturday with a 58-56 victory.

K-State's win in Lawrence not only kept the 'Cats alive in the Big 8 title race, but provided another slap in the face to Jayhawk fans, who had anticipated a conference championship before the season.

To the Jayhawks, the Wildcat win came as easy as forcing medicine down the throat of a fat little red-haired kid.

Although the KU players weren't able to defend their proud tradition, the fans were ready, and they never let up on the 'Cats. But Allen Fieldhouse fell silent when freshman forward Ed Nealy hit two last-second free throws to give K-State the win.

THE KU CROWD fired up early, but that's not to say K-State wasn't represented.

Wildcat fanatic Weird Robert (Robert Lipson, 1222 Bluemont) perched himself on a mound of snow before the game and declared his less-than-subtle predictions to hundreds of KU students who had waited hours, some all night, to get in.

When one KU fan questioned the ancestry of K-State center Steve Soldner, Robert yelled "Soldner will stuff Big Mo (KU center Paul Mokeski) and the Gayhawks." Robert was immediately bombarded by snowballs.

While Robert challenged the KU faithfuls, he wasn't the only Wildcat fan in Allen Fieldhouse, although others were more reluctant to take on the 'Hawk supporters.

Allen Rogers, senior in construction science and member of Ahearn Field House's Front Row Fanatics, arrived early, but kept his purple and white T-shirt concealed.

Pointing to the buttons on his blue flannel shirt, Rogers said, "I won't show you 'cause I'd get mugged."

DESPITE his fear, neither Rogers nor the K-State team emerged losers from the Wildcats' trip to Lawrence.

Rogers was the first 'Cat booster to reach the K-State team after the final gun sounded, and they all departed happy and unscathed.

Although the 'Cats escaped with smiles, the tension of Saturday's contest kept the game and the Wildcats in doubt until the :01 mark on the clock.

In that last second, a poised Nealy hit the game-winning free throws, even though he had just watched veteran, 7-1 senior Mokeski, miss the front end of a one-and-one which would have made a lot more Allen Fieldhouse fans happy.

"Miss it, miss it, you idiot!" one irate KU fan bellowed from behind the goal.

But Nealy stayed cool and dropped both free throws and KU's title chances.

"I just wanted to get up there and get it over with," Nealy said. "I had no doubt that I was going to make it."

Nealy's heroics capped a frenzied final minute in which neither team could seal the victory.

SOLDNER, hero of K-State's earlier 96-69 rout of the 'Hawks, almost became the goat Saturday.

He put the 'Cats ahead 56-54 with 1:15 to play, but then threw an errant pass which was picked off by KU's Booty Neal, as K-State tried to kill precious time.

Neal drove down court and tied the game at 56 with 32 seconds left.

Mokeski then soared high to grab the rebound, and Soldner went over his back and fouled. The referee gave Mokeski a one-and-one, and the KU fans were tasting victory.

"Thanks, Steve, we love ya," a sarcastic voice rang out from the stands.

Mokeski had hit seven of eight free throws, but this one rolled off. In the battle for the rebound, KU's Mac Stallcup fouled Nealy with one second to play. Stallcup's hands went to his head in disbelief, but by that time, Nealy had ecstatically run down

Wildcats to take on tough Jennies tonight

With one week left in regular season play, the K-State women's basketball team has just two more home games before a crucial Feb. 26 contest with the University of Kansas Lady Jayhawks in Lawrence.

K-State, now 15-8 for the season, will host the Central Missouri State Jennies, at 7:30 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

While the Wildcats lead the KAIWA conference with wins over Kansas and Wichita State, the Jennies are 5-0 in the MAIWA and already have earned the number one spot in their upcoming state tournament.

If the two teams' statistics and results against common opponents are any indictation of the outcome of tonight's game, it should be a close contest. Both have wins over Iowa, Iowa State, Nebraska and Missouri.

The 'Cats are shooting 43 percent from the field and 63 percent from the line, compared to Central Missouri's 45 percent in field goals and 66 percent in free throws.

"I have a lot of respect for their program," Judy Akers, K-State basketball coach, said. "They are very physical and aggressive and for us to win we will have to be playing top-notch ball."

the court, and was ready to step to the line. Mokeski, at the other end of the floor, kneeled and hung his head.

The few Wildcat fans in attendance went wild, when Nealy overcame a sea of desperately waving hands behind the backboard and made the shots. But the game wasn't over.

In a seemingly eternal last second, Mokeski threw a long inbounds pass to Stallcup in the K-State circle. Stallcup caught the ball, turned and fired a 17-footer that would have counted, but the ball bounced off the rim. The 'Cats had captured their fifth straight win, leaving themselves the only team with a chance of catching league-leading Oklahoma.

K-STATE is now 8-4 in the Big 8, while Oklahoma is 9-3 after beating Colorado Saturday night. KU dropped to 6-6.

The pressure seemed to take its toll on both teams in the first half, but KU was able to lead by as many as eight points.

The 'Cats scratched back to tie the game 31-31 at halftime and the 'Hawk fans were a little nervous, especially since Darnell Valentine had left the game with a sprained ankle at the 9:30 mark.

"This (crowd) is mild for K-State," KU's mini-mascot Baby Jayhawk said at halftime. "I hope they start yelling. Otherwise, we're not gonna win."

They did start yelling with about 15 minutes left in the game when Valentine reappeared from the KU locker room. He had been X-rayed, and was given the OK to play.

THE CROWD went wild again shortly after that, when a fight broke out on the court.

"KU's Johnny Crawford grabbed (Glenn) Marshall like a piece of meat," Jari Wills said. Crawford is 6-8 and Marshall is 5-10, so Wills just "jumped in the middle of it," when the fight started.

KU was led in the first half by Guy's 10 points. He finished as the game's high scorer with 14 points. Mokeski had 11 points, and was continually double-and triple-teamed when he got the ball. He was only able to shoot four times.

K-State's leading scorer was Soldner with 13 points. Nealy had 12 and Marshall had 10.

The few K-Staters in the crowd became a little more vocal when the game was over, yelling, "What's the score, KU, what's the score?"

So far this year, the score is 2-0.

Women's track team takes second in Big 8 Indoor

K-State women's track "re-established itself as a quality program," according to Coach Barry Anderson by taking second in the Big 8 Indoor Championships in Lincoln, Neb. Saturday and Sunday.

The Wildcats scored 70 points, while Iowa State ran away with first place for the third year in a row with 113 points.

At one time, four teams were tied for second, but K-State received a boost when Linda Long took first and Janice Stucky took fifth in the shot put.

"It motivated the entire team and generated a lot of excitement," Anderson said.

Long set a K-State record of 46-2, breaking her own record of 45-4¾.

THE WILDCATS ran well in the relays, taking second in the mile relay and fifth in the two-mile relay. The mile relay team of Leesa Wallace, Freda Hancock, Lorraine Davidson and Wanda Trent had a time of 3:51.3, behind the Iowa State team, which set a Big 8 record of 3:50.14.

Annette Sittenauer took second in the long jump with an 18-7½ leap and Trent took second in the 440-yard dash with a :57.21 clocking.

Third-place finishers were Hancock in the 60-and 300-yard dashes, Renee Urish in the mile run and Janel LeValley in the 1,000-yard run.

Others scoring points for K-State were Beets Kolarik, Linda Scott and Jolene Riley, who took fourth, fifth and sixth in the pentathon; the fifth place two-mile relay team of LeValley, Cindy Anderson, Janis Rupe and Deb Harrell; Pat Osborne, who took sixth in the 60-yard dash and Urish, who took fifth in the 880-yard run.

'Waiting game' nears an end

With the national collegiate football signing date just two days away, K-State has committed 17 of its available 26 football scholarships, Jim Dickey, Wildcat head football coach, said Sunday.

Dickey said K-State has received Big 8 letters of intent from five high school seniors and was hoping to sign another senior from Great Bend last night.

Scholarships have been accepted by eight junior college transfers and four Wildcat football player previously not on scholarship.

While Dickey wouldn't reveal the names of the juco transfers or players they had awarded the scholarships, he said they had received letters from four Kansans: Kent Sedlacek of Hanover, Scott Lauridson of Baldwin, Greg Pemberton of Shawnee St. Joseph and John Winslow of Shawnee Mission South.

Bart Horner, Grandview, Mo., has also signed a letter of intent.

Sources say Soviets on alert

China retaliation reportedly over

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—China's attack on Vietnam was reported stopped about six miles inside the border Monday and Western intelligence sources said some Chinese units may be pulling back.

Unconfirmed reports from Moscow said all Soviet military leaves had been canceled and troops put on alert. The Soviets warned China on Sunday to pull out of Vietnam immediately.

Vietnam said it inflicted heavy casualties on the Chinese, killing 3,500 troops and destroying more than 100 tanks since the invasion started Saturday.

The Voice of Vietnam, monitored in Bangkok, said the Vietnamese killed 1,000 Chinese troops and destroyed 30 tanks in the rugged mountain province of Hoang Lien Son and reported similar figures in Cao Bang province.

In Long Son province, Vietnam claimed 600 Chinese killed and 20 tanks destroyed and said the strategic "Friendship Gate" border area was littered with some 60 destroyed Chinese tanks. Fighting was reported in other northern provinces as well. The reports could not be independently verified.

THE VIETNAMESE Embassy in Bangkok said the Chinese advanced no more than six miles into Vietnam.

Peking has said the attack was in retaliation for "armed incursions" by Vietnam over the past year.

A quick strike followed by withdrawal would be similar to China's 1962 action in northeast India, when China invaded to make its point in a border dispute, then pulled back.

The official Chinese news agency Hsinhua has carried little about the invasion and no detailed reports of the fighting. Japanese news reports from Peking said China banned all demonstrations concerning the war.

Bangkok sources discounted reports of continued Chinese air strikes deep into Vietnam. Thai intelligence said the only Chinese planes still involved were spotter planes directing Chinese artillery fire.

A dispute between China and Vietnam has simmered since the communists took over Vietnam in 1975. It has increased over the past year with China accusing Vietnam of mistreating ethnic Chinese, and with Vietnam's backing of the overthrow of the China-backed Cambodian government of Pol Pot.

U.N. SECURITY Council consultations on the situation were by telephone Monday because of a winter snowstorm that swept New York overnight.

A U.N. spokesman said Kuwait Ambassador Abdalla Bishara, the Security Council chairman for February, was consulting particularly with nonaligned nations.

Sunday, Moscow warned China to withdraw its troops "before it is too late" and said it would honor a peace and friendship treaty signed last November with Vietnam.

Moscow indicated it would not send troops, however, saying: "The heroic Vietnamese people...are capable of standing up for themselves this time again."

Soviets dust off slogan: 'Hands Off Vietnam'

MOSCOW (AP)—The Kremlin appeared to be staying out of the Chinese-Vietnamese conflict Monday after issuing a statement conspicuously void of possible Soviet moves against Peking. However, the Soviets were said to have put their army on alert and canceled leaves.

The key phrase in Sunday's Kremlin statement of support for Vietnam was, "the heroic Vietnamese people....are capable of standing up for themselves."

This was followed by the reminder that Vietnam has "reliable friends" and the warning to Peking to "stop before it is too late." The statement fell short of suggesting direct Soviet intervention.

Monday, the Chinese advance seemed to have stopped and it appeared the Kremlin might not have to consider the options its statement left open.

Reports from Hanoi indicated the Chinese had halted three to six miles inside Vietnam as they had indicated they might in their statement that their attack was a punitive one intended to "teach Vietnam a lesson."

U.S. consulate set afire in Iran; 700 reported killed in fighting

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—Unidentified "counter-revolutionary elements" set fire to the U.S. consulate Monday in the northwestern Iranian city of Tabriz, the city's state-run radio reported. The one American assigned to the post had left Tabriz on Sunday, U.S. officials said.

Amid other reports of disorder, the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini warned he would crush any "bandits" causing trouble and view their activities as an uprising against his new Islamic republic.

Tabriz Radio, now in the hands of supporters of the ayatollah, appealed to local citizens to put out the fire at the consulate.

U.S. OFFICIALS were unable to confirm the report of the fire, but said that Michael Metrinko, the only American assigned to the consulate, had returned to Tehran on Sunday.

Heavy fighting was reported last week in Tabriz, 330 miles northwest of Tehran. Up to 700 people were reported killed when army units joined pro-shah activists in battles against forces loyal to Khomeini.

Armed robbers were reported stopping motorists on highways near the southwestern oil cities of Abadan and Ahwaz and in parts of Tehran.

The government sent troops to the western province of Kurdistan amid reports of unrest and a declaration of "independence" among Kurdish separatists.

IN A STATEMENT broadcast over Tehran Radio, Khomeini ordered his irregulars to aid police and the army in "maintaining law and order...a group of bandits and unlawful elements are taking advantage of the situation and are making efforts to pursue their evil objectives."

Khomeini, leader of the year-long uprising that forced Shah Mohammad Reza Palahvi from power, did not specify who the "bandits" were.

Committee undercuts Carlin's proposal to hike faculty pay

TOPEKA (AP)—Money for faculty salaries at state universities would be increased only 6 percent under a decision made Monday by the House Ways and Means Committee.

This represents a cut in both the request of the Board of Regents, the agency which supervises operations of the universities, and the recommendation of Gov. John Carlin.

The regents asked for an increase of 6.5 percent. Carlin recommended an increase of 7 percent.

Rep. Michael Glover (D-Lawrence) who sought committee approval of the governor's recommendation, or at least the amount requested by the regents, said this would be about $1.2 million below Carlin's proposal.

Earlier, the committee formally rejected a request by the regents that a new "formula funding" approach be adopted for financing university operations in this state.

But the panel agreed that data developed in support of formula funding should be used as a tool in arriving at appropriations for the schools.

Full implementation of the formula funding approach for the 1980 fiscal year would have increased school operating budgets about $44 million over the existing fiscal year.

The governor rejected that approach, except for guideline use, and recommended an increase in operating budgets of less than $29 million.

Glover urged adoption of the formula funding approach. He said the Legislature could then provide any level of funding it wished in carrying out that approach.

MOSCOW REPORTS were circulating that the Soviet military had been put on alert and that leaves were canceled because of fighting in Asia. The Soviet Defense Ministry's foreign desk, when asked about the report, said Monday night, "we do not give out such information."

However Soviet journalist Victor Louis, often an unofficial pipeline for leaks, reported in the London Evening News that the army has been put in combat readiness and that troops were being called back from leave. He said in response to a telephone query that such alerts are not unusual here.

The Soviet statement, which came amid a barrage of anti-Chinese propaganda, demonstrations outside the Chinese embassy and rallies at institutes and factories around the country, said the Soviet Union will "honor its treaty obligations" with Vietnam.

As a rallying cry, the Kremlin has brought out an American protest slogan from the days of U.S. involvement in Southeast Asia: "Hands off Vietnam."

It was a statement the Kremlin had to make, just three-and-a-half months after signing a "treaty of friendship and cooperation" with Vietnam. It went no further than the wording of the treaty, which provides only that "in case either party is attacked or threatened with attack, the two parties...shall immediately consult each other."

The treaty does not bind the two sides to military aid, and the Soviets offered none.

Vietnam...

The report of Soviet military leaves being canceled was from Victor Louis of the London Evening News, a Soviet citizen with good official contacts.

Louis said it was "understood" the forces had been put "combat readiness Number One" although this had not been officially stated by the Soviets. His reports often reflect Soviet thinking, frequently before it is made official.

The United States said Sunday it disapproved of the invasion and asked the Soviets to use restraint. Government spokesmen said there was no reason to believe American interests were directly threatened.

Stephan's decision may prompt Kansas open saloon showdown

TOPEKA (AP)—Attorney General Robert Stephan is expected to rule this week whether a Kansas Supreme Court decision left a massive loophole in the state Constitution's ban on open saloons, permitting private clubs to abolish cumbersome liquor pools.

This loophole would, in effect, allow the estimated 600 private clubs in Kansas using the pools to serve liquor by the drink to club members.

The opinion was requested by Sen. Frank Gaines (D-Augusta). The first draft of Stephan's ruling has been written and is presently being circulated within the attorney general's office for review.

Legislative sources told The Associated Press that Stephan appears ready to agree the loophole exists, possibly setting the stage for another round of political and legal battles over loosening of Kansas liquor control laws.

The attorney general's office would say only that the opinion was requested, that staff were researching the question, and that the opinion could be released publicly yet this week.

THE STATE Alcoholic Beverage Control Division estimates about $16.2 million worth of liquor was sold last year in clubs through the liquor pool system. Total of all liquor sold last year in the state was $148 million.

The question of law Stephan is deciding results from the Supreme Court's ruling last November declaring unconstitutional the 1978 liquor-in-restaurants law. The vote was 4-3 against the law.

In that decision, Gaines said, the narrowly divided court appeared to rule the open saloon prohibition applies to any establishment open to the public "without discrimination."

His argument is that private clubs are restricted to members only, so liquor by the drink would be constitutionally permissible.

If Stephan rules that private clubs can do away with their liquor pools without violating the constitutional prohibition against open saloons, the Legislature could then approve by simple majority vote new laws permitting clubs to serve liquor by the drink to members.

IN THE past, liquor by the drink proponents have been stymied in their efforts to have a constitutional amendment placed on the ballot because such amendments require a two-thirds majority of both houses of the Legislature. They have been unable to muster the necessary votes.

A ruling from the attorney general that the constitutional loophole exists will enable proponents to simply change state statutes controlling liquor distribution. This would require only a majority vote but, presumably, the Supreme Court will have to rule on the validity of any new laws such as this.

Last session, lawmakers tried a similar ploy to permit liquor by the drink in public restaurants which maintained at least 50 percent annual gross sales in food.

The thought was such restaurants would not be considered open saloons. The Supreme Court did not agree and struck down the law in November as unconstitutional, in the first state ruling defining the term "open saloon."

Sequel roots up Ku Klux Klan

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—Authorities said Monday they are seeking the persons who set crosses ablaze at the office door of the NAACP and at a television station carrying the sequel to "Roots."

The flaming crosses, ignited Sunday night after "Roots: The Next Generation" began on television, caused little damage.

Meanwhile, in Huntsville, Ala., some 20 robed members of the Ku Klux Klan picketed station WAAY-TV Sunday to protest the showing of the "Roots" series.

"Roots II" beat the competition in three major cities Sunday night, though the audience for the first chapter was considerably lower than for Part I of the original mini-series.

The ABC show beat "Marathon Man," on CBS, and "American Graffiti," on NBC. Both films were getting their first television airing.

The rating for "Roots II" was 28.6 in New York City, 30 in Chicago and 26.1 in Los Angeles, figures from the A.C. Nielsen Company showed Monday. That means that of all the homes in New York City with television, 28.6 percent saw "Roots II" Sunday night.

The rating for the first installment in the original Roots mini-series Jan. 23, 1977, was 38.5 in New York, 45.6 in Chicago and 42.1 in Los Angeles.

Ryan murder suspect pleads innocent

GEORGETOWN, Guyana—The trial of Larry Layton, a People's Temple member accused of murder in the deaths of Congressman Leo Ryan and four others, was postponed to Feb. 28 after he pleaded innocent Monday.

The killing of Ryan, a California Democrat, sparked the mass suicide-murder last November in which more than 900 temple members died in the jungle sanctuary of Jonestown in the northwest corner of this South American Country.

Layton was scheduled to go on trial Monday, but his lawyer asked for a delay and the trial was rescheduled.

Judge Harold Bollers, chief Justice of the Guyana Supreme Court, announced the trial would begin Feb. 28. It was the second time the trial had been postponed. It originally was set for Feb. 12 and then for Monday.

There's 'still' profit in antiques

MEMPHIS—A Missouri antiques store owner was arrested and held for two hours for unlawful possession of a still, a misdemeanor in Tennessee.

James Lafferty, 49, owner of an antiques store in Cuba, Mo., and his wife Joyce set up a booth at a local flea market. Included in the display was a two-foot copper still, which he said he bought for $100 six months ago. Attached to the still was a sign describing it as a "moonshine still," and a $299 price tag. Two vice squad officers ordered Lafferty arrested Sunday and confiscated the still. He was freed on $250 bond.

Forecast: odd shadows, loss of light

LAWRENCE—Kansans should be in line for a good view of their last solar eclipse this century when the spectacle unfolds next Monday morning, according to University of Kansas astronomers.

Monday's show will be the last total solar eclipse to be viewed in the continental United States until the year 2017.

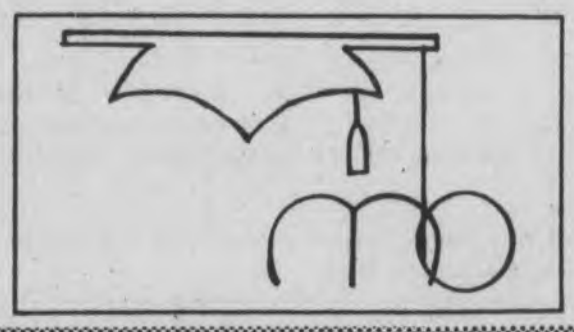
The eclipse is sheduled to begin between 9:10 and 9:25 a.m. across Kansas. Although Kansas lies south of the path of totality, some 39 to 89 percent of the sun's diameter should be covered by 10:30 a.m.

At that time the light loss should be noticeable, astronomers say, with the sun's crescent shape producing odd-looking shadows. A temperature drop may be noticed.

The duration of the eclipse will be about 2½ hours over the entire state, ending just before noon.

Astronomers warn that viewers should not look at the sun directly, even through sunglasses or smoked glass. More than 100 people suffered permanent eye damage from looking at the sun during the March 7, 1970 eclipse.

Two layers of completely exposed black and white film make an effective filter to hold in front of your eyes, KU astronomers say.



An eclipse occurs when the moon, as it orbits the earth, passes between the sun and the earth.

Happy St. Patrick's Day. Drink one for us in honor of ol' St. Pat. Oooops!! We just learned that today isn't St. Patrick's Day. Oh well, since this paper is green and since we'll be out of school on spring break for the real St. Pat's Day, go ahead and celebrate anyway. Today will be a little gloomy for celebrations, however, as light rain and snow is expected. Highs today and Wednesday will be in the 40s. A chance of light rain exists today, but snow may begin to fall tonight, when temperatures dip into the 20s.

Equal status for Mexico

From the land of tequila sunrises, President Carter experienced a welcome of little sunshine and several hard shots of tequila...without any grenadine to sweeten the taste.

And he is going to have to get used to it, if he wants to win the right to buy Mexican natural gas.

It is too bad Carter is forced to pay for past abuses of power, but payment is due.

For years, the U.S. has treated its southern neighbors with the same disdain, patronage and comtempt usually reserved for teenagers' treatment of an obnoxious little brother they are forced to babysit.

I have lived in Mexico and other Latin American countries for half of my life and have seen the U.S.' treatment of Third World countries.

The U.S. has consistently ignored the rising influence of Mexico, which—with a higher standard of living than most Latin American countries, a growing middle class and a burgeoning industrial revolution—is a leader in Latin America.

In the past, the U.S. has doled out "free aid" in return for support in the United Nations and the right to call the receivers allies. Allies that have to toe the U.S. line if they expect aid for their starving people.

It sounds just like babysitting, where the sitters promise an extra treat if little brother behaves.

That works fine when the child is young, but children have a habit of growing up without anybody realizing it.

Well, little brother is growing up, and it is about time Americans recognized that fact. Just as an adult deserves to be treated like one, so does a country deserve the respect due a sovereign nation.

So far, the U.S. hasn't done anything but emphasize Mexico's subservient status.

Even the diplomatic service subtly undermines its own work by allowing its members to bring their own cars and providing commissaries where U.S. government workers can purchase duty-free U.S. goods (all subsidized by American taxpayers). Mexicans regard this as an insult. It's as if the Americans were saying, "Hey, you and your goods aren't good enough for us—just for peons."

Carter's adminstration isn't innocent either. Just last month Energy Secretary James Schlesinger rejected an already negotiated deal to buy Mexican gas.

His reason? Simple.

Schlesinger said the negotiated price of $2.60 per thousand cubic feet was 44 cents higher than elsewhere, even though a private U.S. pipeline company had already agreed to the price.

When the Mexicans asked for a counter offer, Schlesinger refused to give them his time.

So it took a Presidential visit to try to mend the Mexicans' stomped-on pride. Throughout his visit, Mexican President Jose Lopez Portillo lectured Carter on accepting Mexico as an equal.

Mexico isn't the U.S.' equal in standards of living, industrial equipment and other areas, but when it comes to natural gas, Mexico has the upper hand.

Just as little brother has grown up, big brother is older and has aquired an insatiable appetite for energy, including natural gas.

An energy addict like the U.S. can't afford to insult any of the suppliers of his drug, even if it is a formerly despised little brother.

It is hoped that little brother won't remember too many of the mean tricks big brother pulled when he was defenseless, but who can blame him if he does?

The greening of Collegian

The column quiz for today: What's different about the Collegian?

If by chance you've already noticed that the paper is green, congratulations, you get an A for awareness.

You're probably wondering why the Collegian has 12 gorgeous green pages. It's not because we indulged in one too many Mel's runs and got wild and crazy with the colors.

We just thought we'd celebrate St. Patrick's Day a few weeks early. After all, we won't be printing then because of spring break.

You don't buy that one, OK. We're running green pages in memory of 16,000 KU fans who turned green simultaneously in the last second of Saturday's game. The fans were actually two hues of green; the first was a sickly "I can't believe we lost" green which developed into an envious green. I'm not sure, but I think the color we're using is the sickly green.

Naw, we wouldn't run color for the 'Hawks. The Collegian has green pages only because we couldn't afford walnut paneled paper.

Enough editorial comments.

You want to know the real reason we're running green, right? It's because we wanted something zippy, something that jumps out and grabs the reader and pulls him into the story. Of course if you don't like green, you've probably gagged at least three times while reading this column.

At least the green reminds all of you what color grass is (or was). It's been so long since anything outside and growing has been green, we were beginning to worry that people thought Kansas was permanently white.

OK, OK, I was just trying to amuse you. The real reason is—drum roll, please—a gang of Martians has invaded the Collegian newsroom and is taking over. Soon, the paper will be printed in Martonian (the official language of Mars). Before you know it, Rolando Blackman will run into Ahearn in a purple and florescent green jersey, only to be followed by similarly dressed teammates and a troop of small, green team trainers.

All right, all right, I'll tell you the real reason, really.

Remember when Chicago (the band, not the city) visited K-State last semester? Do you also remember that their advertising campaign included a green, two-page ad inside the Collegian? Because of the paper shortage, we have resorted to using the paper that was left over from the ads. I'm afraid it's not a very pretty story...unless you like green.

And that is why this very day, you have a green Collegian, and if we don't get any paper, Wednesday's Collegian will be invisible.

Cold air speeds up labwork

Editor

For those of you who may not know already, the Physical Plant (now University Facilities) people have come up with what may be the greatest advance in science of the age.

On the theory that cold is stimulating to the scientific mind, they have arranged for one of the heaters in Willard 116 to deliver nice, fresh, subzero air directly from outside into the lab. This has been a great help to all of us, I'm sure, since it encourages everyone to finish the experiment quickly.

Thank you, Physical Plant.

U.S. medicine un-American

Editor,

Although organized medicine is now squeezing from the American consumer $200 billion a year—a sum equal to the entire national budgets of West Germany and Japan combined—the health service is still inadequate.

In terms of the health indicators such as life expectancy and infant mortality rate, the U.S. ranks behind more than a dozen other countries, having dropped from being behind only half as many in 1955.

It took medical schools in this country 41 years, from 1933 to 1974, to double their admissions from 7,500 to 15,000 students a year.

The practice of medicine in the U.S. is monopoly. There is collusion and price fixing. The net median income of self-employed physicians in 1978 was over $70,000 and, at the current rate, it will exceed $100,000 in less than six years.

There are disturbing reports casting doubt about the commitment of physicians for the well-being of the consumer. According to a recent U.S. Senate committee report two million unnecessary surgeries are being performed every year. And physicians generally shield their medically incompetent or careless colleagues from disciplining authorities at the risk to the welfare of patients.

To be sure there are a lot of very conscientious and caring physicins in this country. Many of them have spoken out against the excesses of the organized medicine, although without much effect.

The present health care system in the U.S. is a bad deal for the consumer. The medical establishment cannot be expected to reform it. And why should they? It has served them pretty well. As an economic system the U.S. health care is unique and also most un-American. It is not free enterprise characterized by free competition.

There appears to be more than one approach to make the system cost-effective and responsive to the needs of the consumer. This can be done—all the political clout of organized medicine notwithstanding—if the people get mad enough.

Legal execution humane?

Editor,

As a German guest in this country, I deeply appreciate the Kansas Legislature's acknowledging progress in a "humane" way of slaughter.

They should be aware that it was successfully invented in the concentration camps of Auschwitz by Joseph Klehr, who killed thousands by injections of phenol. No one who ever followed the Auschwitz trials (about ten years ago) will ever forget his arguing that people who have to be killed should be killed in a "humane way."

When will people understand what it comes down to when any legal form of execution is accepted?

Anti-parity letter 'jolts'

Editor,

This letter is in regard to the letter by Mark Baus entitled "Parity Jolts Economy." Mark must know very little about farm economics or, if he does, he hides his knowledge well.

Parity prices for agricultural products are the only logical way to set a value on these products. Parity is defined as equality in value. In simple terms, it means a fair price for a good or service.

Our country already is on the parity system to an extent. There are minumun wage laws; many salaries have an escaltor clause; many large countries are assured of a certain profit, especially if they work for the government; and so on.

Has parity for these people wrecked the country?

Parity would mean equitable prices for farmers. This, as anyone who has studied economics would know, would pump a great deal of money into an agricultural state like Kansas and subsequently to the businesses in the state.

Exports would not decline because our competitors in the export market are already undercutting our prices for the agricultural goods we export. The increased amount of money derived from higher export prices would help offset our trade deficit.

As anyone who has studied the farm situation knows, since 1973 the price of land has increased about 400 percent while farm products have declined. Non-farm interests have caused the bulk of the increase in land prices. Non-farm interests are buying large tracts of land and are making it hard for bona fide farmers to purchase land.

The most practical and sensible way to slow down this trend is for prices of farm products to increase. Non-farm interests aren't buying land to make money through agriculture, but rather as a hedge against inflation. Higher agriculture prices would not increase their buying significantly.

Parity may not solve all the ills of our country or agriculture, for that matter. It isn't supposed to. However, it is advantageous over the present system of boom-and-bust cycles.

I must also differ from Mark's opinion of Sen. Kassebaum. She did not support a bill which would help her constituents financially, and moreover, she used the excuse that it was not popular and thus did not merit support. She is only fooling herself if she believes that she supports agriculture and she is fooling those who believe her.

Rubber checks could bounce to county attorney

By JACKIE MARTIN
Collegian Reporter

Rubber checks don't pose a serious financial threat to the K-State Union, but the students who write the several dozen bad checks the Union receives each week face possible prosecution by the county attorney.

If the Union notifies a student about a bad check he has written, and the student fails to contact the Union business office to clarify the matter, the student's name is given to the county attorney for prosecution, according to Nyles Davis, student attorney.

The county attorney will then notify the student and issue a warrant for his arrest if the student doesn't respond within ten days, Davis said.

Davis said sometimes students write bad checks and go home for holidays without leaving a forwarding addrsss for their mail. When that student gets back to school, there might be a warrant out for his arrest.

THE UNION cashes several hundred checks per day but receives only 25 to 45 bad checks each week, according to Jack Thoman, accountant for the Union business office.

Thoman said more checks bounce at the beginning of the semester because students write checks to buy books before depositing money in the bank. Students write their checks hoping the money they send gets to the bank before their checks do, he said.

When the Union receives a bad check, it sends a certified letter to the student telling him he has seven days to pay for the check.

"Some days I sign as many as 20 notices and other days I sign as few as 3 or 4," Thoman said.

THOMAN SAID students are put on the Union non-acceptable check list after they write three bad checks. Students on the list cannot cash checks at the Union for 6 months, but if they pay cash for the bad checks their names are taken off the list. Names sent to the county attorney may be placed on the Union list indefinitely, Thoman said.

In the case of a bank error, the student should have his bank write a letter to the Union business office and the check will not be counted as one of the three.

Thoman said if a two-party check is returned, the Union holds the payee responsible for the money, but both the payee and the person who wrote the check go on the list.

"There are not many problems wth two-party checks because they are usually cleared up by the payee," Thoman said.

Thoman said the Union receives one or two forged checks each year, but no one has ever been caught forging a check in the Union.

Lack of funds for improvements slows Konza Prairie research

By GREG HENDERSON
Collegian Reporter

Research at the Konza Prairie Natural Research Area near Manhattan has been slowed by a lack of capital improvement funds needed for fire equipment and the construction of fences, according to Lloyd Hulbert, professor of biology and director of the Konza Prairie.

"We need capital improvement funds for the construction of fences to confine bison, elk and antelope because, until those animals are there, that whole phase of research on natural systems won't be complete," Hulbert said.

"Fire equipment is also needed to control experimental burning. The equipment we have now is alright if everything goes well, but to operate safely we need three four-wheel drive vehicles with larger tanks than what we're using now," he said.

An application to the National Science Foundation for $92,000 for capital improvement was denied, but Hulbert said he is optimistic that the funds can be secured through private foundations.

The Konza Prairie is an 8,616 acre tract of land south of Manhattan that was purchased at a cost of nearly $4 million by the Nature Conservancy in January 1977. The Nature Conservancy, a non-profit organization, was developed to preserve natural ecological systems across the nation.

To study the effects of fire on the ecosystem of the Konza Prairie, the research tract is divided into several areas.

"Fire effects are being approximated by burning parts of the area at different intervals," Hulbert said.

"We know that unburned and unmowed areas will gradually become forested," he said, "so we anticipate learning how fast and what kind of woody plants invade different soils, the density they attain and how well they grow and survive drought."

Hulbert said the bison, elk and antelope will not be introduced to the Konza Prairie for at least two years.

"If we get the money within the next six months, it will still take about a year to build the fence," he said.

The large animals will be confined inside 10 miles of 7-foot fence supported by creosoted posts, many of which must be placed in rocky soils.

Bison, elk and antelope were native herbivores to this area before settlement, and their presence on the Konza Prairie will aid researchers in studying their effects on grass, soil and water quality.

Hulbert said interest in the Konza Praire is increasing, and last year more than 1,400 people visited the research area. Hulbert hopes funds will become available to remodel the large limestone house that once served as ranch headquarters.

"It's one of our goals to construct a visitor's exhibit room and office space in the headquarters, along with conference rooms, laboratories, and a space for a caretaker," he said.

Remodeling plans also include new plumbing and electricity, and a solar heating unit for the headquarters. Costs of this remodeling project will probably exceed $280,000.

'Night people' demonstrate different lifestyles

By VINCE WHEELER
Collegian Reporter

Night is a time most people associate with sleep and rest, but for a few people it means the start of another work day.

Bruce Marihugh, sophomore in engineering, is employed by a local all night gas-grocery store. He works four days a week from 11 p.m. to 7 a.m. and carries 15 hours at K-State during the day.

"I've worked here since September," Marihugh said. "I may soon give up the job though. It kind of depends on my financial situation."

The night sometimes drags when business is slow, he said. Marihugh tries to find things to fill the hours.

"I study sometimes," he said. "I also play a lot of pinball to kill the time. Business usually tapers off between two and four o'clock."

ALL ALONE...Tom Reust has plenty of time to himself during his night shift at a local store.

Boredom is not the only peril of the night worker.

"Police coverage is pretty good," Marihugh said about the ever present threat of robbery. "But we have been robbed three times in the last year."

There have been two more burglary attempts made at the store and Marihugh was involved in one of these incidents.

"Two men came in one night," Marihugh said, "They told me to open the cash register, and they said that they had a gun. I was too scared to do anything."

When I didn't open the register one of them grabbed me by the shirt. I pushed the alarm, and they ran out," Marihugh said. "I doubt if they really had a gun."

ALL NIGHT shift work is not as dangerous.

Bob Stitt has been working for the K-State Printing Service for nearly 20 years. He has spent the last six years on a night shift, working from 10:30 p.m. to 6:30 a.m.

"I really like it," Stitt said. "There's less hassle working at night. You don't have to take time off of the job to do things that might come up during the daytime. You can do them when you're not working."

Stitt had a variety of reasons for asking to be transferred to a night shift.

"I was bored with my daytime job," Stitt said. "I had never worked nights and I just wanted to see how the other side lived. I ended up liking it."

He also wanted to work at the Collegian, which is printed at night in Kedzie Hall, Stitt said.

"I don't know how much longer I'll be doing it, though," Stitt said. "I've been at it six years. It's about time for something different."

It's hard for night workers to have a social life, Stitt said.

"You don't have time for a lot of partying, since you have to be at work at 10:30," Stitt said. "The hardest thing for a lot of people to get used to is sleeping during the day. If you can't do that you won't make it on a night shift."

Stitt doesn't spend his nights at Kedzie alone, however. Two other printers work with him; Marvin Barckley is one of them.

"We have a lot of fun down here sometimes," said Barckley. "I don't mind the night shift. It isn't bad at all."

BARCKLEY will have worked 10 years on the night shift March 5. He has been a printer and lithographer for 27 Collegian staffs.

Before that he worked 22 months on the day shift for the printing service.

"I requested to be transfered to the night shift," Barckley said. "I was a bookbinder on the day shift, but I wanted to learn printing.

"The job's worked out really well for my family and me," Barckley said. "I'm home sleeping during the day. If my children have any trouble at school they can call. My wife has a day job so there's always someone there to answer the phone. It might take 27 rings to wake me up though.

"The only trouble I've ever had is keeping it dark enough in my room during the day to sleep. Other than that, the adjustment wasn't hard," Barckley said.

Tom Reust, a Manhattan resident is also an all-night checker at a gas-grocery store. He has worked the night shift since August.

"I asked to have the night shift," Reust said. "At night there's no one around hassling you. You get more responsibility and get to make decisions on your own."

Reust attended K-State for three years before he decided to stay out for a year to determine his major. He has one year of school left before receiving an Arts and Sciences degree.

"I imagine I'll start (school) next fall," Reust said.

Before he does, however, he said he will try to find another job.

"I'd like to find a job that pays a little more," Reust said, "Maybe a construction job."

Daytime sleeping is not a problem, Reust said.

"I'm one of those people who can sleep anywhere at anytime. I only need about four or five hours of sleep a day," he said.

Although he works at a retail store, Reust said he didn't fear robbery.

"Being robbed isn't a real big concern for me," Reust said, "The police check us every hour or so during the night. I don't believe we've ever been robbed. We're in an area that's pretty open.

GARY GILLASPIE spends his nights patroling the K-State campus. He's night shift supervisor for Security and Traffic.

Gillaspie goes to work at 11 p.m. and comes home at 7 a.m.

"I think most people would rather work days," Gillaspie said, "but night shift is better than the second shift (3 p.m.-11 p.m.). I worked it (second shift) for six and a half years.

"This shift gives me more time to be home with my family. I usually get up around 5 p.m. That gives me six hours to be at home," Gillaspie said.

One of Gillaspie's colleagues on the night shift is Carter Bailey.

He has been working the same shift for nine years. Bailey, a Vietnam veteran, began working for campus security after he retired from the Marine Corps.

"I've never had a day job," Bailey said, "I like working the night shift. There's more to it than just writing parking tickets. At night we deal more with security than with traffic."

Stubborn Jennies finally fall to hot Wildcats

By NANCY ZOGLEMAN
Collegian Reporter

For non-experts in animal terminology, a jenny is a female donkey.

For non-experts in college mascots, the Jennies are from Central Missouri State.

And, the Jennies were stubborn as mules last night in Ahearn Field House, finally falling to K-State 81-74.

Sports

The 'Cats almost blew Central Missouri away in the second half, outscoring their opponent 24-6 over a seven-minute period.

"We exploded offensively like we haven't done in some time," Coach Judy Akers said.

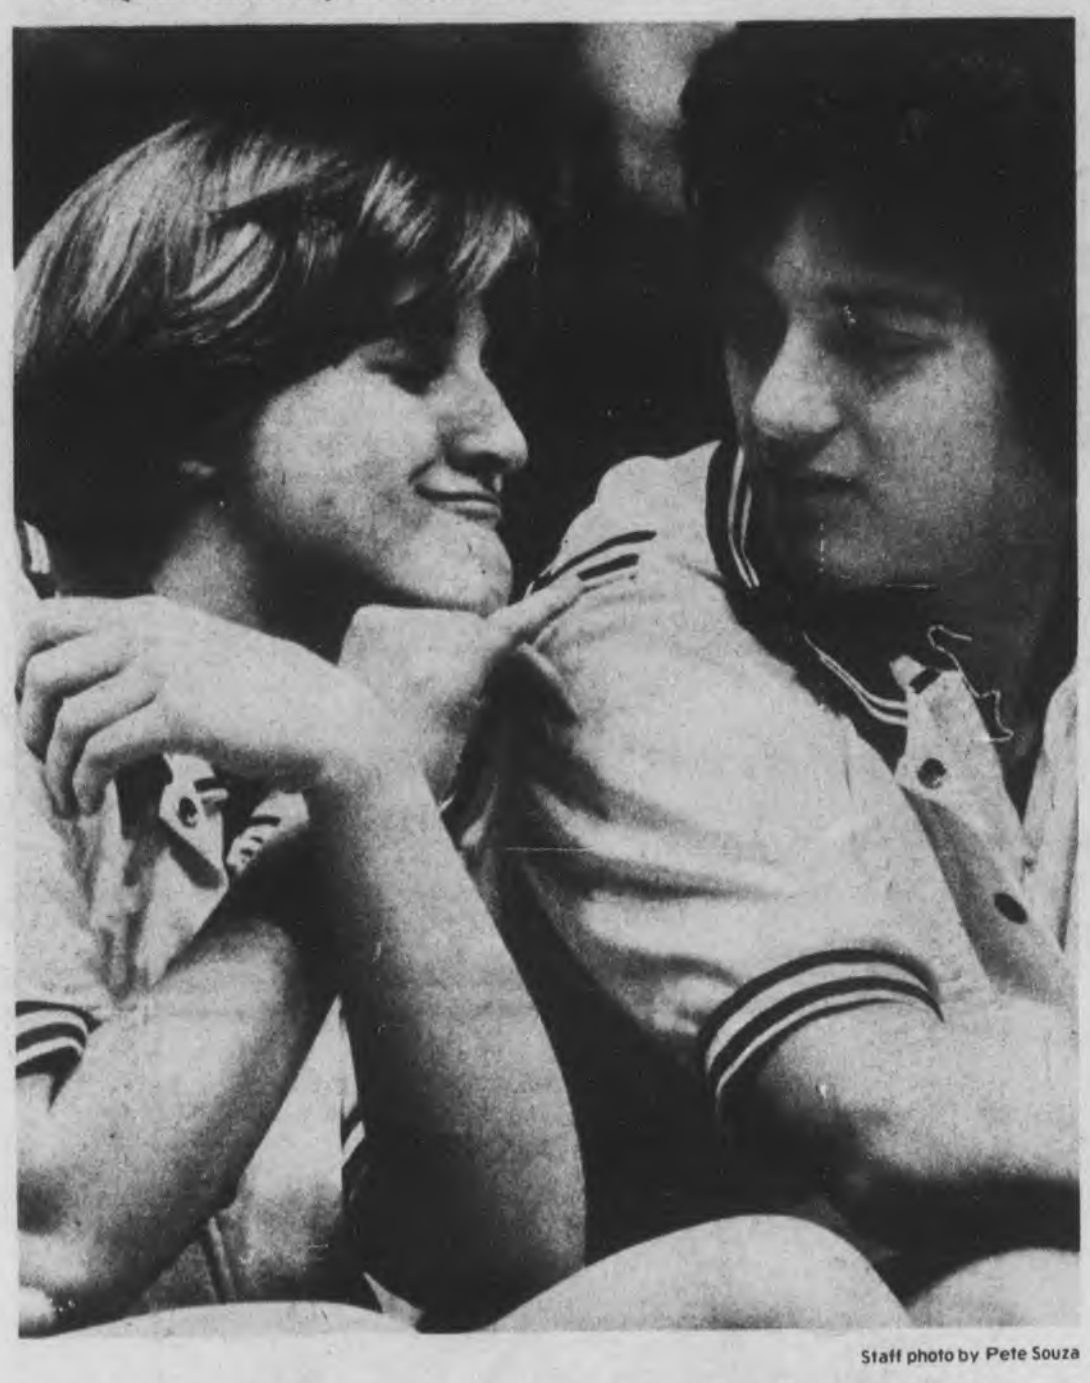
K-State was led by 5-8 guard LeAnn Wilcox, who had 24 points, eight of which came in a two-minute flurry in the first half which put K-State ahead 14-7.

Tammie Romstad came off the bench to score 13 points and pull down seven rebounds for K-State.

"Tammie showed good poise in the game. She also made some good outlets for fast breaks," Akers said.

CENTRAL MISSOURI STATE was led by 6-0 Margaret Nielsen with 22 points and 10 rebounds.

"They are a well-coached team. Their defense was hard to keep up with," Akers said.



The 'Cats didn't have any trouble keeping up with the Jennies' man-to-man defense in the first half, leading by eight and nine most of the way and building a 39-30 halftime lead.

K-State shot 49 percent from the field, making sharp passes and moving the ball well against the Jennies.

However, Akers pointed out that "they slowed us down in the second half with their zone."

The Wildcats were able to keep their poise, even though the Jennies fought back furiously in the final minutes.

'Our ball club is jelling as a team. We have good starters and good reserves," Akers said.

Jack Hartman and the Sundance Kids

Extra points

The Wildcats have certainly embarrassed many sports writers, now that they're the only team in the Big 8 with a chance to catch conference-leading Oklahoma.

Many of the great sports writers, Hentzen, McGuff, Looney...me, were expecting K-State to finish fifth or sixth in the Big 8. However, Iowa State Coach Lynn Nance was prophetic when he said "Jack Hartman is going to have to do some coaching this year, and that worries all of us."

Hartman has indeed done a lot of coaching this year to mold the Wildcats into a title contender.

I mean, really, Hartman has a ton of newcomers out there. Remember in the Butch Cassidy chase scenes, when they kept asking "who are those guys?" Well, that's what we all thought when the 'Cats took the floor for the first time this season.

Sure, there's Rolando Blackman and Steve Soldner, but there are also many new faces.

AT TIMES during the KU game Saturday when senior Soldner was out of the lineup, K-State had Jari Wills, Glenn Marshall, Ed Nealy, Tyrone Adams and Blackman in the game. Wills and Marshall are juco transfers breaking into the Hartman system, Nealy and Adams are freshmen and sophomore Blackman is the old man, having played a whole year under Hartman.

If there is any doubt about the coach of the year, there shouldn't be, because Hartman's team is going to be at least second in the Big 8, and possibly first. If they can beat Missouri and Oklahoma, they'll at least tie for first. If the Sooners are beaten by Iowa State Wednesday, then K-State may be playing for the outright conference championship.

And all without an established scoring machine-leader like Mike Evans or a dominant big man.

The only established star who could draw a second glance from pro scouts is Blackman, but the other players somehow make their contributions and pull through when needed.

BLACKMAN is apparently the closest thing K-State has to a leader, but Wills hit a last-second 20-footer to beat Iowa State, and when Blackman missed at KU, Nealy hit two free throws Saturday to beat KU. Although they should be worrying about shaving and acne, somehow these guys have built up enough confidence to win the close ones.

But, an underdog role is hard to break out of, and the 'Cats would probably be picked to lose to the Daisy Hill Puppy Farm Fighting Fire Extinguisers.

As Rolando Blackman put it in the locker room after the KU game, "We could beat (No. 1) Indiana State and (No. 2) UCLA tomorrow and they'd still call us underdogs."

K-Stater's career goes 'down under'

Another former K-State basketball player has decided to leave the United States to play professional ball.

Dan Hickert, former teammate of Scott Langton who recently left Kansas to play in Argentina, will leave this week for Brisbane, Australia. After he arrives in Brisbane, Hickert will begin practicing for his first professional game on Feb. 24.

"Basketball gives me a chance to travel and I'm doing that while I can," Hickert, who played for K-State from 1975-78, said.

The one-year letterman said he will receive transportation, an apartment and a salary.

"The season ends in June, so I will either stay until August for next season or try something else," Hickert said.

The team will travel to four or five different cities playing other professional basketball teams in Australia, he said.

"The teams we will be playing are on the level of good college teams here," Hickert said.

Tickets on sale today

K-State's Wildcats are assured a home-court berth (awarded to the top four teams) in the first round of the Big 8 postseason tournament. Even if the 'Cats lose their last two games, they will be tied for second.

Tickets will go on sale this week for the first-round game, to be played next Tuesday.

Reserved and non-reserved student tickets will go on sale a 9 a.m. today in the KSU Athletic Ticket office in the fieldhouse. Student tickets will be $2.

Public tickets (all reserved) will go on sale for $5.15 Wednesday night at the K-State Missouri game.

Students must present this semester's fee card to purchase tickets.

Student tickets will be limited to two per person, and students must present two current fee cards to buy two tickets.

Cancer toll: 'I can show them a bunch of new widows, fatherless kids and men being eaten away'

KITTERY, Maine (AP)—Roland Belhumeur keeps a list of his friends, Portsmouth Naval Shipyard workers who have died. Once a single page, the grisly catalogue now overflows several folders of death certificates, autopsy reports, radiation data. There are 40 names.

"The government boasts about its staff studies and interim reports and says the Portsmouth problem is under control. Well, I can show them a bunch of new widows, fatherless kids and men being eaten away by cancer who don't agree," Belhumeur said.

Portsmouth is where Belhumeur worked 20 years ago, overhauling the atomic submarine Nautilus and other vessels in the infancy of the Navy's nuclear reactor program. The government is investigating whether radiation-induced cancer is causing the deaths.

But the probe moves slowly—and meanwhile, in homes near the shipyard, more workers have died. Others suffer, knowing they too have cancer. Even more people live in fear they may be next.

Throughout, the Navy has said exposure records indicate the radiation workers received was considered well within safe limits.

STILL, BELHUMEUR keeps his list. He worked in the yard from World War II until the 1970s. He was a state legislator briefly, and now is service officer for the Disabled American Veterans in New Hampshire. He says he has traced 400 men he worked with, and is concentrating on some 75 who were in his unit of welders and laborers 20 years ago.

Most of the 40 now dead, he says, were among the 75 in that unit.

Belhumeur says he has given the figures to the government, but has never claimed they are a scientific study. One reason is that he and his colleagues worked when radiation dangers were little understood. For example, many now say they shielded badges that would measure high levels of radiation in order to stay eligible for overtime.

Belhumeur started his list after Dr. Thomas Najarian, a Boston hematologist, said in 1977 that nuclear workers at Portsmouth were contracting leukemia at a rate six times higher than non-nuclear workers. Belhumeur said he wasn't surprised.

"I knew something was killing the men," Belhumeur said. "Each year men who had worked with me on the Nautilus—men only 45 or 50 years old—were dying one after another.

"I'm not a doctor or a scientist but it didn't take genius to figure out something was wrong. So I started keeping a list of my friends and other shipyard workers who died, when and why."

ROLAND CLOUTIER was the latest entry. A year ago, he filed a compensation claim against the federal government, saying his cancer was due to long-term exposure to low-level radiation. But the 51-year-old welder was pessimistic.

"I doubt if I'll ever live to see the money," he said. "If they approve my claim, they'll be admitting that radiation has killed or is killing thousands of men all over the country."

Cloutier died three weeks ago. "We still haven't heard from the government," his widow told The Associated Press.

Bitterness and anxiety are common among such families. But at the shipyard, on an island between Maine and New Hampshire in the Piscataqua River, fear is more prevalent. there is some fear of radiation. But the more evident fear is of unemployment.

Much of coastal Maine and New Hampshire depends on the unstable tourist trade. By contrast, the Navy says the 7,800 shipyard workers earn a total of $120 million a year—an average $15,000 per worker.

At the Back-Aft Tavern near the main shipyard gate, workers boast of not being afraid to step over the red warning lines that criss-cross the yard, denoting radiation work areas. But some also admit doubts.

"It's the old timers—the men who worked on the subs when the nuke program was just starting who are dying," a 28-year-old electrician said. "The safety regulations are much tougher now."

A 36-YEAR-OLD who has worked at the yard 15 years disagreed; "Who really knows how safe the radiation standards are today? It's really a moot point. Even if they decided to lower the exposure levels today it would be too late for most of us. The damage is done."

Dozens of workers were interviewed. Not one said he would leave his job even if dangers were proved.

And if the questions raised at Portsmouth have spread doubts among workers at the eight other nuclear shipyards across the country, most remain silent. Safety procedures are tighter now than in Nautilus days. Workers carry better monitoring devices. More lab tests are used to gauge exposure levels.

Mardi Gras strikes out

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Off-duty firemen joined striking police on picket lines Monday, as National Guardsmen in jeeps patrolled a city denied its traditional Mardi Gras parades.

Meanwhile, new talks opened aimed at ending the walkout by police, who want their Teamsters Union bargaining unit to include ranking officers. They also are demanding that the mayor agree to binding arbitration.

With the remainder of the Mardi Gras celebrations hanging in the balance, the city Civil Service Commission opened a hearing on the policemen's wage and benefits demands.

At the same time, a federal mediator called a meeting of the bargaining teams for Vincent Bruno, head of the Police Association of Louisiana, and Mayor Ernest Morial on matters not dealing with money.

The negotiators are under court order to leave all financial matters to the Civil Service Commission.

Morial, in an amnesty offer, had said any striker who returned to work by noon Monday would not suffer reprisals, but he stopped short of saying he would fire those who did not.

By department count, 350 officers were on the job, while 1,100 policemen continued to defy court orders and stay on strike.

Garbagemen, also without a contract, went to work Monday. They had threatened to strike on Feb. 10 but didn't when cuts in sick leave were restored and the city recognized the Teamsters as bargaining agent for police.

Clarence Perez, president of the firemen's union, said his men, whose own contract expires in two weeks, were "on the verge of doing almost anything."

Media urges House to open records law

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill strengthening the state open records law drew strong praise from news media representatives Monday who were appearing before the House Federal and State Affairs Committee.

John Hopkins, speaking for the Kansas Press Association, said the bill would help reporters find information more easily and therefore better inform the public.

"An informed electorate is the best, most solid foundation a democracy can have," Hopkins said.

The bill would widen the current law by broadening the slate of records which fall under the law, requiring agencies to provide copies of records at a reasonable cost, stiffening the penalty for violations of the law to a Class A misdemeanor and requiring the agency to take action on a request within three days.

The bill would also allow a person denied access to a public record to petition a district court to enjoin the agency from withholding the records.

W. Davis "Buzz" Merritt, executive editor of the Wichita Eagle and Beacon, said the bill changes the definition of public record from any record required by law to be kept and maintained, to any record kept by a public agency.

"There is a presumption in the present law that the public's business is not the public's business—and that is wrong," Merritt said.

The committee took no action on the bill.

U.S. ship raided by 300 pirates

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—About 300 Maldive islands pirates attacked a U.S.-owned oceanographic survey ship in the Indian Ocean, looting the vessel and kidnapping at least one crew member, radio reports from the ship said Monday.

The vessel, a sister ship of oceanographer Jacques Cousteau's Calypso, was headed for the U.S. Navy facility on the island of Diego Garcia on Monday. Seven of the ship's 10-man crew were aboard, but there was no word on the fate of three others, including the captain, who were left behind.

Distress calls from the ship were picked up by amateurs in Kenya, Australia, South Africa, Israel and Rhodesia, according to Bruce Johnson, assistant secretary of the International Amateur Radio Union, based in Newington, Conn.

Johnson, who was visiting East Africa, gave this account based on radio reports:

On Saturday the Alysse Maru developed engine trouble near the Maldive capital of Male. The crew was removing a piston from the engine when a Maldive vessel approached and offered help.

Once the Alysse Maru was towed to calmer waters, 300 islanders carrying axes and handguns swarmed aboard and after an exchange of gunfire locked the crew in the pilot house. The islanders then took about $60,000 worth of equipment and supplies, and took the medical officer, Thomas Wiemken, prisoner.

After the crew broke out of the pilot house they reassembled the engine. Capt. Kenneth Leonard and chief engineer Craig Williams then left the vessel in search of Wiemken.

Apparently Leonard and Williams became separated. Leonard, who carried a walkie-talkie, contacted the ship at midday Sunday, indicating he was calling under duress. He was not heard from again and the ship's crew steamed away from Male towards Diego Garcia, about 750 miles to the south.

The amateur radio operators notified the U.S. government and the Navy sent a reconnaisance plane from Diego Garcia. The aircraft dropped food and medicine to the crew and then began escorting it.

The radio amateurs gave the names of the seven crew members remaining on the ship as Kyomi Oda of Japan and six Americans: Frederick Neil Lockard, Oscar Leroy Hromatka, Nicholas Ogburn Laney, Gary Blumenthal, Gary Milton Ruehle, the radio officer, and his son, John Arthur Ruehle, 13, cabin boy. The younger Ruehle reportedly suffered a blow to the head during the takeover. But his condition was not known.

The Ruehles were said to have come from Mount Clemens, Mich. No hometowns were available for the others.

Lax job in reporting VD causing sterility in women

ATLANTA (AP)—Three little-known venereal diseases often unreported by public health agencies are becoming a major health problem, and one of them causes sterility in women, the national Center for Disease Control (CDC) warned Monday.

There are eight venereal diseases, of which gonorrhea and syphilis are by far the best-known. They and three others—chancroid, lymphogranuloma venereum, and granuloma inguinale—must be reported in most states.

But the remaining three need not be reported, and as a result, "most people do not realize that it is a sexually transmitted disease," said Dr. Paul Wiesner, director of the CDC's VD Control Division. Nor, he said, do they take the antibiotic tetracycline, which can treat venereal disease.

Of the three little-known diseases, nongonococcal urethritis and herpes, are the most serious, Wiesner said. The third, trichomoniasis, is mostly uncomfortable, he added.

Infections from nongonococcal urethritis that are occurring now, Wiesner said, "are creating new groups of women who will be sterile the rest of their lives."

"What we are looking at now are the larger numbers in the 1980s who will be robbed of the chance of motherhood because of these infections," he said. "The test tube baby will be their only solution."

"Nongonococcal urethritis affects men the same way that gonorrhea does, except that it is caused by a different bacteria—chlamydia," Wiesner said. That bacteria, he said, "is the most common cause of eye infection in newborn babies and it is the most common cause of pneumonia in infants."

UFM 'spring fever' soars

People are ready to get out of their living rooms, at least that's the way staffers for Unversity For Man (UFM) account for the increase in this spring's class enrollment.

"People are just so sick of this weather that they're psyched and ready to play in the dirt," Dave Ayers, UFM staff member, said.

In the 11 years that UFM has been in existence, enrollment has increased from 50 to 5,500 and class offerings have risen from seven to 240.

"More than half of those who enrolled were college, students," Ayers said. "This shows that they aren't getting all they want from classroom learning. UFM classes provide expansion in areas students want to learn about without the hassle of tuition and grades."

Class section with the greatest enrollment are: crafts, with almost 1,500; earth courses, with 1,000; fine arts, with 900; community, with an enrollment of 675; and skills, with an enrollment of more than 500.

The most popular crafts class was the quilting series; Self-Sufficient Backyard and Equestrian Care were the favorites in the Earth section; Disco Dance and Clog Dancing dominated fine arts; Rural Village Film Series, Students for Political Awareness and Colloquia on Human Survial were the favored classes in the community section; Beginning Typing and Auto Communications were favoites in the skills section.

Summer and winter, join for graduation

Summer 1979 graduates must notify their dean's office by Friday if they intend to take part in commencement exercises on May 18 and 19, according to Ellsworth Gerritz, dean of admissions and records.

Previously, only students completing graduation requirements by the end of the spring semester were allowed to go through exercises. This year prospective summer graduates can participate in the exercises in addition to summer 1978, December 1978 and May 1979 graduates.

This change in policy will allow more summer graduates to take part in graduation exercises, Gerritz said. Last year only 25-50 summer graduates returned to participate, he said.

The new Iran: For some, the long struggle is over; for others, oppression looms ahead

By CHIRDZENDAN DAKA
Collegian Reporter

With the recent victory of Ayatollah Khomeini in Iran, many Iranian students at K-State believe a long struggle has ended.

For other Iranian students here, the new regime still represents oppression of the Iranian people, although they said it is better than Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi's government.

Those satisfied with the present Iranian government identify themselves as Moslems, whereas the others call themselves "revolutionists" and say the Moslems don't really want change in Iran.

"We are a country which has deep roots in our Islamic heritage. We believe in a lifestyle consistent with the teachings of Islam," said Nader Afzali, graduate in industrial engineering and a spokesman for the Moslem Students Association (MSA).

A SPOKESMAN for the Iranian Students' Association (ISA) of K-State said:

"We don't believe that government and religion should go together. It is undemocratic to impose one religion on the people. We feel that Moslems, Jews, Marxists—everyone—should be free to express their ideas and be represented in the new government."

These outlook differences among Iranian groups were suppressed while they fought the shah, the ISA spokesman said.

But now, Afzali said, the Iranian Marxists are becoming a problem for the Khomeini government. The Marxists opposed the shah because of their leftist political philosophy rather than on Islamic principles, he said.

AFZALI SAID most Iranian Moslems believe the Marxists groups contributed nothing to the revolutionary struggle and should be excluded from representation in the new government.

"At present the Marxists are such a tiny minority that there is no chance that they could gain support of the people," Afzali said.

"Minorities (non-Moslems) which engage in violent and disruptive tactics in an effort to gain power should be dealt with severely, because our country badly needs united efforts directed to reconstruction," he said.

The ISA spokesman said some Iranians believe the revolution has not been achieved and the present government is still oppressive.

"The revolution still continues," he said. "You know, as long as you oppress the people, they will react against it. We are not defending any faction. Many Iranians, including Jews and Christians, fought the shah and got killed."

He said the present government's promise to give everyone religious freedom cannot be sincere. The government has already indicated that the press will be censored and the government may oppress other institutions, including religion.

THE ISA SPOKESMAN said the minorities in Iran should not be considered insignificant.

"I don't consider the statistics important. I think this (union of church and state) is jungle rule; the big people eat the small people."

The ISA spokesman said the traditional faiths and beliefs, such as those of the Zoroastrians, an Iranian religion with a history dating back more than 2,500 years, are still adhered to by many Iranians and should neither be ignored nor suppressed.

The ISA spokesman said its members have respect for Khomeini, whom they call a patriarch.

"We would be dogmatic in saying that whatever Khomeini does is good, just because we know he is a good man. He is a human being and also liable to make mistakes."

THE FAITH these Iranians have in Khomeini unites them in at least one aspect. Despite differing opinions, they said they all want to go home as soon as possible.

"We want to finish (studies) and go home," the ISA spokesman said.

Afzali said the Moslems want their new government to work hard to make Iran "up to date," but not with the shah's methods.

"The kind of modernization which cost $20 billion in military hardware was not for the benefit of the masses," he said. "We need to develop to feed ourselves, to be more self-sufficient in agriculture and more diversified in industry and technology."

Regarding Iran's future relations with other countries, including the sale of oil, an Iranian student said he hopes Iran will remain neutral.

"We need money the oil will fetch us for the development we have to carry out. We can't hold it back," he said.

The ISA spokesman said there will probably not be any more demonstrations by Iranian students in the U.S. He said the students were only trying to let Americans know they wanted no more foreign interference in Iranian affairs.

The Iranians will now fight only in Iran, he said.

Chinese capture border city; casualties rise on both sides

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—Striking behind a heavy artillery barrage, Chinese troops Tuesday captured the big Vietnamese border town of Lao Cai, but Vietnamese defenders routed some Chinese units elsewhere in the mountainous border country, according to reports in Bangkok and Hanoi.

The Soviet news agency Tass, in a dispatch from Hanoi, reported the fall of Lao Cai, 175 miles northwest of the Vietnamese capital.

Thai intelligence sources in Bangkok said the Chinese had thrust as far as 10 miles into Vietnam, four miles beyond their deepest penetration reported Monday. Vietnam's U.N. ambassador said in New York the invaders had advanced 12 miles into Vietnam.

Hanoi claimed Peking's troops were resorting to chemical warfare, firing shells filled with "toxic substances."

Vietnamese U.N. Ambassador Ha Van Lau said in New York that Hanoi's forces had killed 5,000 Chinese soldiers in the first three days of the four-day-old invasion, including 1,500 killed in heavy fighting Monday.

VIETNAM HAS not reported its own casualties, but the Thai sources said Vietnam has suffered more casualties than the Chinese. Both casualty figures and battle reports have been difficult to verify independently.

As battles raged along the 450-mile Chinese-Vietnamese frontier, there was a flurry of reports that the Chinese were withdrawing or about to withdraw.

Most reports centered on what the dean of the diplomatic corps in Peking, Ambassador Elie Boustany of Lebanon, was told in a meeting with a Chinese Deputy Foreign Minister Ho Ying.

But Boustany told The Associated Press in New York by telephone that Ho did not discuss "military information" with him, but merely reaffirmed that the invasion was a limited operation to "teach a lesson" to Hanoi and that China would not hold on to any Vietnamese territory.

The Chinese have not said when they will pull their troops back across the border.

The Yugoslav news agency Tanjug, quoting Chinese sources in Peking, said the Chinese plan a withdrawal with no preconditions. China will not link its withdrawal with a pull-out of Vietnamese troops from Cambodia, the sources reportedly said.

Settling the score: Iranian generals shot

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—The revolutionary government settled more scores with its enemies Tuesday by executing four more generals of the old regime, but it faced a fresh challenge from Marxist guerrillas who have called a protest march to demand more say in how to run Iran.

Meanwhile, in an Atlanta speech, President Carter warned the Soviet Union that any interference in Iran "will have serious consequences and affect our broader relations with them."

Iran's foreign ministry officials issued a statement Tuesday vowing to hound exiled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi until he can be brought back to Iran for trial. The Tehran newspaper Ettelaat reported a committee had been formed to kidnap the exiled monarch.

Khomeini aides brought out three men they said were the shah's ex-bodyguards, who told reporters they were willing to help in the abduction. The shah has been in Morocco since shortly after leaving Iran Jan. 16.

The four generals were executed by firing squad at 2 a.m. on the roof of Khomeini's headquarters, five days after four other generals were shot. The latest victims of the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary tribunal included Gen. Parvis Amin Afshar, the former commander of the shah's elite Imperial Guard.

City ponders drainage problem

Swimming pool project resurfaces

By LARRY RIBORDY
Collegian Reporter

Treatment of a drainage problem near the city's sewage treatment plant, the use of concrete instead of asphalt on an access road, and improvement of the swimming pool in City Park were discussed during last night's city commission meeting.

Commissioners Henry Otto III and Terry Glasscock were absent from the meeting.

The commissioners considered authorizing the mayor and city clerk to execute an agreement with the Carlson family, owners of a tract adjacent to the waste water treatment plant, providing for implementing a plan to eliminate the ground water drainage problem.

City Attorney William Frost said this is a one-shot thing and some engineerinng expertise would be used to try and correct the problem. He said it would take some land leveling and there would be no obligation by the city afterwards.

Commission members discussed the first change on the Flint Hills Shelter and Maintenance Building project. The order will amend the specifications by changing pavement types on the access drive from asphalt to concrete and involves no price change in the contract. City Manager Don Harmon said the concrete substitute was perfectly acceptable.

THE COMMISSION considered authorizing the mayor and city clerk to execute a contract with Larkin and Associates, a Kansas City firm, for preparation of plans and specifications for the City Park pool project and the approval of the contract be made subject to grant approval.

The employment of a local architect was discussed and it was proposed that it be a requirement. Wallace Beasley of Larkin and Associates said their firm had planned use in employing a local architect and the planning was "pretty well down the road."

The second and final reading of an ordinance anexing certain property owned by Fred Bammes located north of Knox Lane and west of Hall's Landing. The ordinance was adopted.

A related item discussed was the second reading of an ordinance zoning the tract of land annexed. The zoning change would change the land from G-1 county general agriculture to R-2 two-resident family residential. The ordinance was approved.

Bruce McCallum, director of services, explained the yearly removal of diseased Dutch Elm trees within the city limits. He said there has been good cooperation from residents to have their diseased trees removed.

U.S. wants pact despite Soviet actions

ATLANTA—President Carter declared Tuesday that the turmoil in Iran and Southeast Asia demonstrates dramatically the need for a new U.S.-Soviet arms treaty, and vowed he will not let peripheral issues stand in the way of agreement on the pact.

In a major pitch for the nearly complete strategic arms limitation treaty, Carter again cautioned the Russians against meddling in Iran's internal strife or taking actions that would widen the conflict between China and Vietnam. However, the president stressed that he will press for agreement on the new arms pact—SALT II—despite these trouble spots.

"It is in our national interest to pursue it even as we continue competition with the Soviet Union elsewhere in the world," Carter told a friendly audience at the Georgia Institute of Technology in his home state.

And he told the audience of some 7,000 people that the emerging SALT II accord "will make the world safer and more secure."

Farmers tow D.C. out of snowdrift

WASHINGTON—Washingtonians who complained for two weeks when protesting farmers tied up traffic with "tractorcades" turned to the farmers for help when snow stopped the capital cold.

And with nearly 19 inches of new snow on the ground, members of the American Agriculture movement seized the opportunity to mend their battered public relations image.

Farmers in tractors took a pregnant woman to a hospital. They delivered a patient who needed kidney dialysis to a hospital, then found the nurse who could run the dialysis machine. They also carried medicine to hospitals, cleared hospital parking lots and engaged in dozens of other good samaritan missions.

Other farmers pulled police cruisers and buses full of passengers from snowbanks and carried medicine to old people for a drug firm unable to make its normal deliveries.

"We could do a lot more if the police would let us," grain farmer Lee Scheufler of Sterling said in an interview Tuesday.

He said the police screened telephone calls for help and decided which to respond to. Police insisted on having an officer in the cab of every tractor that went out, Scheufler said.

"I have the feeling the policemen are just a little jealous that they haven't been able to handle the problem themselves," Scheufler said.

Trucker pleads innocent to killing

SALINA—A Massachusetts truck driver pleaded innocent Tuesday at his arraignment on charges of first-degree murder, attempted kidnapping and attempted rape of an 18-year-old Abilene woman.

John Costa, 23, of South Dartmouth, Mass., is expected to go to trial next month before Saline County District Court Judge Raymond Haggart.

Costa is charged with the Jan. 6 death of Marilyn Butcher. She was crushed beneath the wheels of a tractor-trailer truck as it pulled from an Interstate 70 rest stop between Salina and Abilene.

Costa was later stopped near Junction City and arrested. He is being held on $200,000 bond.

Parades march out of Mardi Gras

NEW ORLEANS—Sponsors pulled all remaining Mardi Gras and Carnival parades out of the city Tuesday, saying they would not permit the festival to remain the hostage of striking police.

There were plans to move some of the 18 remaining parades to the suburbs, but the biggest—including the fanciest ones that would have rolled on Feb. 27, Mardi Gras—appeared doomed unless the strike is settled.

"Devastating," said a spokesman for one parade, who asked not to be identified. "It's devastating to the economy."

Captains of the private social "krewes," or crews, that sponsor the parades said: "We are not going to let Mardi Gras be held hostage by the Teamsters."

The police are members of Teamsters Local 253.

Mardi Gras is a $50 million industry in New Orleans. Police union spokesman have called the festival "our four aces" in seeking to wring concessions from the city.

"It was a needed thing," the parade spokesman said of the "krewes' decision. "...They were holding Mardi Gras hostage. Well, we've taken the ransom."

It was only the seventh time that the parades have been canceled, and the first time since the Korean War. A parade organizer said the events could be rescheduled within 24 hours if the strike ends.

Weather

Howdy, Doody. Welcome back to the Manhattan marshlands. Today will be another sloppy, grungy day as light rain is expected throughout the day. Temperatures will reach into the upper 40s, so more snow will be melting into the streets. Drizzle should continue into Thursday. Highs Thursday will be in the 40s.

'No place for procrastination:' Begin, Sadat to Camp David

WASHINGTON (AP)—Egypt and Israel open another round of secret peace negotiations Wednesday at snow-covered Camp David, with prospects for completing a Mideast peace treaty complicated by recent events in Iran.

On the eve of the talks, Egypt warned Israel that the "situation in the region is dangerously tense" and urged the Israelis to realize that a comprehensive peace settlement is vital.

"There is no place left for maneuvering and procrastination," the government-run Cairo radio said in a news commentary entitled "peace at the Camp David table again."

"There can be no peace in the Middle East unless Palestinian autonomy is settled. And, there shall be no peace in the region until Israel gives back the Egyptian Sinai, the Syrian Golan, and the Jordanian West Bank," the radio said.

THE SHIFT of Iran from a somewhat neutral observer to an ardent supporter of the Palestinians and opponent of Israel is likely to make Secretary of State Cyrus Vance's job even more difficult.

Vance will join Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil and Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan at the presidential retreat Wednesday after they stay overnight in the isolated setting that President Carter believes may facilitate an agreement.

The Palestinian issue is the chief stumbling block to completing the treaty sketched out at Camp David last September by Carter in a summit meeting with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin.

Egyptian sources expect the rise to power in Iran of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and the cutting of ties and oil links with Israel to strengthen Egypt's hand in the negotiations. The theory is that the United States, concerned about growing instability in the strategically important, oil-rich region, will exert additional pressure on Israel to yield to Egyptian demands.

Vance's meeting with Khalil and Dayan will be their first since a session in Brussels in December failed to break the deadlock that has stalled completion of a treaty.

Student interest vital in improving Farrell

A week ago, K-State students spoke in what was perhaps the loudest voice ever heard at this university.

The students will have their fieldhouse. In spite of all the controversy, students let it be known that a fieldhouse was worth going out, fighting for and voting for.

The point is: Once students decided they wanted something, they went out and got it.

With new student representatives getting on their feet, now is the time to examine K-State's priorities and make those priorities known to their representatives. Fight for them with the vigor witnessed last week.

Student government is here to serve the students. It is the duty of the students to make their needs known and oversee student government in solving the problems.

There is a great need to boost funding for the library, and bring Farrell up to Big 8 standards. The student Library Task Force has laid the groun'work by citing weak points, all that is needed is student support.

Make this the priority. Fight for it. And, let Student Governing Association (SGA) know.

Greg Musil, student body president-elect, has a rare opportunity to do great things for K-State. It is his choice.

But, he needs the support of the students to help him make the choices which will reflect their wants—support equal to that given Sam Brownback on the fieldhouse referendum.

The election last week proved students get what they want—when they want it bad enough.

Prove to Musil that students want a dry library—one which is conducive to learning—and then go get it.

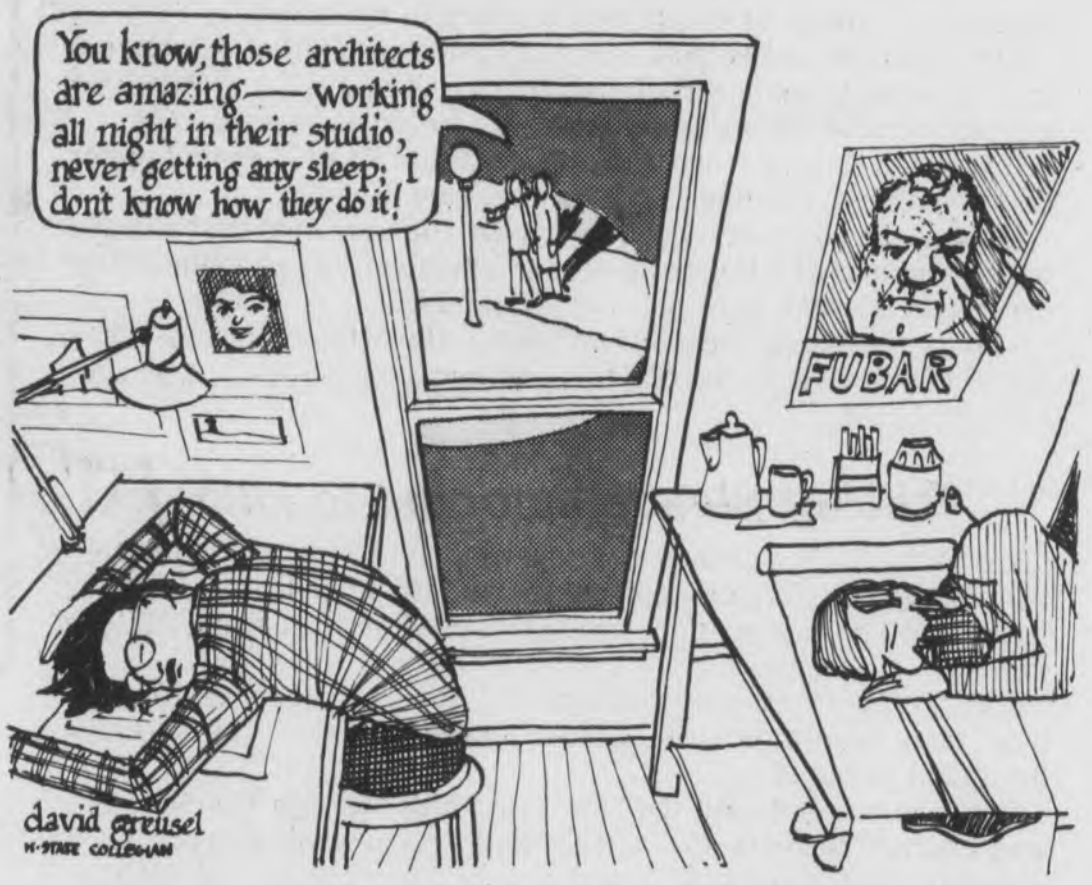
High views of collegiate life

From high atop Kedzie our valiant commentator watches the daily wrigglings of the commoners;

The exalted president stalking regally to his walnut-covered castle, the bright-eyed student circling, buzzard-like, in a predatory search for the ever-elusive parking stall, the wizened professor plotting his black scenerio for doom soon to be foistered upon his hapless charges.

Strange are the ways of K-State in this kingdom of academia, just a short shuffleboard shove from beautiful, scenic Aggieville. "Look, Martha, college students! Stand over there next to the tall, dumb-looking one and let me take a picture. Boy, this is gonna wow them in Nebo."

Life is simple here. Strange, but simple. It is a life of simple pressures—classes, tests, parties and pimples. Any resemblance between life at K-State and the "real world" is only coincidental, please note.



Life is measured in semesters and tests, mid-terms, finals, inter-session, these terms take the place of years, days and months. "What time do you have? Hey it's half-past mid-term or a quarter to finals."

There are no people, only students, faculty and non-student personnel.

The world of K-State is that world of dreams which allows no one under the age of 12 to wander over its hills and dales, any short people on campus are naturally assumed to be trolls, dwarfs or midgets.

Manhattanites live in the splendor of the plantation owners of the past, gardeners, chauffers, baby-sitters willing to sell their services at wages reminiscent of the immigrant Irish domestic.

Yes, we live in the void and the world of reality surrounds us. Oh Lord, let me stay a senior for the rest of my days, and live in the house of academia forever, Amen.

Wedding bell blues...

Well, I went home again last weekend. You all remember my house, don't you? It's the one with the five dogs, two horses and lone cat; not to mention my parents and, of course, my kid sister.

It seems every time I've gone home for the last two semesters something weird has happened. First my sister tried to get me married off, then came Thanksgiving with all my rather unusual relatives. This time was like a trip to the Twilight Zone.

She's at it again. My sister, I mean. She still wants me to get married so she can have a good looking brother-in-law. So, while I was home, she dragged me to (are you ready for this one?) A BRIDAL FAIR.

At first I thought it was something like a horse show and said I didn't want to go (what would I do with a bridle?), but she explained it wasn't that at all. It was for prospective brides.

"All right, Judi, just what are you trying to do?" I said. "You know I'm not getting married and if you're trying to set me up, I think you're a little off target. These things are for women, there aren't going to be any men there."

SHE TOLD ME it would be fun; besides, if I went and saw how happy and excited the rest of the women were, maybe I would want to get married too.

I said I didn't think so, but she had me strapped in the car with the door locked by that time and there wasn't much I could do.

Off we went to the local department store and went up five flights of stairs to the bridal boutique. (Most brides are evidently younger than I am or they'd all be dead by the time they got to the top floor.)

Once there, Judi proceeded to register me for the door prize. I told her not to, but she always has been bigger than me and I didn't want a Juliet cap veil shoved down my throat.

We were escorted to our chairs by some goon in a banana green tux who walked like King Kong with a limp. I think he owned the store or something.

Our hostess for the fashion show was an ancient relic (my grandmother has to be younger than she was and Grandma is 85) in a bright fuchsia mother-of-the-bride gown. I think she borrowed it from the bride of Frankenstein.

DURING THE show, it was all I could do to keep from losing my lunch. The narrative contained more saccharin than a can of Tab. I'm surprised it wasn't banned by the FDA.

"Notice how the train cascades tenderly down the back of the gown and lovingly caresses the floor," our lady in fuchsia gushed.

Then it was photo time. A short man who looked like a barrel with legs attached gave us a lecture on how to preserve our "precious, perishable memories" by having his studio take our wedding pictures.

By this time I was ready to leave, but something held me back. I think it must have been Judi threatening to break my arm if I tried to walk out.

At last came the moment we'd all waited for (no, it wasn't over yet). They drew the name of the winner of the door prize. I was so excited I almost woke up.

I thought things were bad before, but the worst was yet to come.

Anybody want to buy a set of his and hers waterbed hammocks with attached mirrors?

Didn't think so.

Conservatory needs support

Editor,

The recent break-in at the Conservatory on Feb. 7 and the resulting freezing temperatures that destroyed several thousand dollars worth of foliage plants was a severe loss to the University.

It was discouraging and frustrating to see many hours of work and valuable plants lost by such a needless act. Fortunately, the west section plants were not damaged.

The Conservatory was moved in 1977-78 to provide room for the departments of education and psychology's new building. No operational budget or funds exist to replant the Conservatory this fiscal year. It will require $3,000 to replace plant materials and wire an alarm system.

In the past week, the response from K-State students and staff have been encouraging. A special Conservatory fund has been established by the Department of Horticulture. Donations have already exceeded $150. Many students have volunteered their services to help replant the central section of the Conservatory if funds become available to purchase plants. Your continued support of the Conservatory through financial contributions and labor will be appreciated.

The Conservatory will be open from 2:30 to 5:00 Monday through Thursday for the remainder of the semester. Special tours and use of the Conservatory can be arranged by calling 532-6190 during the above mentioned times.

Carlin vetos limit on expenditure increases

TOPEKA (AP)—Gov. John Carlin disclosed Tuesday he is vetoing a bill that would impose a 7 percent limit on annual increases in state expenditures, and said he is offering an alternative plan he considers more workable.

The Democratic governor said it is not too late in this session to approve his bill, if the lawmakers are serious about enacting legislation acceptable to him.

Carlin said he is convinced the people of the state understand he supports imposing spending limits on state government, but the bill sent to him was unacceptable. He doubted he has incurred any political liability in vetoing the measure.

Republican legislative leaders immediately accused Carlin of breaking faith with the people, claiming his campaign last year included a pledge to work for a spending lid.

Carlin said he wants a spending lid, just not this one.

"I think it'll be very disappointing to me if no spending lid is passed, because I think it's very important that we set the guidelines each session before we spend any money," the governor told a news conference when he announced the veto.

"I prefer to be optimistic. There is an indication of a softening on the House side, and there is growing support among Senate Democrats.

"I really have confidence the people understand what we're talking about. There is no question about it. The people of this state are very understanding."

HE SAID his proposal, which essentially is the same plan as offered by former Democratic Gov. Robert Docking early in this decade, would require the Legislature at the start of each session to determine the amount of state revenue available to spend, establish guidelines for spending it, and could impose an annual percentage limit on spending if it chose.

He said his veto message and his alternative bill both will go to the Legislature Wednesday.

The veto message goes first to the Senate, where a successful override vote is expected. Then it goes to the House, where Democrats are expected to have the necessary 42 votes to sustain the veto.

CARLIN SAID he was vetoing the measure sent him late last week for three basic reasons:

—It constricts too much the state's ability to provide property tax relief, because it would include under the 7 percent lid any new money put into school finance. At the same time, it puts no restrictions on new construction, a fact Carlin called irresponsible.

—It raises the prospect of a general tax increase as early as next session.

—It deals inadequately with supplemental appropriations. By including them under the lid, Carlin said, it would force the Legislature to artificially appropriate less money one session, then make it up the next in extra appropriations.

Carlin said his bill "provides procedural discipline for the legislative branch and rational consideration of the budget process by the full membership of the Legislature, so that fiscal decisions will not be made piecemeal in the last days of the session."

PRACTICE MAKES PERFECT...Mike Bodelson, K-State fireman and fifth year student in architecture, practices mouth-to-mouth resuscitation techniques for infants on a mannequin.

When fire threatens students lead the fight

By MARY BICHELMEYER
Collegian Reporter

A siren wails throughout the room. The four firemen on duty grab their equipment and rush to the vintage fire engine waiting below.

It is just past midnight when the men return to their rooms. The small automobile fire didn't take long to put out. They return to what they were doing before they were interrupted. Two go back to their books, and two go back to their beds so they will be awake for their classes in the morning. These men are students by day and firemen by night.

Eight K-State students are employed by the University as part-time firefighters. They live in the Physical Plant and are paid for working 20 to 30 hours a week.

"The students are on duty from 5 p.m. to 8 a.m. Monday through Friday and are put on 24-hour shifts during the weekends," Frank Duncan, head of the campus fire department, said.

"These men work and live together every day, 365 days a year, including holidays," Duncan said. "I know sometimes they get claustrophobia. There is only a certain amount of time you can spend in one place.

"The worst part about it is on weekends or holidays," said Doug McQuillan, student firefighter and junior in architecture. "This year I couldn't go home for Christmas or New Year's.

"It is a good job though. Since I have to stay home, it forces me to study.

"If I sleep though a class because of a fire the night before my teachers usually understand," Rick Luck, junior in architectural engineering, said; "but that doesn't happen too often.

"The job has its drawbacks just like everything else does, but it has been an excellent opportunity for me," Luck said. "It helps me get through school financially and is an invaluable experience.

"It's different, and a lot of people chuckle when I tell them what I do, but I like it," he said.

Firefighters ...

are on duty, Duncan said.

Duncan, who has been a firefighter for 13 years, said his part-time job at the University consists of supervision and training of the campus firefighters.

"My education has been directed toward training firemen," he said. "I put a lot of emphasis on training. That is my strong point. I think it is the best way to keep a fire department with as few runs as we have in good operating order."

Part of the training experience for the students includes a weekly session consisting of classroom learning or field experience. One of the classroom experiences Duncan emphasizes is the course offered at Lafene Health Center dealing with Cardiopulmonary Resuscitation (CPR).

"Of the nine student firefighters, six have been certified in CPR," Duncan said.

"CPR is most effective in the first few minutes after the occurrence of a heart attack," he said; "that's one reason why it's important for firemen to have this training. You just can't wait for the ambulance."

The students also attend the Kansas State Fire School which is held in Topeka each year.

"A lot of the emphasis in the school is put on rescue. Life safety takes precedence over the fire," Duncan said. "Our only problem is lack of equipment. We can handle a one or two-room fire easily if we get there on time, but for a major fire we need more manpower and equipment."

The campus fire department consists of one fire engine, a 1947 Ford "class A" pumper, and the necessary equipment to go with it. The pump can pump up to 500 gallons per minute.

Duncan said the National Fire Protection Association recommends a response of two engines and an aerial ladder truck to structural fires.

"If we respond with our one engine we are short equipment," Duncan said. "The only effective way for us to handle a major fire is with the help we receive from the Manhattan Fire Department.

"The Manhattan department now has a verbal agreement with us to send one manned truck to a major fire, but their first concern is with the people and property of the city," Duncan said.

K-State does not pay taxes to the city of Manhattan, so the fire department does not have legal committment to the campus.

"With the fires we have had lately, we especially appreciate their help," Duncan said. "Their cooperation has been outstanding."

Although the Manhattan department has been available for the larger fires, most of the runs made by the campus department are actually preventive measures.

Two fires in January destroyed an animal resource barn and a turkey farm barn. Over the past 50 years, six other K-State buildings have been hit with major fires. Denison Hall was destroyed in 1934; in 1946, the Veterinary Hospital and Burt Hall were damaged by fire; the east wing of Waters Hall burned in 1955; K-State Auditorium was destroyed in 1957, and Nichols Gymnasium fell victim to arson in 1968.

UPC may slump into red if Wildcats outdraw concert

Unless 2,233 more tickets are sold for the Marshall Tucker Band Concert this Saturday, the Union Pogram Council (UPC) will lose money in the venture.

Seventy percent of the usable seats at Ahearn Field House must be sold for UPC to make a profit, but so far only 4,500 tickets have been sold, said Myron Molzen, UPC concert coordinator.

Molzen, senior in horticulture, said one reason the tickets have not sold may be becuase of the conflicting time slot with the championship game with Oklahoma.

Because the game is being televised, however, game time has been changed to the afternoon. Molzen said he hopes ticket sales will increase because of the time change.

"Also, Firefall's (the other band performing) latest album just went platinum. These are two good selling points," Molzen said.

Approximately $50,000 is spent for each concert produced at K-State, depending on the cost of the band, and the cost of setting up the concert.

"I'd hate to say exactly how much it costs to put a concert on. It's kind of a misconception," Molzen said.

The costs are divided between the price of a stage, sound and lights, chair rental and limousine service.

"Much of the money goes to the physical plant for things like loading and unloading the band, settng up, wood for risers, spot light platforms and ushers, Molzen said.

"Marshall Tucker Band plays country rock music, and according to a survey two years ago, that's what the students want to hear," he said.

Witnesses recall tacky treatment

TOPEKA (AP)—Big power companies were portrayed by a succession of witnesses before a House committee hearing Tuesday as being callous toward landowners' rights and feelings when they decide to take land to build power lines.

Among those witnesses was a Wabaunsee County farmer, who said a big Topeka utility once killed some of his trees and threatened his crops by spraying to kill weeds under its power line.

"I'm aware that power lines have to go through, but shouldn't they treat the individuals with fairness and decency and honesty?" asked Stephen Anderson. "I don't think I've been treated that way."

Anderson, 38, who said he was born and has farmed southwest of Alma all his life, appeared before the House Energy and Natural Resources Committee to support a bill requiring notification of landowners and hearings before electric transmission lines could be built in Kansas.

Ron Klatasky of Manhattan, representing the Kansas chapter of the National Audubon Society, said the way it now is, "Landowners don't find out until the materials are there and the machines are starting to roll."

KLATASKY, Ivan Wyatt of the Kansas Farmers Union and Bill Browning of the Kansas Grassroots Association were also among those testifying in support of a bill introduced by Rep. Robert Miller (R-Wellington) chairman of the committee.

Miller told his panel he introduced the legislation because, "If there is a hearing process where the landowners can be heard, I think it will relieve a lot of the pressure. I'm trying to do something before the situation explodes."

Anderson, who wore his red American Agriculture Movement cap, festooned with buttons proclaiming his participation in AAM tractorcades to Topeka, stole the show with a simple, yet almost emotional recitation of his experiences with power lines running parallel to his land.

He also said he fears plans by Kansas Power and Light Co. to build a new transmission line from the Jeffrey Energy Center near St. Marys to Council Grove may cut through his land, although KPL has not revealed its exact proposed route.

Anderson, who said he represented only himself, his wife and their four children, said he appeared because there is talk the new power line might cut across his land.

He said eight years ago a crew was sent out to clear brush and weeds from beneath a KPL power line which runs parallel to his property and comes within about 200 yards of his home.

That crew apparently didn't like the hot work on the ground, and left. The next day, Anderson related, an airplane sprayed along the power line to kill the brush and weeds.

That spray killed oak and walnut trees on his land, Anderson said, and threatened his crops and damaged a portion of them.

It might not be Rembrandt, but...

You may not have the genius of Rembrandt, but those old art projects may be money in the bank if you enter the art department's annual Undergraduate Student Comprehensive Art Exhibition Feb. 23 to March 9 in the Union Gallery.

"It's open to any student who's taken any courses in art, but it has to be work done in a K-State art course or under supervision of an art instructor," Jerrold Maddox, head of the art department, said.

Maddox said each student may submit two entries, representing any art medium. Entries must be submitted from 5 to 7 p.m., Feb. 23, in the Union Sunflower Room. Exhibited work will be returned from 5 to 7 p.m. March 9.

The exhibits will be judged by Robert Russell from Kansas State College, Pittsburg. Cash awards will be given for the best freshman, sophomore, junior and senior entries, and for best in show. Two honorable mention awards also will be given.

Drink, sleep and be slimmer; researchers evaluate products

By CAROLE SPEER
Collegian Reporter

Does your coffee cup seem unbearably heavy in the morning?

Do you spend sleepless nights because your pillow is too hard or soft?

Do you pick clothing with vertical stripes so you'll look slimmer?

These products were used for a research project conducted by three K-State graduate students. Their reseach was to test the accuracy of consumer knowledge on the products.

According to Corwin Bennett, professor in industrial engineering, the difference between a consumer of retail products and a buyer of industrial products is that the consumer is ignorant.

"The consumer buys what looks good," Bennett said. "Many of the consumers aren't satisfied with the product, but the companies don't have feedback from the consumer.

According to Bennett, if manufacturers use the information gained in these experiments, consumers will be able to purchase improved products.

In an experiment conducted by Kwangsun Yon, graduate in industrial engineering, students rated their discomfort from fatigue and heat while holding coffee cups.

Eighteen students from Moore Hall held 12 cups of different shapes and sizes for 20 seconds each. They rated the discomfort felt form fatigue and heat on a scale of intolerable to good.

"I conducted this test to use the results for Asian people," Yoon said. "The people in America have larger hands and also use larger cups, but the basis for the results is the same for all people."

In another test, 23 persons found the amount of stuffing inside a pillow doesn't determine how comfortable the pillow will be.

Eight pillows were used in this test, Bennett said. Each pillow was of the same size and shape, but contained varied amounts of stuffing.

The judges briefly rested on each pillow and then rated it on a comfort scale ranging from "much too soft" to "much too hard."

Another experiment tested the hypothesis that clothing with vertical stripes makes the wearer appear taller and slimmer.

The theory was verified when two persons stood in front of 546 General Psychology students for three minutes.

Of the two subjects, one wore clothing with vertical strips of adhesive and the other wore horizontal strips.

Although most students overestimated the weight of the opposite sex and underestimated the weight of their own sex, the largest error in estimates was by men, Bennett said.

According to Bennett, the test results have not been sent to any specific company, but he said he feels the information could help industrial producers improve their products.

Academy Award nominations to veterans Bergman, Olivier

HOLLYWOOD (AP)—Veteran Oscar winners Ingrid Bergman and Sir Laurence Olivier were nominated for Academy Awards on Tuesday, while two films inspired by the Vietnam War, "The Deer Hunter" and "Coming Home," received a total of 17 nominations.

Nine nominations went to "The Deer Hunter," tied with the fantasy "Heaven Can Wait" for the most nominations. "Coming Home" scored in eight categories, followed by "Midnight Express" with six and "Interiors" with five.

The nominees for the 51st annual awards the Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences will be voted on by the academy's 3,600 voting members, who will start screening the nominated films Saturday.

The awards are to be presented April 9 in a ceremony televised nationally by ABC from the Los Angeles Music Center.

Miss Bergman won her seventh nomination for her role as Liv Ullmann's pianist mother in Ingmar Bergman's "Autumn Sonata." Twice a winner as best actress and once as supporting actress, she was nominated for best actress of 1978, along with Ellen Burstyn for "Same Time, Next Year"; Jill Clayburgh for "An Unmarried Woman"; Jane Fonda for "Coming Home"; and Geraldine Page for "Interiors."

OLIVIER HAS been nominated 11 times, tying with Katharine Hepburn for the academy record for performers. This year he has not only been nominated as best actor for his Nazi-hunting role in "The Boys from Brazil," the academy has also voted him a special Oscar for his film achievements. He won the Oscar for his performance as Hamlet in 1948, as well as an honorary award for "Henry V" in 1946.

Others nominated Tuesday for best actor: Gary Busey for "The Buddy Holly Story"; Robert De Niro for "The Deer Hunter"; Warren Beatty for "Heaven Can Wait"; and Jon Voight for "Coming Home."

Nominees for best picture: "Coming Home," "The Deer Hunter," "Heaven Can Wait," "Midnight Express" and "An Unmarried Woman." Missing was "Days of Heaven," which several critics picked as best film of 1978; it was mentioned only in four lesser categories.

The supporting actor nominees: Bruce Dern, "Coming Home"; Richard Farnsworth, "Comes a Horseman"; John Hurt, "Midnight Express"; Christopher Walken, "The Deer Hunter"; and Jack Warden, "Heaven Can Wait." For all but Warden it was a first nomination.

Maggie Smith, winner as best actress for "The Prime of Miss Jean Brodie" in 1969, was nominated as supporting actress in "California Suite." Others: Dyan Cannon, "Heaven Can Wait"; Penelope Milford, "Coming Home"; Maureen Stapleton, "Interiors"; and Meryl Streep, "The Deer Hunter."

Last year's winning director, Woody Allen, is in the running again with his heavily dramatic "Interiors." Also nominated for direction: Hal Ashby, "Coming Home"; Michael Cimino, "The Deer Hunter"; Warren Beatty and Buck Henry, "Heaven Can Wait"; and Alan Parker, "Midnight Express."

Blue Key awards students' creative efforts and talents

Creativity may pay off in scholarship for any K-State student willing to write up a proposal of their creative work.

Every year the Blue Key National Honor Fraternity awards a total of $500 to a few selected undergraduates for their creative talents.

To apply for the award students must submit a proposal of creative work to Deb Nicklaus, Blue Key scholarship chairman by Friday in Anderson 104.

"In the past we've had such things presented as a unique dance, poetry, a weaving, a new management concept and a car built by the applicant," Nicklaus said.

The submitted work can be from any field or subject matter, but it must not be part of a class project or assignment, she said.

Richard Mistler and Thomas Mistler, members of Blue Key in 1962 and 1963, respectively, established the creativity awards in 1974 along with their father, Alvin Mistler, a 1936 K-State graduate.

"They felt that there was a need to stimulate creativity at K-State and that this creativity should be awarded," Nicklaus said.

The deadline for submitted complete work will be March 23, and the winners will be designated in the first week of April.

"Usually the award money is divided between two winners, but sometimes there has only been one winner and other times as many as three," Nicklaus said.

Professors from various departments are chosen to select the winning presentations, she said.

"One of the reasons that the proposals are due prior to the actual work, is that it gives us a chance to determine from which departments the professors should be chosen," Nicklaus said.

"Last year one of the recipients of the award performed a dance as her creative talent, and another year a vet student presented a new method of surgery," Nicklaus said.

'Cats enter Missouri clash with Big 8 title chances

The scrappy K-State Wildcats (8-4), with a chance to capture a share of the Big 8 championship, play Missouri at 7:35 tonight in Ahearn Field House.

Victories tonight over the Tigers and Saturday over Oklahoma (9-3) would at least tie K-State with the Sooners for first place, and if Iowa State can beat Oklahoma tonight, the Wildcats will have a chance to play for the outright championship.

The 'Cats have won five in a row, including a 58-56 win over Kansas Saturday. Oklahoma has led the conference all season.

Missouri's young Tigers, who led the Big 8 after the first few games, have fallen to 6-6. They are in a three-team tie for third place with KU and Nebraska.

Missouri will be fighting for a home-court berth in the first round of the Big 8 post-season tournament. Only the top four teams play at home next Tuesday.

In the first meeting between Missouri and K-State this year, the Wildcats won the seventh-place game in the Big 8 Holiday Tournament.

In Columbia, the Tigers beat K-State 83-79 as Missouri guards Larry Drew and Steve Wallace combined for 38 points.

THE 'CATS are still led by Rolando Blackman's 17-point average, and freshman Ed Nealy has been playing well lately, averaging more than 11 rebounds in the 'Cats last four games. He's K-State's leading rebounder with 199.

Moses may enter $1 million promised land

LANDOVER, Md. (AP)—Moses Malone, who bypassed college basketball after high school five years ago, could become pro sports' first salaried $1 million-a-year player.

Malone, 6-10 center for the Houston Rockets, is on the verge of being the next dominant force in the NBA. And his contract expires after next season.

To have a talent like Malone available as a free agent is an opportunity league owners should greet with open checkbooks. A bidding battle is expected that will make baseball's just-concluded war over Pete Rose seem tame by comparison.

Malone told several Washington Bullets during their last trip to Houston that he would relish playing in Washington, the nearest franchise to his home in Petersburg, Va.

And, according to the Washington Post, he would enjoy playing on a fast-break team as opposed to the more deliberate style of the Rockets.

FOLLOWERS of Malone are hardly surprised about his progression to greatness, remembering that as a senior in high school he was considered a legend with numerous basketball skills.

But with no college background and the publicity that goes with it, only now are his growing accomplishments being appreciated by a growing audience.

And the best is yet to come.

"I've always been a player," he told the Post in a recent interview. "People just talk about my rebounding, but I don't buy that, no way. I'm a player. I'm a scorer. Why don't they talk about my scoring, too?"

At 24, Malone has reached "60 percent of his potential," according to Houston Coach Tom Nissalke. "He is getting better every season. I don't know how good he can be."

Even a partially mature Malone can be something to behold. During one 11-game stretch a month ago he averaged 19.8 rebounds and 26 points while shooting 59 percent. Those are the heavenly statistics that lead to millionaire contracts.

"When you play against Moses," said Washington Bullets Mitch Kupchak, "you have to be looking at him every second. He probably is the hardest guy for me to play. He'll go after everything, which means you never relax."

Great Bend back signs letter-of-intent

K-State got another victory over KU Tuesday as Wildcat football coach Jim Dickey announced the signing of consensus all-state fullback Dan Sparks of Great Bend.

K-State and KU have been battling for Sparks' signature for several days, as he was considered one of the state's seven blue-chip football prospects.

The 6-0, 210-pound Sparks was called "the most powerful back in the state" by Dickey.

Tourney tickets still available

Student tickets for K-State's first-round game in the Big 8 postseason tournament are still available in the KSU Athletic Ticket Office in Ahearn Field House.

The 'Cats will play their first-round game in Ahearn next Tuesday.

Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds said student tickets, which cost $2 with a current fee card, are selling better than last year, but some are still available.

Winter kill thins bird population

Severe weather this winter will cause an unusually large decrease in upland game populations, but a mild spring could bring another good fall hunting season.

"The (Upland Game) winter kill will undoubtedly be greater this year," said Ben Brown, assistant professor of wildlife ecology. Brown wouldn't predict what fall populations might be like based on winter death rates.

The animal's metabolic demands are greater in the winter because of the cold temperatures, Brown said.

"They have to burn food to keep warm, is what it amounts to," he said.

If game birds can't get out and forage for a few days because of the weather, they burn body fat. Birds can burn about 20 percent of their body weight during severe weather and recover if food becomes available, Brown said.

SNOW-COVERED ground, however, makes it difficult for birds, especially quail, to find food.

"Quail don't scratch through the snow for food like pheasants," Robert Robel, professor of biology, said. For this reason, quail are more susceptible to severe weather, he said.

Of the quail that survive through the fall hunting season, Robel estimated that 40 to 50 percent of the birds die during the winter. He predicts the death rate to be as high as 60 percent this winter.

The pheasant and prairie chicken seem to be doing fine this year, Brown said.

"We're still seeing large flocks of prairie chickens on Ft. Riley," Brown said. "We had very high populations last fall. We'll probably lose a lot, but we'll have a lot going into spring.

"My feeling is that what happens during the spring breeding season is more important than what happens during the winter. "If we have a favorable spring, we could go into next fall with normal populations."

A GOOD spring with mild temperatures and ample moisture to provide good vegetative growth for cover is important, he said.

Rabbits and squirrels should fare pretty well this winter, too.

Rabbits can eat woody stems to satisfy their food requirements, no matter how deep the snowfall is, Brown said.

Last fall adequate food supplies and den trees were available to provide protection for squirrels.

Brown advised against feeding game birds during severe weather, unless the person is prepared to continue feedings until spring.

Feeding restricts the birds' movement; they hang around the feeding area when they should be out foraging for food, he said.

Brown suggested planning for birds' needs during the previous growing season by planting special plots of bird food and leaving the plants unharvested, or leaving outer rows of agricultural crops unharvested until the fall.

Senate approves periodic review of utility costs

TOPEKA (AP)—The Kansas Senate approved and sent to the House Tuesday bills which would require periodic state review of fuel adjustments made to customer bills by utilities and a $4.3 million appropriation for a new state historical museum west of Topeka.

The fuel adjustment review bill requires the Kansas Corporation Commission to make periodic field audits of utility company records pertaining to the automatic fuel cost escalator clause contained on utility bills to help utilities recoup unexpected increases in fuel costs.

Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita) sponsor of the bill, said the proposal would require the KCC to do more than simply make an in-office review of documents now supplied by utilities relating to the fuel adjustments to prevent overcharges on utility bills.

Generally, utility companies have not opposed the measure, saying they have nothing to hide in their assessment of unexpected fuel costs.

The Senate also passed, 26-10, an appropriations bill authorizing money for construction of a new state historical museum on state land west of Topeka.

The appropriation is the first of a three-part allocation for the project which is expected to total about $10 million.

The Senate also approved a bill requiring the state to gather and keep information on persons in the state who have diabetes.

The bill authorizes the state Department of Health and Environment to contract with a private firm to collect the information at a cost of $8,000 to $9,000.

Hein recommends new boat standards

TOPEKA (AP)—A Senate committee voted Tuesday to introduce legislation aimed at preventing a reoccurrence of the June 17, 1978, capsizing of the Whippoorwill showboat at Lake Pomona.

The bill, introduced at the request of Sen. Ron Hein (R-Topeka) would authorize the state Fish and Game Commission to adopt rules and regulations for safety standards on boats used for commercial purposes in the state.

The Whippoorwill, according to a report from the National Transportation Safety Board, had an estimated 200 to 400 gallons of water in one of its hull tanks at the time of the capsizing, which drowned 16 persons.

The state officially classed the capsizing of the boat an Act of God, because the boat appeared to be struck by a small tornado.

K-State to be tapped as blood drive artery

Do you have an extra pint of blood running through your veins? If so, you might want to donate it to the Red Cross bloodmobile coming to K-State next week.

Students who want to donate blood should make an appointment between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. today, Thursday or Monday at the Red Cross table on the first floor of the K-State Union. Appointments can also be made between 4:30 p.m. and 6 p.m. in the Kramer and Derby food centers.

The bloodmobile will be here from Feb. 27 to March 2.

The quota for this semester is 1,200 pints of blood. The most pints collected during previous spring semester bloodmobiles was about 1,050, according to Dan McAnarney, chairman of the K-State bloodmobile.

"The American Red Cross is bringing both bloodmobile units from Wichita. This means that K-State will have to get all of the blood needed for this region during the time they are here," McAnarney said. The region covers most of Kansas.

He said that those students who do not make an appointment during the registration can get through the bloodmobile but it might take them longer than those all ready registered.

About half of last semesters' donors were from residence halls.

"The residence hall with the highest percentage of donors receives a plaque donated by the Kiwanis Club," McAnarney said. Last semester's winners were Smith and Haymaker halls.

"We really need to get the 1,200 pints of blood this semester," the bloodmobile chairman said.

Groups assisting with the bloodmobile are: Arnold Air Society, Angel Flight, Advertising Club, Alpha Phi Omega, Chimes, Circle K, Med-Tech Club, Pre-nurses, Spurs, Riley County Emergency Service Unit and Smith House.

The groups will be furnishing people to work in the canteen and to assist the nursing staff at the bloodmobile.

Damages sought in fatal gas leak

WICHITA (AP)—Three civil lawsuits seeking a total of $13 million were filed Tuesday in federal court in Houston by the widows of two Air Force missilemen killed in a Titan II fuel accident and the airman the two men saved.

Al Kamas, a Wichita attorney whose associate filed the suits in U.S. District Court, said defendants in all three suits were Arrowhead Products of Los Alamitos, Calif., a division of Federal Mogul Corp., and Garrett Corp. of California.

Arrowhead was the manufacturer of protective suits worn by the airmen when a leak of deadly oxidizer gas occurred last August near Rock, Kan., killing two airmen and injuring several others.

GARRETT CORP. was the manufacturer of the airpack worn by the airmen, Kamas said.

One suit was filed by Linda Thomas, widow of 29-year-old Staff Sgt. Robert Thomas of Philadelphia. The suit, filed on her behalf and that of her two young sons, seeks $2.8 million for the economic loss caused by the wrongful death of her husband.

A suit seeking $3.1 million was filed by Elisa Hepstall, widow of Airman 1st Class Erby Hepstall, 22, Thomasville, Ala., on her behalf and that of her young son and newborn daughter. It claims economic loss caused by the wrongful death of her husband as well as for his pain and suffering.

The third suit was filed by Airman 1st Class Carl Malinger, 19, Baltimore, whom Thomas and Hepstall saved from the bottom of the missile silo. Malinger is seeking $7.1 million for economic loss, pain and suffering.

KAMAS SAID Malinger, who has been hospitalized at Andrews AFB, Md., is 100 percent disabled and still under medical supervision.

"The claim is based upon defects in the design and manufacture of the suit and the airpack worn by the airmen," Kamas said. "In as much as the suit would not provide the protection from the oxidizer even though exposure to the oxidizer was a foreseeable risk."

The product liability suits were filed in Houston, Kamas said, because of his association with Houston attorney Joseph Jamail, who will work with him in the case.

Houston also was chosen as the site for the cases, Kamas said, because headquarters of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration is located there. The attorney said NASA would have available specifications, test data and complete files on the protective suits, which he said were the same as space suits used by NASA.

Kamas said he expected additional parties to join in the action as the matter progresses in the courts. The Air Force issued a report last week on the protective suits involved in the accident and found it had design weaknesses. But Kamas said preparation for the three lawsuits had begun long before the Air Force report was released.

Inner-city rebirth forces moving

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The rebirth of neighborhoods that is brightening the future of some cities also poses a baffling question: When a rundown neighborhood is brought back to life, where do the people who once lived there go?

Housing experts in and out of government have tried to answer the question—with little success.

But now, for the first time, surprising clues are emerging from a soon-to-be published study of one neighborhood, the Ramsey Hill section of St. Paul, Minn.

The study found that middleclass whites in their 30s could be pushed out of a neighborhood as easily as poor blacks and the elderly. Moreover, those forced out often wound up better off.

The experience could be representative of events elsewhere. They recall the pattern in Washington, Baltimore, Boston, Philadelphia, San Francisco, Seattle, and other cities:

The young and affluent, seeking housing values, convenience and the excitement of big-city living, have been rediscovering that century-old neighborhoods in center cities have just what they want.

AND THEN existing residents are often forced to move as housing values, taxes and rents soar.

Congress two years ago ordered the Department of Housing and Urban Development to report on how widespread the problem is.

The report, issued this month, offers no real answers.

But the separate report on Ramsey Hill, sponsored by the Center for Urban & Regional Affairs of the University of Minnesota, provides some facts.

Its author, Sonia Sands, examined a nine-block portion of the neighborhood which has experienced rapid-fire private revitalization to its century-old housing. It is conveniently located only a mile from downtown.

Revitalization began in 1970. By 1977, the federal government had designated the area an historic landmark district. Renovated homes now fetch $100,000, and unrenovated shells may cost $50,000.

In a recent telephone interview, Ms. Sands discussed her findings:

—Of 112 households surveyed who left Ramsey Hill between 1970 and 1978, 70.5 percent stayed in St. Paul and 8 percent moved to its suburbs; 8 percent to nearby Minneapolis and less than 1 percent to its suburbs; 1.8 percent elsewhere in Minnesota, 8.9 percent out of state.

THIS CHALLENGES theories of urban specialists such as Dr. George Sternlieb who have said displaced inner city families are moving in great numbers to suburbs. It is widely believed, for instance, that many families displaced from suddenly trendy Capitol Hill in Washington, D.C. resettled in Prince Georges County, Md., but no one has ever proved it.

—Only 14 percent of families forced to move were 60 or older. The majority were 30 to 39. This was a predominantly white neighborhood to begin with, and less than 10 percent of those forced to move were minorities. Only 6.1 percent were jobless.

—The majority of households interviewed said they left Ramsey Hill involuntarily. All those who said they were forced to move were renters. Their reasons were that their homes were being converted to co-ops or condominiums, that they were evicted because the house was being remodeled, or that the ownership of the house changed hands.

—A startling 87 percent of displaced families found their new homes either similar to or better than those left behind in Ramsey Hill, a finding that deviates sharply from the widely-held assumption that the displaced inevitably end up worse off after their forced move.

—JUST AS startling, the displaced families were not forced to pay significantly higher housing costs in their new apartments.

Since no similar study has ever been done of revitalized neighborhoods in other cities, it is impossible to say how the findings in Ramsey Hill relate to the happenings in other places.

Further, no one knows how many people across the country are forced from homes because of revitalization. HUD suggests it isn't a major national problem, but systematic research remains to be done.

"It'll be interesting to see others do studies of their own areas, says Sands. "Maybe they'll find similar things to what I found. We'll just have to wait and see."

Chinese plan to deal final 'bloody blow'

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—Tens of thousands of Vietnamese and Chinese troops backed by heavy artillery were on the move Wednesday toward the Vietnamese town of Lang Son and what could be the showdown battle of the five-day-old border war, intelligence sources in Bangkok reported.

The sources said Chinese strategists apparently intend to deal a final bloody blow to the Vietnamese military and then to withdraw most of their forces from Vietnam within three or four days.

Japan's Kyodo news service quoted a government official in Peking as saying China hopes to end the conflict within a few days, but the unidentified official warned that it might be prolonged if Vietnam throws its regular army troops into the fighting.

That appeared to be just what Hanoi was doing Wednesday, as columns of regular army reinforcements were reported rolling north toward Vietnamese-held Lang Son, a strategically situated town that for centuries has guarded the approaches from China.

The troops apparently were relieving battered militia units that bore the defensive burden for the first three days of fighting.

THE SOVIET news agency Tass, meanwhile, said in a report from Hanoi that Chinese troops committed atrocities against Vietnamese civilians in areas they captured. Tass, quoting Vietnamese news reports, charged that the Chinese burned villages and shot men, women and children.

A reporter for the Soviet newspaper Pravda, in a dispatch from Lang Son, also described alleged Chinese atrocities, saying that in one incident troops stopped a bus on a provincial road and executed all its passengers.

The invasion force that struck across the border last Saturday is reported to have penetrated as far as 12 miles into Vietnamese territory along the 450-mile border.

The Vietnamese claim to have killed 5,000 to 8,000 Chinese soldiers, a figure intelligence sources in Bangkok consider inflated. These sources say Vietnamese losses have been much heavier than the Chinese.

A British Broadcasting Corp. correspondent in Peking, citing reliable sources in Peking, said that in the first two days of fighting the Chinese inflicted losses of 10,000 dead and wounded on the Vietnamese while suffering 2,000 to 3,000 casualties themselves.

RADIO HANOI said a Chinese division Tuesday tried to push deeper into the coastal province of Quang Ninh, in an area 50 miles east of Lang Son and a few miles from the sea, but was driven back with "700 Chinese aggressors wiped out."

On Wednesday, three Chinese infantry divisions backed up by tanks were on the move through Quang Ninh again, apparently planning to swing inland to stage "lightning strikes" to cut off the highway supply routes linking the defenders of Lang Son with Hanoi, sources here said.

Journalists on the Vietnamese side of the front reported that regular army reinforcements rushed to Lang Son Tuesday and Wednesday to take over from the militias. Reporter Kazuhisa Ikawa of the Tokyo newspaper Asahi reported seeing Vietnamese trucks loaded with troops and hauling 105mm artillery headed toward Lang Son from Don Mo, 40 miles from the frontier. He wrote that columns of refugees poured south along the highway.

First rule of meeting: finding one to preside

By MARY JO PROCHAZKA
SGA Editor

A new Student Senate chairman, who also serves as vice president of the student body, will be selected by senate tonight.

Dana Foster, junior in political science, Rich Macha, junior in accounting, and Lori Bergen, junior in history, are vying for the position.

Foster, who lost a bid for student body president in the Feb. 14 student elections, said he sees the chairman's job as two-fold.

As chairman, he would be a part-time spokesman for the student body president and an additional spokesman for students as well as running orderly senate meetings, Foster said.

As chairman, Foster said, he would work to implement the recommendations of the Library Task Force of which he was a member.

"We feel we've got a lot of powerful information and we don't want to let it die," he said.

Seeking funds for an arena, investigating book return, dead week policies and working on student recruitment would also be goals, Foster said.

"We need to revive the liaison system totally—it's in the pits now," he said. Senators currently act as liaisons to groups funded by Senate to try to make the groups more accountable to Student Senate.

FOSTER SAID he would try to get senators to choose a few issues to concentrate on.

"That's about the best way you can get something done in senate—limit it to two or three things and work them clear through to the end," he said.

Foster said he would try to end overlapping of duties of senate committees and the student body president's cabinet.

"Senate, more or less, is a 40-member Finance Committee and right now it's inefficient," Foster said, and that he would introduce a constitutional amendment requiring a two-thirds vote of senate to amend Finance Committee recommendations.

Macha said he views the chairman's role as coordinating senate activities and acting as a link between the executive and judicial branches of the Student Governing Association (SGA).

MACHA'S FIRST priority would be seeking funding for an arena.

Macha would like to make the liaison system more efficient by requiring senators to turn in bi-weekly reports about groups they are liaisons to, he said.

Improving communications between the Student and Faculty Senates would also be a goal, Macha said.

He said he would work to strengthen senate standing committees and make them more efficient.

"I feel the majority of our legislation should come out of our standing committees," Macha said, and that he would try to improve the committees by selecting "really good" chairmen and improving communications between the committees.

Senate visitation expansion and implementing the Library Task Force recommendations would be his goals also, Macha said.

Bergen said she would increase the number of senate committee positions for students who are not senators, and would have an open period at the beginning of each senate meeting where any student could speak or ask questions of senators.

SHE SAID duplication of efforts between the executive and legislative branches of SGA needs to be stopped.

Bergen said she would "crack down" on requiring senators to attend senate meetings and act as liaisons. She also favors making it an impeachable offense for senators to not visit living groups and other student organizations, she said.

Bergen questioned the need for specific task forces, saying she would assign problems to standing committees instead.

"I've established a rapport with the administration in some of the other things I've been involved in and I feel like I have my foot in the door," Bergen said.

"In the chair's position there's a lot of things you can do that you can't as student body president because you're representing students differently," she said.

Bergen also said she would like to have more workshops about student government and parliamentary procedure.

Breaking up

What is it they say? Breaking up is hard to do. For K-State grounds crew employees Bruce Kubie (left), junior in business administration, and Paco Esteras, graduate in biology, it was a tiring job as they broke ice along Claflin Avenue near Umberger Hall Wednesday.

CAGED CATS...In preparation for Wednesday night's basketball game, Touchdown XI, is netted for transfer to Ahearn as a cagemate looks on. And, after all the trouble, Touchdown never made it to the game.

Touchdown benched

A small group watched the cage as one of the keepers slid in the door. Two small wildcats pranced contentedly about the cage while a third paced back and forth, seemingly not pleased with the presence of a human intruder. This was Touchdown XI, K-State's mascot.

The keeper approached the cat and gently lifted him. Touchdown seemed calm but balked when confronted with the mouth of the small animal carrier box used to transport the cat to different sporting events.

A net was brought and gingerly slipped over the cat. Fighting a surge of panic by the squirming Touchdown, the keepers coaxed the cat into the carrier.

On hand was Roberta Hustead, a representative from the Riley County Humane Society. Hustead watched as a zoo employee and zoo director Tom Demry netted the cat.

Hustead was asked to watch the loading by the Society's midwest regional director Ann Gonnerman, who began an investigation of the zoo last month after charges of animal mistreatment were made. Techniques used in capturing Touchdown will be included in a report to Gonnerman, Hustead said.

But the coaxing and capturing of Touchdown was in vain as the group charged with carrying the cat failed to find transportation for him.

Alpha Phi Omega, a national service organzation, was planning to carry the cat at last night's game, but because of transporation problems, they cancelled Touchdown's appearance, Brian Hettrick, Alpha Phi Omega president, said.

Both Demry and Hustead said a net was one of the safer techniques used for capturing animals. He said all the cats are caught periodically for innoculation, but Touchdown is more nervous because of his numerous trips to K-State ball games.

But since the investigation began, Touchdown's trips have been halted.

Touchdown missed the Jan. 31 game with Oklahoma because Alpha Phi Omega didn't want to carry him until the Society made a decision, but after talking to Demry, the group decided to go ahead.

Transportation problems, however, have kept Touchdown away from Ahearn for the past three games, Hettrick said.

Correction

The story about Iranian students in Wednesday's Collegian misrepresented the viewpoint of the Moslem Students' Association (MSA) concerning minorities in Iran.

Nader Afzali, a spokesman for MSA, said: "Islam law teaches principles of fairness and respect for all people. Non-Moslems will be welcome and have the same rights as Moslems to benefit from Iran's opportunities so long as they do not undermine its government and the moral principles upon which it rests."

Vietnam—the mouse that roars

LONDON—China has more than five times as many troops as Vietnam, but the smaller nation's military has newer weapons and is rated as one of the world's best fighting forces.

The Institute of Strategic Studies latest annual report, "The Military Balance," published last September, noted that China's military equipment is 10 to 20 years out of date.

Other commentators have said that Vietnam is now one of the best-armed and most heavily armed countries in the world, with up-to-date Soviet weapons and a vast quantity of armaments abandoned by the United States when it withdrew from the Vietnam war.

The London-based institute is an independent group of specialists in military analysis with an international staff whose reports are studied by governments in the East and West.

The army strengths of China and Vietnam are put at 3,625,000 and 600,000 respectively by the Institute.

'The Warriors' too hot for Paramount

HOLLYWOOD—Paramount Pictures has canceled all newspaper advertising for its film "The Warriors" in the wake of several violent outbursts—including two ending in deaths—at screenings of the movie, a spokesman said Wednesday.

"We couldn't put our finger on it, that it caused the problems, but we just stopped the advertising as of Saturday," Paramount publicist Bob Goodfried said.

On Saturday, a 19-year-old man died after being shot in the head at a Palm Springs drive-in theater that was showing the movie, which deals with youth gang violence in New York City. Earlier last week, an 18-year-old was fatally stabbed in the lobby of a Ventura theater.

In New York, a dozen youths assaulted subway passengers in the theater district immediately after seeing the film, which reportedly grossed some $4.7 million during the first six days of its run at 650 theaters around the nation.

'Prisoner of the revolution' freed

TEHRAN, Iran—Under strong pressure from the United States, Iran's new revolutionary government on Wednesday released a young American Marine accused of firing on Iranians who invaded the U.S. Embassy.

Sgt. Ken Kraus, 22, of Lansdale, Pa., who had maintained that none of the embassy's guards "fired a shot," was driven through the gates of the embassy compound Wednesday evening after one week as a "prisoner of the revolution." He showed no sign of ill treatment.

White House spokesman Jody Powell said Carter and Secretary of State Cyrus Vance "had made it their No. 1 priority" to free Kraus.

His mother, Jane Kraus of Lansdale, Pa., learned of her son's release from President Carter. She said, "He told us Kenneth is free on America soil in the American Embassy, and they will try to get him home as soon as possible."

Kraus' arrest coincided with a demand from Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary committee for the extradition from the United States of Gen. Gholam-Ali Veissi, former martial law governor of Tehran.

MU voters join Birthday Party

COLUMBIA, Mo.—Two University of Missouri students who campaigned in straitjackets and clown suits were elected student association president and vice president Wednesday in an election that attracted the largest voter turnout in recent years.

Garth Bare, a sophomore engineering student from Raytown, Mo., and Robert Siegel, a senior sociology major from Creve Coeur, Mo., took 47 percent of the vote in the three-way race. The closest contenders had 33 percent of the 7,549 votes cast, an increase of more than 3,000 over last year's total.

Running on the "Birthday Party" ticket against two more serious slates, the pair promised to turn the campus' central quadrangle into an ice skating rink and said they would flood the football stadium and hold mock naval battles there.

They even received wishes of good luck from Cleveland Mayor Dennis Kucinich, who termed them the candidates "the most likely to be committed."

A campaign spokesman for the team said they would now give serious consideration to competently administering the Missouri Student Association's $200,000 budget, and quit the clowning.

Weather

Good morning. Somebody's confused about the days this week. Remember Monday when we celebrated Washington's Birthday? Well, according to the calendar, today is Washington's Birthday again. We've heard of born-again Christians, but.... Anyway, in Washington's honor (again) today the warming trend continues. Highs will be in the upper 40s to low 50s. There's a 30 to 40 percent chance of rain today and tonight. Rain is expected to change to snow on Friday.

Potholes need filling

This winter's excess of snow and rain has caused many problems for commuters, not the least of which are the large and deep potholes in city streets.

Swerving to miss a pothole can mean hitting another car or a pedestrian but driving through potholes damages the car's alignment and tires. It's a tough decision.

Besides the physical damage they cause, potholes are terribly frustrating. By the time one has safely made it to work or class, the day is already shot, nerves are strained and a numbness takes over, a feeling slightly akin to the emotion a soldier experiences after successfully crawling therough a minefield.

Potholes are a major problem, but city officials say there isn't much they can do to relieve the problem.

Potholes are started from tiny cracks in the asphalt filled with melted snow. The water freezes in the cracks and expands. The hole becomes bigger. The process repeats itself until the hole is the size of the one at the corner of Manhattan Ave. and Claflin, in front of Haymaker Hall.

Street maintenance says the potholes can be filled but water underneath thwarts their efforts and the repairs are at best, temporary. As long as there is snow, there will be potholes.

But there is something that can at least ensure that more holes are filled temporarily. Radio station WIBW in Topeka has a "pothole hot-line"—a number citizens can call to alert maintence workers of holes. The station says the hole will be filled within 12 hours of the call.

Officials said there is no such number in Manhattan. Although they have had some calls at the street shop they said there isn't a need for a special number.

There should be a number.

If people get frustrated enough with driving through pitted streets and paying costly alignment bills to call the street shop, then officials might set up such a program to get more holes fixed, even if only temporarily.

'Stilling' arrest similar to another 'spirited' event

Editor,

I was very amused by the article in the Tuesday, Feb. 20 Collegian where an antique shop owner was arrested for possession of a still. I am reminded of a rather amusing experience I encountered at Oxford a few years ago.

The "government men" came into Sir Harold "Tommy" Thompson's laboratory to examine the laboratory potential for distilling spirits. Of course there were stills everywhere and we were caught red-handed. The conversation to the best of my recollection went as follows:

Government man: "Are these stills capable of distilling alcohol?"

Tommy: "Yes, but we use them in our research."

Government man: "Sorry, we shall have to arrest you for this capability."

Tommy: "You might as well arrest me for arson and rape—for I am capable of this, too!"

I always thought he was bragging a bit, but enough said.

K-State—when it thaws, it leaks

You can feel it. The worst of winter is over. Before long the familiar spring sights will be here: frisbees gliding through the air, lovers strolling hand in hand, football players practicing illegally, and water—water everywhere, leaking into everything.

Most obvious is the water outside. Snow and ice melt so fast the drainage system can't handle it all and huge pudddles form. They don't bother me, as my boots have been water-proofed with a silicone-based liquid. (There's enough silicone on my boots to make three Raquel Welches.)

Less obvious, but more of a problem, is water inside. Having been at K-State for two years, and having lived in an immobile mobile home (the word trailer sounds so gauche) for the same amount of time, I have become an expert on water leakage.

The first trailer I lived in was so prone to leakage that a bird urinating on my roof caused major flooding.

During spring break last year, water ran down the side of my trailer and got trapped under the floor, right where I stored my records. By the tme I arrived home, mildew had set in. And I thought that green fuzzy grunge only grew in my refrigerator.

FOR THE ULTIMATE in leakage, though, you can't beat Cow Campus.

During the summer I worked in Seaton Court, in a doomed attempt to turn the old foundry shop into classroom area. What a laugh. On clear days we swept, on rainy days we mopped.

The tables in Seaton Court are mostly metal: pitted, rusty metal whose original color is obscured. Maybe some Ziebart on the tables...

Even more fun is Farrell Library. Stack level 7 has lots of wastebaskets and barrels with varying amounts of water in them scattered around—just right for tripping over. If you sit in the study carrels by the window, you'll be treated to an irregular, sharp PINNNGGG that sounds just like a bell.

The first time it sounded the guy behind me jumped out of his chair, his fists extended in front of him. He thought it was the start of Round Two.

There are different sounds, of couse, depending on the size of the water catcher and the amount of water in it. Big, half-filled containers make a sound like GORRRPPP. Small containers with little water make a light PLINKK! It's actually very musical.

PERSONALLY, I can't wait for the next heavy rain. I understand the student library workers can arrange the buckets so the dripping water plays "Macho Man."

If you look closely in Farrell, you'll also notice some light bulbs with water in them. Very unique, and very liable to explode if someone accidentally turns on the juice.

Then again, if we could time the explosions, we could bring up the marching band and do a rendition of "The 1812 Overture."

Hey, I'm not picking on the library. I love the top floor of Farrell in the spring. Where else can you do research and practice your backstroke at the same time?

Maybe we could build a huge dome over the campus. Think of it, a totally-enclosed, weather-proof campus.

Of course, it would probably leak every spring.

Zoo eyes new friends

Friends of the Zoo is trying to get Student Senate to become a zoo friend, too.

Tam Lipps, a representative from Friends of the Zoo, is scheduled to give a presentation to Student Senate tonight during their meeting at 7 in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

A resolution asking senate to approve a 75-cents admission charge to Sunset Zoo is on the agenda for senate's consideration, Mick Morrell, Student Senate chairman, said.

The money raised by the admission charge would go toward zoo maintenance and capital improvements, Morrell said. The resolution is sponsored by Dee James, agriculture senator.

New wing to provide emergency treatment

St. Mary Hospital will soon be adding an emergency treatment wing which will be "St. Mary Hospital's answer to emergency medicine," according to Dan Broyles, administrator at St. Mary.

The new wing will provide 10 rooms for emergency care.

Total cost for the project is estimated at $1,640,600 and construction will begin mid April, Broyles said.

Funds for the wing will be secured through taxable bonds, he said.

St. Mary now handles all emergency cases and Memorial Hospital handles all obstetric cases because of a consolidation of services between the two hospitals, effective last May.

Construction of the new wing will take 20 to 24 months, Boyles said. There will be 24,000 square feet of space added to the hospital.

NEW FLASH! K-State is beginning to emerge from the snow it's been buried under all winter! Well, now that spring is almost back, most student's thoughts are turning toward warm-weather activities, and one of the biggies around here is biking.

A 10-speed bicycle can be a student's best friend, especially if it's their major means of transportation to and from school and around town, so buying the right bike is important.

The easiest road for buying a new bike is to find a good neighborhood dealer who sells bikes fully assembled instead of in a carton, which is how many discount and department stores sell them.

The 3.8 million 10-speeds sold last year all came with factory warranties. This also makes the dealer important, because the warranty is only as good as the person backing it up. Almost all manufacturers warranties require the dealer provide a service checkup within 30 days of purchase. This is important because after riding the bike for a while, minor adjustments may need to be made to fit particular needs and riding styles.

Buying a bike that fits personal needs is another important aspect to avoiding bicycle blues.

According to the Schwinn Bicycle Co., a bike is the right size if the rider can comfortably straddle the horizontal frame bar with both feet in low-heeled shoes on the ground and have no more than an inch clearance between his crotch and the bar.

A bike's weight is another factor to consider. Generally, the higher quality the bike, the lighter it will be. More expensive models are made of lighter materials and have lighter wheels and narrower, higher-pressure tires, which enable the rider to go faster with less work.

Before taking a new bike home, be sure to check the brakes and make sure the gears change smoothly.

NOW THAT cars have skidded through another winter, lots of them have developed new squeaks and rattles and may need some repair work.

Let's say a student takes his car to the mechanic because of a noise in the power steering, and the shop does a rack-and-pinion overhaul. The student pays $180 on his credit card and drives home.

Next day, the irritating noise is back. The student, growling, takes his car to another mechanic, who finds the real problem all along was liquid leaking from the power steering pump. Once that has been fixed, the student forks over another $125.

Now, what happens if the first mechanic refuses to make good on his mistake?

Well, because the student charged the repairs on a credit card, he may be able to take advantage of a federal law that allows him to refuse payment for the work that was improperly done. According to the law, if someone has a problem with goods or services purchased with a credit card, we may withhold payment from the credit card issuer as well as from the auto mechanic who has made the sloppy or incorrect repairs.

In order to utilize this law, three conditions must be met.

First, the person must try to work things out with the mechanic. Second, the mechanic must be in the state or within 100 miles of where the person is currently living. Last, the cost of repairs must be more than $50.

If the person decides not to pay he would write letters to the mechanic and to the credit card company including date of repair, the credit card used, the account number, why the service was unsatisfactory and what he wants in settlement.

The credit card company can't make him pay interest of penalty charges until the dispute is resolved.

Birth centers stress family care

Midwifery gives sense of warmth

By SUE PFANNMULLER
Collegian Reporter

She lay still for a few moments in the quiet of the night thinking about how her life had been changed, and the new changes still to come. Then rolling on to her side, she woke her husband. Their baby was finally on its way.

They were excited, but organized. They had taken classes. This was something they were doing together.

They were prepared, but not for the sight of the labor room. The environment was impersonal and they were giving birth to someone warm and loving. It didn't make sense.

It doesn't have to be this way. Across the country, a trend toward more humane and positive experiences in birth is awakening.

Because of the trends, midwifery is experiencing a revival.

The practice of midwifery is the care of mothers and babies through pre-natal care, delivery and post-natal care by an individual who is not a physician.

In many large cities birth centers are emerging. A birth center stresses family involvement in the birth experience.

The centers usually staff certified nurse and midwives to aid in birth and are either connected to hospitals or have their own medical support systems in case of complications during birth.

Suzanne Bunker, member of the Campaign association fo Midwifery, said, there are two categories of midwives: certified nurse midwives (CNM) who hold a degree in nursing and then get extra training in hospital obstetrics and lay midwives.

In most states CNM's are prohibited from settig up a practice on their own, Bunker said. Their practice is usually restricted to hospital settings under the supervision of a doctor.

Lay midwives may or may not have any formal education and their training varies considerably. Training can be obtained from self-training, home birth organizations or an apprenticeship to a doctor or another midwife, Bunker said.

But midwifery in any form cannot be practiced in Kansas at this time. Not because it is illegal, but because it is illegal to practice without a license obtained in this state.

In July of last year, the Kansas Legislature amended the laws relating to the nursing profession to authorize the category of advanced registered nurse practitioner, which includes the certified nurse midwife.

On February 7th, another bill pertaining to midwifery was presented to the House of Representatives. Geneva Anderson (D-Mulvane) presented the bill containing provisions for the training and licensing of lay midwives.

July of last year found Susan and Steve Neaderhiser new parents. Their son Stephen was born at Memorial Hospital.

"The only things I remember about having Stephen are negative things," Neaderhiser said.

Neaderhiser's doctor did not deliver her baby. Many of their wishes were ignored, things that had been worked out with her regular doctor, but had not passed on to the others.

Neaderhiser also said she specifically did not want to have any drugs administered. The doctor came in and said he was going to give her two shots to help her relax. When she and her husband protested, she said the doctor told them that if he was going to deliver the baby, she was going to take the shots. There wasn't much they could do, Neaderhiser said.

"I've seen by dad pull calves and pay more attention to them than the doctor paid to me," she said.

"We would never have another baby here. Never," Neaderhiser said. If they decided to have another baby, they would go back home to Hays, she said.

"I'm sure the staff was over worked and it wasn't all their fault." But having a baby should have some meaning. If it didn't mean anything to the doctor, it meant something to us," she said.

"Even if it's his 300th baby, it's not mine!"

To complicate the problem in Manhattan, there are four obstetricians at the medical center, each doctor works four days a week from nine to five, and they rotate being on call weekends and nights.

Although a woman may choose her doctor in order to plan the birth she and her husband want, chances are one in four that the doctor will deliver the baby.

"We are not anti-doctor," Bunker said. "We recognize that they are often over burdened, and to accommodate everyone's individual desires may not be physically possible."

Zeandale tops site list for Riley County landfill

By JEFF MYRICK
Collegian Reporter

Proposed sites for Riley County's new landfill have been narrowed to five locations, and the Citizen's Advisory Board hopes to make a final decision this month, County Engineer Dan Harden said.

Harden is public works director for the project.

The advisory board, appointed by the county commission, was formed after the commission met with opposition last year when choosing a site for the landfill at Stockwell. Public disapproval of the site centered on the county commission being trusted to make the decision, Harden said.

All five sites recommended by the board are in southern Riley County, and include the Stagg Hill or Stockwell site, the sludge treatment farm, a site just south of the sludge farm in a ravine, and two sites in rock quarries, one being located just south of the Zeandale community, Harden said.

Of the proposed sites, the Zeandale quarry site is considered superior, according to the advisory board.

In a recent town meeting, the citizens of Zeandale voiced strong opposition to the landfill to both Harden and County Commissioner Rosy Rieger.

A new landfill is needed because the current Riley County landfill is in violation of Environmental Protection Agency regulations by being located in the flood plain of the Kansas River. When the river rises in the spring, it cuts into the landfill bringing trash into the open and fouling the water.

The county has a five-year grace period to halt landfill operations at the present Hunters Island site. The site will be filled before that time period is up, Harden said.

A landfill must be properly sited and planned, and the commission is hoping for a site selection soon, allowing enough time to acquire the necessary land and to establish a transfer station, Harden said.

Students' spouses to receive health services at Lafene

So you're a K-State student, but your spouse isn't. You can always go to Lafene when ill, but what about the little woman, or the old man?

Starting next fall, married students can purchase student health care through Lafene Student Health Center for their spouse even if the spouse is not a student.

"Student health fees per semester are currently $40. This means that a married couple would pay $80 for health care," said Roger Birnbaum, administrative assistant for Lafene.

"We have been working on this proposal for some time, since we recognized a need for the student's spouse to be cared for somewhere in Manhattan," Birnbaum said. Many married students don't have a family physician in Manhattan, he said.

Lafene now provides for most health problems of the student client, Birnbaum said. They do not provide for surgery or catastrophic illnesses.

"Right now we don't look for any great numbers of spouses, to the point where it would inconvenience the regular fee paying student," Birnbaum said.

"We feel our staff is capable of taking care of this influx of students," he said.

There are approximately 3,000 couples who could qualify for this health care, but many of them may be covered by family plans or other avenues of health care, Birnbaum said.

"We are starting this as a total service to the student," Birnbaum said. "We know the student is affected by his spouse's health, and this has an effecrt on his work at the University."

'Cats lose their magic but retain title hopes

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

The pep band played the triumphant closing theme from "Star Wars" after the Missouri-K-State game last night, but no one was proudly marching out of Ahearn Field House.

Sports

The Wildcats' bubble was burst by the Tigers, 67-63, and the Big 8's Cinderella team lost its third home conference game of the season.

The only good news for Wildcat fans came from hundreds of miles away, as Iowa State beat Oklahoma 66-65 in Ames.

K-State will tie for the Big 8 championship with a win over the Sooners Saturday in Norman, but K-State fans must be asking if their 'Cats are really still alive.

"Not if we don't accept the challenge any better than we did tonight," Coach Jack Hartman said.

"They (the Wildcats) have done a fine job. Their youthfulness or the importance of the game may have taken its toll," Hartman said.

THE AGGRESSIVENESS and maturity which K-State had shown in recent victories disappeared last night. When the 'Cats had a chance to take control of the game with five minutes left, they allowed Missouri to score key baskets while their own shot selection was poor at best.

"We lost our mental aggressiveness," Hartman said. "We opened with it, but they came back.

"I was disappointed in the fact that we didn't rise to the occasion—stand up and be counted."

After the 'Cats had a 61-56 lead with five minutes remaining, Missouri promptly scored eight straight points to take the lead.

Costly mental lapses on defense by K-State allowed the Tigers' Brad Droy to get free underneath for four easy points which secured the victory for Missouri.

EVEN THOUGH the 'Cats fought back to pull within one, they still couldn't get the crucial shot down. When Missouri led 66-63, K-State guard Glenn Marshall missed a short jumper from the lane which would have given the 'Cats a glimmer of hope.

But, the game started out with K-State looking like Big 8 champions. With one of the louder Ahearn crowds behind them, the 'Cats opened a 20-10 lead.

Rolando Blackman had the hot hand and 12 points of his 20 points by halftime. He was moving well and shooting confidently, but he ran into the tough defense of Larry Drew in the second half and only shot three for 10.

For Missouri, the hot shooting came from guard Steve Wallace. He played like a reincarnation of Willie Smith, the former Tiger guard who came into Ahearn three years ago and blew away K-State's title hopes with more than 30 points.

WALLACE hit 10 of 18 from the field for 20 points, and 16 of his points came in an eight-minute stretch at the end of the first half and beginning of the second. He scored 16 of Missouri's 23 points during that time.

Elsewhere in the Big 8, Kansas beat Nebraska 66-59 on Paul Mokeski's 30-point effort and Oklahoma State beat Colorado 55-53 in Stillwater.

Oklahoma is now 9-4 and is followed by K-State (8-5), Missouri (7-6), Kansas (7-6), Nebraska (6-7), Iowa State (6-7), Oklahoma State (5-8) and Colorado (4-9).

K-State signs 23 footballers on national signing deadline

On national letter-of-intent signing day Wednesday, K-State head coach Jim Dickey announced the addition of 23 athletes to the Wildcat football program.

The list includes 11 high school signees, eight junior college additions and four squad members who were awarded scholarships after being walk-ons last season.

"I would classify it as a good recruiting year, to say the least," K-State Coach Jim Dickey said. "We were able to obtain the things we wanted. We were looking for big, talented linemen, and beyond that, just good athletes. We believe we were able to add both to our program. That's a credit to our coaches. They did an outstanding job.

Dickey noted that "two or three (other) young men have narrowed their choice to K-State and one other school," and their intentions will not be known until later.

K-State was eligible to add 26 scholarship

Junior varsity finishes season 9-2

Even though the fans who chanted for 100 points didn't get their wish, they were satisfied with the 98-77 win by K-State's JV basketball team over Fort Hays State.

The game, which was the final contest for the Wildcats, put them at a 9-2 record for the season.

Lead by 6-2 guard Reggie Clabon and 6-7 forward James Bailey, both freshmen, K-State connected on 44 of 90 field goal attempts. While Bailey was high scorer with 31 points, Clabon, who scored 24 points, lead the 'Cats' effort by slowing the pace when most of the his team wanted to play run and gun.

K-State 5-9 guard Henry Pullian, a crowd favorite, set the fans cheering as he drove in for a fast-breaking lay-up with 35 seconds left on the clock.

football players to its program for 1979.

AMONG the linemen Dickey spoke of as having impressive size were Bart Horner of Grandview, Mo., 6-5½, 228; David Michenko, Chartier's Valley, (Pa.), 6-5, 250; Tim Murray, North Iowa Area Community College, 6-4, 230; Jim Northcutt, Tulsa, (Okla.) Mason, 6-6 248 and Greg Pemberton, Shawnee (Ks.) St. Joseph, 6-4, 252.

Kansas blue-chippers Kent Sedlacek of Hanover and Danny Sparks of Great Bend, Bob Kerr of Chartier's Valley, Rick Manning of Oklahoma City McGuiness and Danny Ruzich of Hometown, Ill. were big names among the prep backs and receivers on K-State's list.

From the juco ranks, the Wildcats obtained help in critical areas—quarterback, kicking and the secondary.

Bob Daniels of the College of the Sequoias (Calif.) threw for 3,335 yards and 31 touchdowns in two seasons. Kevin Stetler, a defensive back from Garden City Community College, was considered one of the country's top prospects among defensive backs. Butch Stocking of Mt. San Antoinia (Calif.) Juco kicked 11 field goals last season.

OTHERS signed by K-State include Tim Cole, a defensive end-linebacker from Coffeyville Juco who was first team all-Jayhawk Conference; Jim Kennedy, an all-leaguer from Upper St. Clair, Pa.; Kerry Wilson, a 6-4, 252 all-conference offensive guard from Citrus (Calif.) Juco; Bonnie Wilson, an all-conference defensive end-linebacker from Kilgore (Tex.) Juco; Scott Lauridsen, a third-team all-stater from Baldwin who led his high school team to the 4A finals last year and Mike Ruzich, another all-Jayhawk Conference selection from Coffeyville Juco.

Frisbee fanatic

K-Stater flips a disc all the way to Atlanta

By CHRIS MCGEE
Collegian Reporter

Frisbee is more than a toy, or so Randy Schroeder thinks. In fact, it's as good as an all-expense paid ticket to Atlanta March 22.

Schroeder, junior in architecture, secured a berth in the national Frisbee competition sponsored by the Association of College Unions-International in Atlanta after placing first in the regional competition in Missouri earlier this month.

"I got interested in disc-play three years go when a friend of mine and I went to a UFM class on Frisbees," Schroeder said. "Seeing different throws, catches and discs made me realize it was a lot more specialized than I'd imagined."

Frisbee play offers feelings of "freedom and a greater range of expression than other sports", he said.

"There is a greater range of personal expression in games played with a "disc" than a ball.

"The disc can be thrown at a variety of speeds and techniques. It can be thrown overhand, underhand, sidearm, backhand, upside down, behind the back, etc," Schroeder said. "The aerodynamic properties make available an infinite range of throws that aren't available in other sports."

SCHROEDER, who played several sports in high school, said 'playing basketball is like playing with a rock."

In games played with a ball, the rate of fall is predictable. In comparison, a disc will "stall, float, curve drop or be drilled in a straight line to the target at high speeds," he said.

Schroeder believes the Frisbee gained popularity because it is inexpensive and portable.

"It can be played by young, old, dogs or just tossed casually back-and-forth. Frisbee can also take on a more serious tone as in organized games," he said.

About a year after he began playing Frisbee, Schroeder and his friends formed the Aerial Wizards. The Wizards, now a team recognized by the International Frisbee Association, play organized Frisbee games at least twice a week.

'ULTIMATE is one game the Wizards practice, even when its snowing. The team plays in Weber Arena and Potthorf Hall in Ci o Park during the winter months.

Ultimate is a team event played by seven-member teams whose object is to pass the disc to a teammate without it being blocked, or caught by the opposing team.

"When the defense catches or blocks the disc, they become the offense and the disc moves in the opposite direction," he said. To score, the disc must be passed into the end zone and caught by a team member. Running with the disc is never allowed.

"Ultimate is a fast-moving game that requires accuracy, distance and endurance. It's an exciting game that requires all around abilities," he said.

The game considered to be the most aggressive and violent is "Guts." Schroeder said he has seen players wear head gear, gloves and mouth guards for protection.

THE OBJECT of Guts is to throw the disc at such a high rate of speed that it can't be caught by the opposing team. Two teams of four or five stand 35 feet apart and throw the disc at speeds up to 100 mph in hopes their opponents won't be able to catch it, he said. The disc must be caught one-handed, adding to the difficulty.

"I enjoy Ultimate the most. We (the Wizards) are the Gold Cup Ultimate champions of Kansas" he said.

A more relaxed game is Frisbee golf, or Folf. It is played much the same way as regular golf is played with targets replacing the golf holes. The Wizards have laid out a Folf course on campus beginning on the band practice field, circling the entire campus and ending up on the practice field again.

The greatest form of personal expression and skills are found in 'freestyle.' As the name implies, it allows the individual feedom to express his talents with the disc more freely, he said.

As in snow skiing, freestylers are considered the "hot dogs" of the sport, he said.

SCHROEDER'S own skills and interest in Frisbee has paid off.

"I'm excited about competing in a nation-wide contest. I'll be able to match skills with other players across the nation," he said.

Schroeder will compete against 15 contestants during the national competition in a match of distance, accuracy and Frisbee golf.

The winner of the competition will receive an all-expense paid trip to Pasadena, Calif., to watch the World Frisbee Championship held in the Rose Bowl. Last year the event drew more than 500,000 spectators.

"I enjoy meeting fellow disc-enthusiasts and learning new techniques," he said. "I can't feel down while playing Frisbee. The people I've met are good sports and are concerned with overall good disc-play

"It's a great feeling."

NOW asserts rights as boycott judged valid

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—A federal judge has upheld the right of the National Organization for Women to use the convention boycott as a tool against states that have not ratified the Equal Rights Amendment, saying the action is a legitimate political venture.

The ruling Wednesday by U.S. District Court Judge Elmo Hunter came 51 weeks after Missouri Attorney General John Ashcroft filed suit against NOW, charging the organization's convention boycott tactics were a violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act.

NOW officials estimate the boycotts have cost Kansas City more than $8 million in convention business, with the loss in St. Louis placed at $11 million. Similar boycotts in the other 14 non-ERA states have resulted in additional millions in lost business, NOW said.

Missouri officials contended the boycott was "taking states as economic hostages with the ratification of the Equal Rights Amendment as the ransom."

IN A 30-page opinion, Hunter disagreed, saying the convention boycott "can be characterized as noncommercial in that its participants are not business interests and its purpose is not increased profits."

He called the boycott "noneconomic," ruling it was not undertaken to advance the economic self interests of the participants.

The case "involves political opponents, not commercial competitors; and political objectives, not marketplace goals," Hunter ruled.

Ashcroft's office declined comment until the decision was reviewed.

Bob Jones, director of informational services for the Kansas City Convention and Visitors Bureau, said the bureau was working to fill the vacancies left by conventions that had been cancelled by the boycott. He said 1978 was a record year for the city, with $228 million in convention business.

HUNTER SAID the "interest sought to be advanced by NOW and especially the constitutional interests involved in protecting NOW's ability to exercise its right to petition and right to political association outweigh the interest in protecting the business expectancy involved."

ERA has failed to win approval in the last six sessions of the Missouri Legislature. Two ERA resolutions have been introduced this session, but both are considered dead.

ERA would outlaw discrimination based on sex. It must be ratified by 38 states by June 30, 1982, to become part of the Constitution. The original deadline of March 22, 1979, was extended by act of Congress.

Wining, dining, sex fill 'Cousin Cousine'

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reviewer

Whoever said the extended family is dying might be in for an intoxicating surprise from the movie "Cousin Cousine."

Mothers, fathers, grandparents, aunts, uncles, children—lord knows the rest on down the line—all celebrate the blithe and blues of their "relationships" by wining and dining in and out of each other's beds.

No, "Cousin Cousine" isn't a porno flick, but an "infidelity-at-its-best-type-of movie," as aptly described by one connoisseur of critiques at the Collegian.

Directed by Jean-Charles Tacchella, who also wrote the screenplay, this humorous and honest blood bath drama is carefully presented so as not to offend most viewers.

In pratically each scene, the actors and actresses do a marvelous job at their role-playing games.

An example of acting brillance can be seen in the children who aren't little dummies when it comes to sex, and talking amongst their clan about "Uncle Jacque" or Cousin Marie" being lovers and not one child's real father or mother. During one family episode, a mother goes over to her children, saying they have to leave, but that, "You can tell pretty stories when we come again."

Two performers, who deserve a special round of applause, are the secretary and the dance instructor. She (the secretary) has been married for 11 years to a falacious man. He has a string of blood lovers on the side (was it five to be exact?), but later gives them the brush off because he loves his wife "too much."

The dance teacher has been married for eight years to a pathetic, suffering woman who might be labeled by a psychiatrist as one bloating case of "fanatic paranoia."

The couple doesn't enjoy the chit-chat and family maneuvers associated with the infidelity game at weddings or other occasions. At first, they strive to have a platonic relationship, confiding in the other how "We have something extraordinary."

When the relatives grow suspicious and ironically substitute the couples platonic encounters for love affairs, they give in to their relatives game, and rent a room at a boarding house to make love.

This first love scene in the movie is the best "love" scene which surmounts all the sexual trash in hot movie houses. They touch, really touch, and their conversations aren't fictitious.

The plot is a bit difficult to understand. When the movie starts reeling, the viewer might think, "Hey, what's going on here." Some scenes move so swiftly that it takes more than an observant eye to catch the symbolism in the actor's lines.

Two nice things about the movie are it is in color, and the subtitles don't conflict with viewing pleasure in contrast to some black and white Italian films.

Some scenes might drag, but this doesn't happen often. In most instances, the music is good, although the sound might be slightly distorted.

Collectively, "Cousin, Cousine" is an excellent movie worth its two hours of riotous action.

'Living will' bill allows patients to die

TOPEKA, (AP)—Kansans would have the legal right to have life-sustaining treatment withdrawn in the case of terminal illnesses under a bill given tentative approval by the Senate Wednesday.

A final vote will come Thursday, and passage would send it to the House.

The upper chamber approved the "living will" bill, which would allow a person to make a declaration to have any treatment halted if he or she was certified by two physicians to be dying.

Sen. Wint Winter, R-Ottawa, sponsor of the bill, said the measure would apply only to "procedures which would only serve to prolong the death process," and would specifically prohibit mercy killing.

Senate elects chairman...who elects vice chairman

By THE SGA STAFF

In his first official act as Student Senate chairman, Rich Macha cast the tie-breaking vote, selecting Dee James over Isaac Turner for senate vice chairman.

An hour after his own election to chairman, winning with 29 of 39 votes cast, Macha was forced to cast the tie-breaking vote when senate split 18-18 between James, agriculture senator, and Turner, arts and sciences senator.

"I felt Dee's experience was more extensive in this area than Isaac's," Macha, business senator, said. "I felt I could work just that much better with him than Isaac. I can't believe this happened to me my first meeting."

Turner, arts and sciences senator and president of Black Student Union, said he felt deep regret at not being chosen vice chairman, but that he is glad minority awareness has increased to the extent that there was a tie vote for the position.

ROGER LIND, agriculture senator, was unanimously elected Student Senate representative to Faculty Senate.

Macha said funding for a new arena, increasing the efficiency of senate committees and improving communication between senate and the student body are areas the new senate should focus on.

K-State can get more minority faculty "if the administration sets their mind to it," Macha said.

Dana Foster, junior in political science, and Lori Bergen, junior in history were also candidates for senate chairman and received six and three votes respectively. Mick Morrell, senate chairman this past year, received one vote.

DURING DISCUSSION of which senator to choose as senate chairman, questions were raised about whether Foster would be able to work with Student Body President-elect Greg Musil. Foster and Musil opposed each other for student body president in the Feb. 14 election.

"Dana has said he can (work with Musil), and Greg has said he can (work with Foster). What more do we need? Maybe we should ask Greg to clone himself for senate chairperson," Jim Duke, education senator, said.

Several questions were raised about Lori Bergen's removal from Arts and Sciences Council earlier this month. The council has a policy of dismissing a member after three unexcused absences and Bergen was dismissed from the council Feb. 5.

Bergen told the senators she had two unexcused absences but thought she had been excused by the council secretary for the meeting she missed that resulted in her dismissal.

DAVID FOSTER, arts and sciences senator and member of Arts and Sciences Council, said the council secretary resigned and it was not known that Bergen had been excused until after she had been told to step down.

"I decided not to contest it because I was already re-elected to senate and didn't think it was that important," Bergen said.

During director's reports, Dave Neuhaus, director of the Drug Education Center, reported to senate about the center's services. He said the center's name may be changed to Kansas State University Drug and Alcohol Services to be more descriptive of the services offered.

"We feel we're encountering more problems with alcohol and licit drugs than with illicit drugs," Neuhaus said.

The "biggest push" of the center is their educational programs, he said. Drug Ed reached about 2,000 people while giving 70 pressentations last year, he said.

The center has started a support program for people who are trying to quit using drugs but are encountering problems with peer pressure, Neuhaus said.

Three-fourths of the crisis calls received come from freshmen and sophomores, who are the heavy drinkers and drug users, he said.

Neuhaus expressed concern with the ease students obtain Valium and Librium (tranquilizers) from Lafene Health Center. One out of six students surveyed by Drug Ed is using or has used one of these drugs, he said.

"I'd like to find some way of putting some pressure on Lafene to slow them down a little," Neuhaus said.

Farmers, tractorcade roll through Manhattan

By ED REESE
Collegian Reporter

A tractorcade, consisting of four tractors and nine cars and pickups, visited Manhattan Thursday, stopping at the state office of the Agricultural Survey and Conservation Service (ASCS) to protest the 7 percent interest rate on federal agricultural grain loans.

The tractorcade also stopped at Ag Press to protest an article printed in Grass and Grain about the destruction caused by striking farmers in Washington, D.C.

Led by one police car, the tractorcade arrived at the ASCS office at about 12:30 p.m. The lead tractor carried a sign which reading "100 Percent Parity, Not Charity."

The farmers first talked to Herman Kastner, an ASCS program specialist, before talking to Jim Ray, state director of ASCS.

The farmers asked Ray how he conveyed the feelings of American Agriculture Movement (AAM) members in Kansas to Washington, and if he had been contacted by local ASCS offices about visits from local AAM members.

"What I've been doing, instead of calling and getting information misconstrued, is to send letters to my superiors in Washington, D.C.," Ray said.

THE FARMERS asked Ray if he would call his superiors in Washington, D.C. as well as send a letter.

Ray said he would happy to contact them.

"We'll call the southwestern regional office in Washington right now while we're standing here," he said.

Ray said the farmers could listen to the call by intercom and ask questions through it.

Ray first called Washington to talk with Bob Melbern, southwest regional director. He was told by the secretary that Melbern was in Hawaii.

Ray then phoned Grant Buntrock, assistant deputy director of the southwest regional office.

He told Buntrock he had 50 to 60 farmers in the State Committee Room and wanted to read him a letter presented to him by the farmers.

"We, the farmers and ranchers of the AAM in Kansas, wish it to be known that we support those still in Washington, D.C. on our behalf," Ray said, reading the letter. "Further we want the 1977 Farm Bill implemented to the fullest extent of 90 percent parity of the loan rate. Please call your superiors and give them this message from the AAM," Ray said.

RAY SAID he understood the farmers' condition, and said his father was still farming.

"Is he feeling the squeeze?" Daryl Wood of Manhattan asked.

"Sure he is, we all are," Ray said.

Wood asked if Ray could call the Kansas

Committee vote unanimous

Bill calls for Taiwan's security

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Senate Foreign Relations Committee voted unanimous approval Thursday of a "Taiwan security" bill declaring that continued U.S. recognition of the Peking government depends upon a peaceful approach by China towards Taiwan.

The committee, by a 10-0 vote, accepted compromise wording declaring that a threatened attack by the mainland against Taiwan would be "of grave concern to the United States."

The issue is expected to stir a fresh fight when the bill reaches the floor of the Senate.

While the vote on the Taiwan amendment was unanimous, a clearer indication of sentiment on the committee came earlier on wording suggested by Sen. Charles Percy (R-Ill.)

Percy's proposal that a move against Taiwan be considered a threat against "the security interest of the United States" was rejected 11-4.

THE WORDING approved by the committee had won the reluctant acceptance of President Carter, who announced last Dec. 15 that the United States would recognize Peking while cutting off diplomatic relations with Taiwan.

Thursday's vote will probably allow the full Senate to vote confirmation of Leonard Woodcock, whose nomination as the new ambassador to Peking had been entangled in the Taiwan issue.

The compromise, worked out by Sens. Frank Church, the committee's chairman, and Jacob Javits, its senior Republican, struck a balance between those whobelieve no Taiwan legislation is necessary and others who sought specific guarantees of a U.S. military response to a Chinese threat to the island.

Earlier, Javits said he doubted that the Taiwan security bill would jeopardize the new relationship with Peking. But he said a continued interest in the well-being of Taiwan is important enough to risk a break.

"If this is going to be the breaking point, then let it go," Javits said.

THE TAIWAN amendment fashioned by senior members of the committee with the reluctant agreement of the Carter administration is part of a broad China bill that the committee later went on to approve 13-0.

The bill gives Taiwanese members of a private corporation in the U.S. roughly the same privileges as diplomats of other nations.

The Coordinating Council for North American Affairs is to replace the Taiwan Embassy in the United States.

Its staff members are to carry out normal trade and cultural business with the United States through a counterpart private organization called the American Institute.

AAM representative in Washington at the Skyline Hotel.

Ken Lowens, an AAM representative from Medicine Lodge, answered and Ray told him of waiting farmers and read the note to him.

He also asked how many tractors were still in Washington.

Lowens said several tractors had left, but several were still in the city.

Ray asked the farmers if they wanted to say anything to the representative on the phone, and they all cheered.

"Before we all leave we would like the press to notice that no cigarettes were stamped out on the carpet, there is no tobacco on the wall, or plants that have been thrown out of the window," Larry Hefty, Corning, said.

"I'm pleased and happy to have meetings like this. We are here to serve the people in this state. I'm not disappointed or upset about them coming in. Being a farmer myself, I have the same concerns," Ray said.

"I would like to say more as a farmer, but I can't because of my superiors," he said.

He said he hoped the movement would make an impact and the AAM has done more than anyone to get Congress to move.

THE TRACTORCADE then went to Ag Press to talk with the editor of Grass and Grain.

Once they arrived, they talked with Dean Coughenour, owner of Ag Press, about the article. The farmers inquired if he knew anything about it.

Coughenour said he didn't know about the story, but he would get the editor of Grass and Grain.

"We're good friends (Ag Press and the farmers) and I don't like any bull," Coughenour said.

He then left the group. Frank Buchman, editor of Grass and Grain, was asked if he would retract the story.

"I don't have any intentions of redoing the story," Buchman said.

Plane slams into Kansas City home

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Two men were killed Thursday when their twin-engine plane plunged through dense fog and slammed into a house in an exclusive area of Kansas City two blocks from an elementary school.

The only person in the house was in an upstairs bedroom at the time of the crash and escaped safely from the blazing structure, which is located less than two miles from Downtown Airport.

One passenger on the plane was pulled alive from the craft by a neighbor who is a private pilot.

"I heard this noise, a big explosion, and I started to call the fire department," said Judith Perkins, the only member of the family at home when the crash occured.

"I looked down over the railing and there were flames in the hallway...the motor of the plane was on fire...so I ran to my son's room at the other end of the house, closed the door behind me, took out the window and climbed out on the roof and gutter and dropped down," she said.

Firefighters extinguished the fire quickly after it engulfed the plane, the attached garage and one corner of the fashionable, colonial two-story frame home.

Chinese move to cut off Hanoi

BANGKOK, Thailand—Chinese infantrymen and tanks smashed into defense lines in Vietnam's northeast corner in a two-pronged assault that could cut off thousands of Hanoi's troops from reinforcements and supplies, intelligence sources in Bangkok and Peking reported Thursday.

A government official in Peking said China is not yet satisfied it has achieved the objective of its six-day-old invasion.

"The thing is that the Vietnamese must feel our punishment," Japan's Kyodo news service quoted the unidentified official as saying.

Peking says the invasion was launched to retaliate for Vietnamese border provocations and "teach a lesson" to Hanoi.

Vietnam said fighting raged Thursday on battlefields all along the 450-mile Chinese-Vietnamese border, the Soviet news agency Tass reported.

It appeared the Chinese were accomplishing one possible goal of their invasion—easing Vietnamese military pressure on the forces of the ousted pro-Chinese government in Cambodia.

Intelligence sources in Bangkok said 30,000 of the estimated 100,000 Vietnamese troops in Cambodia were ordered to return to Vietnam. New guerrilla offenses against the Vietnamese were reported in Cambodia Wednesday.

Radio Hanoi said 12,000 Chinese troops had been killed in the first five days of fighting.

Iran to resume oil exports

TEHRAN, Iran—Iran will resume oil exports very soon, Deputy Prime Minister Ebrahim Yazdi said Thursday.

Yazdi did not say exactly when the exports would resume or in what amount.

Loss of Iran's oil exports, which peaked at about 5 million barrels a day during the rule of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, has thrown the world oil market into chaos.

Iran's wells have started producing at the rate of about 700,000 barrels a day for domestic use. Before oilfield strikes crippled production last fall, the U.S. brought about 10 percent of its imported oil from Iran. Europe and Japan also relied heavily on Iranian oil.

Under the shah, Iran sold oil to Israel and South Africa, but Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said that will be stopped. Khomeini's government has promised to resume sales to the U.S., despite strong American backing for the shah. The U.S. has since recognized the Khomeini government.

Senate puts lid on Carlin

TOPEKA—As expected, the Kansas Senate overwhelmingly voted Thursday to override Gov. John Carlin's veto of a state spending lid bill the Legislature had sent him a week earlier.

The vote was 38-1, the same tally by which the Senate had approved the final conference committee report sending the measure to the governor. Sen. Charlie Angell (R-Plains) voted against it, and Senate Majority Leader Norman Gaar was absent and didn't vote.

The veto message was sent to the House, where Majority Leader Bob Frey (R-Liberal) said it would be taken up Friday morning.

Weather

Good morning. Several K-State basketball fans have requested a weather forecast for Saturday's Big 8 title game at Norman, Okla. According to our official data, the weather will be clear, warm and dry inside of the Lloyd Noble Arena. Well, enough for request line. Today in Manhattan will be clear to partly cloudy with highs in the 40s. A cooling trend begins tonight, and highs Saturday will reach only into the low 30s.

Policemen block garbagemen; Mardi Gras parades stalled

NEW ORLEANS (AP)—Police escalated their six-day-old strike against the city Thursday, throwing up picket lines at fire stations and garbage depots. Sanitation workers refused to cross the lines and no garbage was picked up, but firefighters stayed on the job.

Officials of the firefighters' union, whose own contract with the city expires March 1, urged their men to continue perform their duties. Fire department officials said they had no reports of firemen walking off the job.

The police strike already had prompted cancellation of all Mardi Gras parades in the city, and a group of merchants announced Thursday it was suing the police union for $30 million in damages because of Carnival and Mardi Gras losses.

In another development Thursday, Civil District Judge Richard Garvey declared police union officials in contempt of court. He had declared the strike illegal on Wednesday and left it up to the city to initiate contempt proceedings. The union had ignored two earlier back-to-work orders from Garvey.

Garvey commanded union officers to appear at a hearing Saturday. Maximum punishment would be six months in jail and a $500 fine.

The garbagemen—affiliated with the Teamsters like the police—made it clear they were not on strike, but they honored police lines that appeared in front of all the city's truck depots.

A substitute force of 600 National Guardsmen and 150 state police took over police duties after 1,100 of the 1,500 officers walked out on Feb. 16. However, Louisiana Gov. Edwin Edwards has said guardsmen would not pick up garbage.

A KEY ISSUE in the dispute was a union demand for binding arbitration. Mayor Ernest Morial testified in state District Court Thursday that binding arbitration would be illegal but said he might be forced into it.

Another key issue was whether the union's contract would cover ranking officers. City officials had argued that would give the Teamsters virtual control of the police and sanitation departments.

Opinions

Those feet were made for walking—remember?

No one can afford to waste gasoline with the supply situation as undependable as it is now.

Driving to school while living within a walkable distance is wasteful.

But just what is a walkable distance?

There are some students and faculty members who walk as many as 12 blocks to school.

There are other students who drive as little as one block.

Then there are all the amounts in between.

People cringe at the thought of walking 10 or 15 minutes a day, which is the amount needed to cover most distances from home to the University. These same people think nothing of taking hours out of their schedules for regular exercise activities such as tennis or handball.

Besides, it takes no more time to walk to school than it takes to circle the lots looking for those precious parking stalls. (Another great waste of gas.) And just think of all the physical benefits derived from 10 or 15 minutes of regular exercise a day.

Of course, the excuses for driving are as endless as the line of cars streaming from the University at 5 p.m. But that's all they are—excuses, not reasons.

It takes too much time, there are too many books to carry, it's too cold outside, it's too hot outside, it's raining, that sun is unbearable, etc...the list goes on and on.

If all the people with excuses would quit driving, then the people with legitimate reasons would have considerably less hassle to face each day going to and from school.

That goes for students, faculty, administrators and employees.

The next time you get in that car to drive those two, four or even six blocks to school, take at look at those feet and remember what they were made for—walking.

Sounds of plumbing not morning music

The alarm blared like Minnie Pearl in concert,"HOW-DDD-YY!" It wasn't the most pleasant voice for my morning arousal.

And I didn't even get to finish dreaming about the "Mystery Man" dressed in a flannel and seersucker bunny suit. He was just ready to kiss me when..."O-OO-OWW!"

My cigarette lighter ignited his whiskers, and the flames spread to his fat, drooping ears. While hopping to and fro, he muttered some lousy excuse about not seeing me again because I never had enough carrots around the house.

"Well," I murmured to myself in a groggy tone, "he can have his carrots and eat them, too. I'll never rest my eyes on another rabbit again."

What really got to me that morning was waking up to a sick bathroom. It was a hideous harmony. The sink and tub conducted a jam session of soprano spits, alto oozes, tenor clanks and other mouth-boggling drools.

I gave a Class A performance in wearing, frowning and biting my tongue. Together, we must have made some hit.

LITTLE DID my toes realize they were wiggling in toilet water (no, it wasn't perfume.) Ridiculously, I stood in the swamp for a moment debating whether to go take a peek at the "throne."

I did. Was I sorry. The Royal Majesty was totally dehydrated. I mean, I had never seen an island without water before. The Ty-D-Bol man must have been thirsty.

I panicked. I felt helpless. I tried plunging, stuffing, (cussing and fussing), tinkering, consoling (CONSOLING?), jabbing, hissing, sobbing, kicking and most of all, pleading. But it was useless.

For my last resort, I threate ed the pipes and drains that I would turn into Carrie Nation and do a great hatchet-job number on them if they didn't straighten up. But they just laughed and spouted off—rude little pip-squeaks, aren't they?

I hate to admit I'm a poor doctor. I called the plumber, and watched a miracle take place. How he healed their wounds so fast is beyond me.

After the plumber left, I needed a drink...or two...or four. Unfortunately, the strongest elixir available in the refrigerator was cranberry juice.

Shrugging my shoulders, I poured a glass, pretended and sunk back into oblivion—but not until I put on Simon and Garfunkel's, "The Sounds of Silence."

Kassebaum fights battles

Editor,

This letter is written in response to the editorial written in the Feb. 8 Collegian by Sharon Buckner entitled "Senator Shirks Battle for Farmer's Resolution."

If Sharon would have researched her topic in greater depth she would have found Ms. Kassebaum's following activities for that week:

1) Introduced the Agricultural Parity Equity Act of 1979, which provides short-term economic assistance to farmers through voluntary incentives to conserve land, while retaining flexibility for both the producer and the marketplace. Also, the bill establishes a Cost-of-Production Board of farmers to report to USDA.

2) Met with President Carter at the White House, urging him to use existing authority to increase loan rates for grains. The response was negative.

3) Met with Secretary of Agriculture Bergland and Sen. Dole. Again, the response to a loan rate increase was negative.

4) Met with the District of Columbia police force regarding the impoundment of tractors and police overreaction to the demonstration.

5) Like Sen. Dole, Sen. Kassebaum has chosen not to co-sponsor the resolution guaranteeing 90 percent of parity loan rates, but rather she has chosen to take a more realistic approach of working toward future legislation that will be more workable and have more tangible results.

Smokers snub danger warnings

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Dee Merritt of Mill Valley, Calif., thinks smoking is "an absolutely dumb habit...detrimental to my health."

But the 42-year-old Merritt, owner of a travel agency, also says she likes to smoke. "I think it has to do with a hidden psychological need (and) nothing will make me stop smoking until I can find out what that need is."

There are an estimated 54 million tobacco smokers in the United States. They are told, almost daily, of new links between smoking and cancer, smoking and heart attacks, smoking and ulcers.

Every time cigarette smokers pick up a pack, the reminder is there, ordered by the government: "Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Cigarette Smoking Is Dangerous to Your Health."

THAT WARNING stems from a 1964 surgeon general's report that linked cigarettes to lung cancer in men. Last month, on the 15th anniversary of the first study, the surgeon general issued another report, confirming the dangers, not only from lung cancer, but from other illnesses as well and not only to men, but to women.

Why do so many millions of people ignore the warnings? Why, like Ms. Merritt, do they keep on puffing?

"Obviously, it's pleasurable," said William Dunn Jr., head scientist at Philip Morris Inc.'s research center in Richmond, Va.

"The fact that something is dangerous is not enough to keep people from doing it," said Dan Horn, a retired researcher who worked on the first surgeon general's report and gave up smoking as a result.

"For many people, it's a matter of making a choice," said Horn. "Many smokers don't realize the very high probability of injury." They read the reports, but figure it won't happen to them, they'll get away with it. "Well," said Horn, "not very many people get away with it."

He added: "It's surprising how few people express a real liking for their smoking ... Most say they do it because it does something for them ... kind of an anxiety reducer."

A NEW study indicates that the death rate from lung cancer will probably decline in coming years because many smokers have switched to cleaner cigarettes. But the doctors who conducted the study—which was reported Thursday in the New England Journal of Medicine—said that smoking is still dangerous and should be avoided.

A Mankato, Minn., farmer who asked not to have his name used, said he doesn't believe all the warnings. "People who have smoked for years are still alive," he said.

Lloyd Busch, 34, a Ph.D. candidate at Emory University's Institute of Liberal Arts in Atlanta, knows that smoking is bad for him. "I guess I rationalize that the damage has been done ... I think I'm one of those people who smoke and get a positive jolt out of it."

Philip Morris' Dunn said many people are "getting quite a bit of pleasure out of the simple act of smoking." He said smokers look at the risks of illness and often think: "I'm willing to take my chances of being that one (who gets sick)."

Dunn added: "There are two motivations involved in the case of the smoker ... The initiation of smoking when one is young—this is peer pressure, the creation of an image of oneself ...

"The maintenance of the smoking act is something else again ... Many of us feel there is some central nervous system effect ... Smoking seems to improve our coping efficiency."

Gary Berntson, an Ohio State University researcher, says that smokers may be extra-sensitive to stress; the nicotine can help them deal with that stress. "In that sense," he said, "it's therapeutic and that's why I think people smoke."

Dr. Jerome Jaffe of the New York State Psychiatric Institute said there are distinct groups of smokers, each of which has its own reasons for continuing.

"I think that some smokers have ... ways of convincing themselves that it (the danger) either doesn't apply to them or that it's not immediate ... Then there's a subgroup of smokers who say that this is something that makes them feel better ... They'd rather live a few years less and enjoy themselves.

"Another group says they simply can't function without cigarettes. ... Some of them manage to deny everything. They don't see the warnings. They don't want to hear them. They don't want to think about them."

EPA looks to Chicago as atomic-waste dump

DENVER (AP)—The search for radioactive dump sites expanded from Colorado to other states Thursday as health officials sought to trace the remnants of Denver's once-bustling radium industry.

Paul Smith, regional director of the Environmental Protection Agency, said the investigation into potentially radioactive sites had been broadened to include the Chicago area and towns in Pennsylvania.

Meanwhile, officials, who originally had believed that 11 contaminated sites located in the Denver area contained uranium, said they were convinced now that the sites contained the significantly more dangerous radium.

In the early 1900s, Denver was a center for the processing of uranium to produce radium, which was then used in medical treatment.

"The machinery is just getting into action," Smith said. "We have done considerable more literature research and alerted other areas potentially involved."

ONE SUCH site might exist in Chicago, Smith said, where tons of Colorado uranium were shipped between 1915 and 1920 to the Carnotite Reduction Co. Efforts to locate the exact site of the now defunct company have been unsuccessful, he said.

Hundreds of tons of Colorado uranium were shipped to Pennsylvania during roughly the same period, Smith said, adding that the towns of Canonsburg and Landsdowne were previously known sites of radium processing.

In the Denver area, excessive radiation levels has been discovered at 11 sites that served as disposal areas for radioactive materials from radium processing.

NONE OF the high-radation sites presents any immediate health danger, but officials have expressed concern about possible long-term exposure to radiation leaking from the dumps.

Drilling at the first of the sites has revealed that "it was almost 100 percent radium," said Jim Montgomery, chief of the Health Department's radiation control section.

"Uranium is one of the least radioactive substances," Montgomery said. "Radium is just the opposite. It's one of the worst."

Exposure to radium can produce cancer and genetic defects and radon gas released from the radioactive decay of radium can cause lung cancer, Montgomery said.

The discovery of the radioactve sites in Denver resulted from the chance discovery by an EPA employee of a reference in an old Bureau of Mines yearbook to radium processing in Denver.

Radioactive contamination has been found, among other places, in downtown Denver building, beneath the sidewalk outside a pancake restaurant and beside a creek in Boulder, 30 miles northwest of Denver.

Tired Tucker turnout could cancel concerts

A poor turnout for the Marshall Tucker concert this weekend could cost the Union $15,000 and students the chance to see any more performers at K-State this semester.

"The loss has caused the reconsideration of a concert set for April 24," said Myron Molzen, Union Programming Council (UPC) concert coordinator.

"We were also seriously considering having Robin Williams (Mork of 'Mork and Mindy') come the weekend before dead week, but now that's off for sure," Molzen said.

There have also been scheduling problems with the shows, he added.

"For example, we got a lot of static about scheduling this concert over the K-State Players production of 'Carousel,' and there is also a Block and Bridle dance scheduled for the same night," he said.

"You have to understand, we are not a major market so we have to take what we can get as far as scheduling good concerts," Molzen said. "We were able to get Marshall Tucker while they were between shows. They will be in Wichita Friday night, here Saturday and in Kansas City Sunday."

MARSHALL TUCKER BAND concerts have not been selling well this tour, according to Molzen. "I don't know what it is. I just know we have never lost money like this before," he said.

The Jerry Lewis show last semester also lost money, but nothing compares to the concert loss of this weekend, Molzen said.

"We don't know exactly what will happen in the future," Molzen said. "We have been instructed by Walt Smith (Union Director) not to schedule over anything else, but if we start doing this we won't be able to do any shows at all."

Was there really a shortage of newsprint at the Collegian, or was it just an excuse to run green paper and give the editor something to write about?

A.Z.

I referred this question to the Collegian's paper buyer Bill Brown. He admitted he was looking for an excuse to get rid of the glaring green paper but claims there is a real paper shortage. In fact, he's stockpiled "squeezably soft" tissue for use in an emergency. If it is ever used, disgruntled readers might be able to do what they've always wanted with the Collegian but were afraid to try.

SNAFU

Why doesn't Jack Hartman have any short basketball players?

D.R.

Be patient. Someday he'll have many short players, and I mean many. As Abe Lemon, Texas University Coach, said the NCAA should lower the baskets to floor level.

The players would drop the ball in the hole for two points, and the big guys would be at a disadvantage.

But, knowing the way things go around here, everyone would complain that K-State has no "little guy." So we'll do the best we can and get someone who's not real small—maybe 3-foot-9-inches. Somehow he'll get the job done, and we'll win the Big 8.

So, you see, all the rumors about Jack Hartman blacklisting short players are not true. I've even heard rumors that Hartman was once less than four feet tall...I think it was in the first grade.

SNAFU

For what purpose are the campus police blocking the left lane leading out of Umberger Hall? It's a one way street with yield signs on both the right and left. Every day at 5 p.m., The Security and Traffic officers block the left lane.

L.S.

The purpose is known only to Security and Traffic. The department did admit to sometimes having a patrol car in the left lane, but added that the right lane was left clear for traffic. Someone once told me not to question the "purposes" of administrators. Maybe we should both take his advice and walk to school.

America writes to its leader; letters inundate White House

Do you think the president cares about your problems? You could write him a letter to ask him, but chances are he'll never see it.

President Carter receives more than 50,000 letters each week—that's more than 2.5 million each year.

All letters to the president are read by someone, but fewer than 1 percent of them ever reach the hands of the president. Form letters are sent out from the White House by the hundreds each day, according to Merlin Gustafson, professor of political science.

GUSTAFSON HAS been doing extensive research on letter writing to American presidents since 1928. He has studied letters written during the terms of Hoover, Roosevelt, Truman, Eisenhower and Ford.

Gustafson said the handling of letters to the president is a complex operation.

"I like to quote Truman when he said, 'the President is more than one man.' He relies on his staff," Gustafson said.

Presidents rely on staff members to answer, file and classify letters.

Former President Gerald Ford had a staff of more than 150 to handle his mail.

"Now there is a machine that signs the letters with the signature of the president," Gustafson said.

SOMETIMES THE president will personally answer a letter from a small child, and a press release will be written about the event, he said.

When letters are received, they are stapled to the envelope, said Charles Goodwin, staff assistant for the White House press office.

The letters are then sent in batches of 100 to analysts who sit and read them. The analysts sort the mail according to the subject matter, he said.

When the mail reaches the White House correspondence office, it is sorted again, he said. Letters that are unsigned, have no return address or don't need an answer "hit the files" immediately, Goodwin said.

The few letters that need more than a form letter for an answer are sent to the White House staff. Other letters are sent to various federal agencies.

THE LETTERS go through a weighing process in which the White House staff decides the importance of each letter.

Of course, there are exceptions, Gustafson said. The staff has to know the close friends and relatives of the president.

"I am impressed by the time past presidents have spent in writing their family," he said.

"The amount of paperwork the President has to do is astounding. It is an important part of the day to handle correspondence."

"Many people look to him (the president) as a father figure," he said. "They write to him about trivial matters."

THE OPINIONS expressed in letters to the president are counted on a polling system similar to voting, Gustafson said. They are recorded and tabulated and the results are available to the president whenever he needs them.

"The letters are valued more than polls because they show depth of feelings," Gustafson said. "Letter writing is an outlet."

Many people write the president because they are urged by a lobbying organization. "These letters aren't a good basis for public policy," Goodwin said. "The letters received on an issue are usually lopsided one way or another."

The first lady receives her share of mail, too, Goodwin said. She averages 2,998 letters per week.

House bill to fill potholes; federal funds for local use

Topeka (AP)—Two appropriations bills won preliminary approval in the Kansas House Thursday after members voted 80-44 to send the Senate a bill to give the state Corporation Commission a stronger hand in dealing with power plant construction.

The two appropriations measures will be up for final votes Friday.

Passage would send both to the Senate, one of them for the first time. The other goes back for consideration of House amendments.

The amended bill would give various state agencies authority to spend $18.23 million additional in the current fiscal year, including $1.58 million in state general funds.

The total is $38,000 less than recommended by Gov. John Carlin but the general fund amount is unchanged from his recommendation.

The big item in the bill would allow the Kansas Department of Transportation to pass $16.46 additional in federal funds on to local units of government for road and street projects.

The appropriations bill would provide $8.21 million in spending authority for various state fee agencies in the next fiscal year. The amount is unchanged from the governor's budget recommendations and includes no general fund money.

"Illusion will exist in the fullest meaning of the term when no experiment, even should it convince the mind, is able to undeceive the senses...If you place a stick partly in and partly out of water, you will see it crooked at the water's surface. Take it out of the water and you will realize that it is straight. However, although our intelligence now knows that it is straight, it will seem crooked again if we put it back into the water. Science teaches that this is due to the refraction of light caused by the liquid medium. We understand what the scientist tells us; we believe him, but we go on seeing a crooked stick."

The illusion of food is becoming a crooked stick. Searching the contents of packaged foods, consumers stumble through the ingredients.

Even the "wholesome" sounding cracked wheat bread contains polysorbate 60, soybean oil and partially hydrogenated soybean oil. These foods are consumed to nurture man. The products are purchased, their purpose unquestioned and their value unknown. And the stick is seen as straight. But it isn't.

Surely there are foodstuffs that are natural, but they have become an oddity. But is it really a matter of food being an illusion? Not in the physical sense, obviously a bowl of soup is what is seen. But there is an illusion about what food is, that people subsist on something created from chemicals.

What are these components, created in a laboratory, that are consumed? The scientist does indeed tell us, but to what extent do we understand?

'To veg or not to veg'

Loma Linda Foods have a wholesome outlook

Ever wonder what life would be like without the all-mighty hamburger? Adam and Eve never had one.

And today, the Seventh-day Adventists still believe that the meatless diet is best. Instead, they substitute vegetable proteins, rather than get their protein from meat which might be diseased.

The church's continuing interest in non-meat protein dishes is contributing to a burgeoning health food industry in several countries. One country is the United States, and one such industry is Loma Linda Foods.

The Loma Linda Foods company, established in 1906, is based in Loma Linda, Calif., and is owned and operated by the Seventh-day Adventists Church. What can be said about the company can also be said about the church.

Their basic philosophy includes simplicity of life, preparing for disaster and a healthful diet. Because the Adventists are concerned with promoting good health, roughly 50 percent of the members do not include meat in their meals.

According to Mrs. Ellie Sutton, Manhattan resident and former employee of Loma Linda Foods, "It isn't what we call a test of fellowship. About half of the church are vegetarians. But those who do eat meat, eat what we call the 'clean meats'—beef, but no pork."

The acceptance of the health teachings of the Seventh-day Adventists, which Sutton has been for 11 years, is not a requirement of church members. It is merely a practical counsel for healthful living.

"The Seventh-day Adventists believe in the original diet as God created it in the beginning," Sutton said. "They also believe that man's digestive system was designed for the ingestion of vegetables, grains and fruits, rather than the flesh foods."

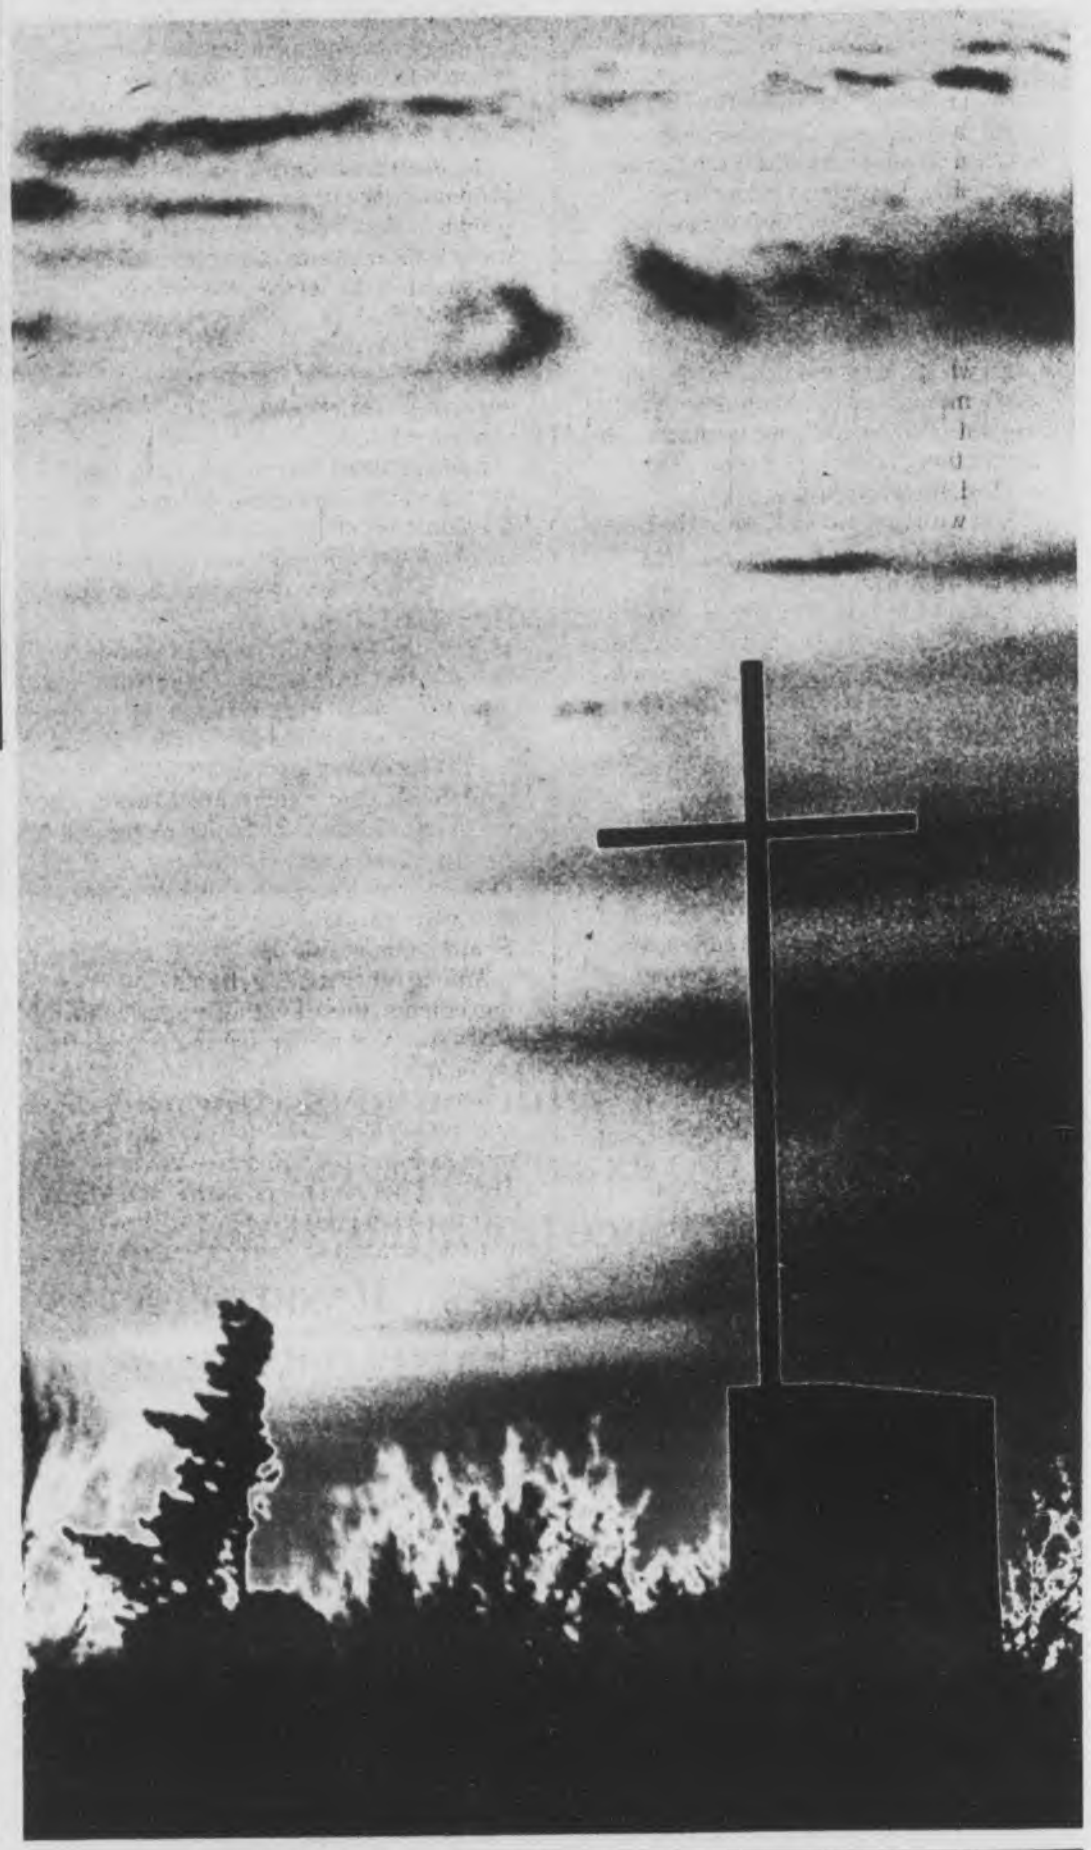
Loma Linda products have several advantages. They contain no animal fat and little, if any, cholesterol.

The products neither have to be trimmed of waste, nor do they shrink during cooking like meat does.

Another advantage is that the high-protein content of most Loma Linda foods can be extended as much as 55 percent by the addition of other foods. They are also high in vitamins and minerals.

Sutton serves her family dishes prepared with Loma Linda products everyday. "But don't believe that they taste just like meat," she said. "They don't. They have a little bit different flavor. A person has to get used to them."

The Seventh-day Adventists and Loma Linda Foods supply medical institutions with their products. Both also operate their own hospitals, including the Loma Linda Medical School for doctors and dentists. The vegetarian diet is important for the patient's treatment.



The medical school is directly associated with Loma Linda University and its sister college, LaSierra College, which specialized in the liberal arts.

Overall, the Adventists maintain two universities and eight colleges in the United States. Only a vegetarian diet is served to their students. The Adventists also operate schools located in France, England, New Zealand and India.

As a result of all the vegetarian controversy, there seems to be an interest developing over the issue "to veg or not to veg."

"Vegetarianism is just really beginning to go here," Sutton said. "But you'll find it going on a lot more on the West Coast."

Synthetic foods:

A rude awakening

Good morning! Pull yourself out of bed. It's breakfast time. Breakfast, the last solace before venturing out into the laboring world.

What will it be this morning? Eggs? Bacon? Sausage? What kind of oasis awaits in the refrigerator?

Wait a minute. Egg substitute, artificial sausage, non-dairy creamer, imitation bacon? No wonder the farmer is in trouble. You can't find a chicken who will lay a cholesterol-free egg in a frozen paper carton.

According to Consumer Reports Magazine, "Humorist S.J. Perelman once wrote a playlet, set at the North Pole in which, at one point, one of Santa's gnomes offers a colleague a dish of wax fruit. The second gnome takes a bite, chews it thoughtfully, and remarks, 'It ain't bad, for wax fruit.'"

Begin with margarine, one of the first substitute foods. Margarine was invented for economic reasons. During the depression and war years butter was rationed and consumers cut down on its use until scientists made a less expensive spread out of vegetable oil. There was some objection from the dairy industry when margarine was first colored yellow to match the color of butter.

Today, lining the dairy section, you find butter, margarine and a new product, imitation margarine, lower in fats. Both margarine and its successor contain the same major ingredient, soy. Imperial Margarine and Blue Bonnet "Light Tasty Spread" are two products containing soybean oil and liquid soybean.

Before we reach any further into the refrigerator, it might make sense to clarify what "fake food" is.

According to The Kansas City Star Press Service, The Food and Drug Administraiton said, "Present regulations require a food that resembles another food to be called 'imitation' if it is inferior in nutrition to the food it imitates. If the substitute is nutritionally equivalent or superior to an existing product, the manufacturer may give it a different name, such as margarine, rather than call it imitation."

Also according to the Star's Press Service, "Fabricated foods do offer cost reductions in the types of ingredients used, they do not depend on the weather, and they cannot be attacked by insects that plague their natural counterparts."

Finding out what is in a product is no problem. Most foods must have a list of ingredients on the label. What the label doesn't tell is how much of each ingredient is in the product. By Federal regulation, however, food ingredients must be listed in order of predominance.

This is descending order of predominance by weight in a food, weight doesn't tell just how much sugar, salt or fat a product contains.

Soybean is an ingredient that claims predominance in quite a few grocery products. As a rule, conventional margarine contains 80 percent fat. This is usually in the form of soybean or cottonseed oil.

Out of 45 brands of margarine tested by Consumer Reports, all but 10 contain soybean or cottonseed oil. The rest contain corn oil.

Enough about margarine. Let's consider a whole assortment of frozen breakfast products.

Let's start with eggs, or rather, let's not start with eggs. We'll start with egg substitute.

The Fleishmann Division of Standard Brands, Inc., introduced a synthetic, egg-like fluid called "Egg Beaters," a "cholesterol free egg substitute."

"They look, cook and taste like farm-fresh whole eggs" according to advertising. But don't be fooled by the picture of egg shells on the carton. "Egg Beaters" don't contain a separate yolk and white. So you'll never see an "Egg Beater" sunny side up.

Among other multi-syllabic ingredients, these synthetic eggs contain soybean. (You remember our friends the soybean.)

According to a Consumer Reports analyses, "Egg Beaters" averaged 140 milligrams of sodium per two ounces. That's 28 percent more than a real egg, a fact that could be important to heart patients who must restrict their sodium intake.

Products like "Egg Beaters" and Morningstar Farms "Scramblers" may be frozen blocks of gold for a person skeptical of cholesterol; otherwise, at 20 to 50 percent more than the cost of fresh eggs, it may not be worth the money to buy these novel "square" eggs.

In the same frozen breakfast section, you'll find "Breakfast Links" and "Breakfast Patties" from Morningstar Farms, "artificial sausage flavor" made of "textured vegetable protein."

This textured vegetable protein is,...Yup. Soybean. Along with wheat gluten, yeast, water, corn oil, Hydrolyzed (apparently totally hydrolyzed) vegetable protein and sugar.

Morningstar Farms also has a product called "Breakfast Strips" in "artificial bacon flavor." It too contains soybean along with carob beans and guar gum. (It sound like something Br'er Rabbit might have eaten.)

In the frozen entrees, you can have scrambled eggs and sausage with coffee cake by Swanson. The sausages contain pork and our old friend, the soybean. As an extra point, a 32-ounce frozen entree actually contains only about two ounces of meat. A serving of six ounces would be more typical of the adult appetite, according to Consumer Reports.

Maybe you aren't hungry for eggs, sausage or bacon. How about pancakes or waffles? Frozen waffles are an interesting breed.

Kelloggs doesn't seem to know exactly what igredients are in their frozen "Eggo" waffles. They contain "one of the following—soybean, palm, cottonseed."

You could have Aunt Jemima Blueberry Pancake Mix with cottonseed blueberries, or Downy Flake waffles with "artificial blueberry bits." Most pancake mixes available at Dillon's Super Market contain soybean.

Right next door are the blueberry muffin mixes. The ingredients, however, don't include blueberries.

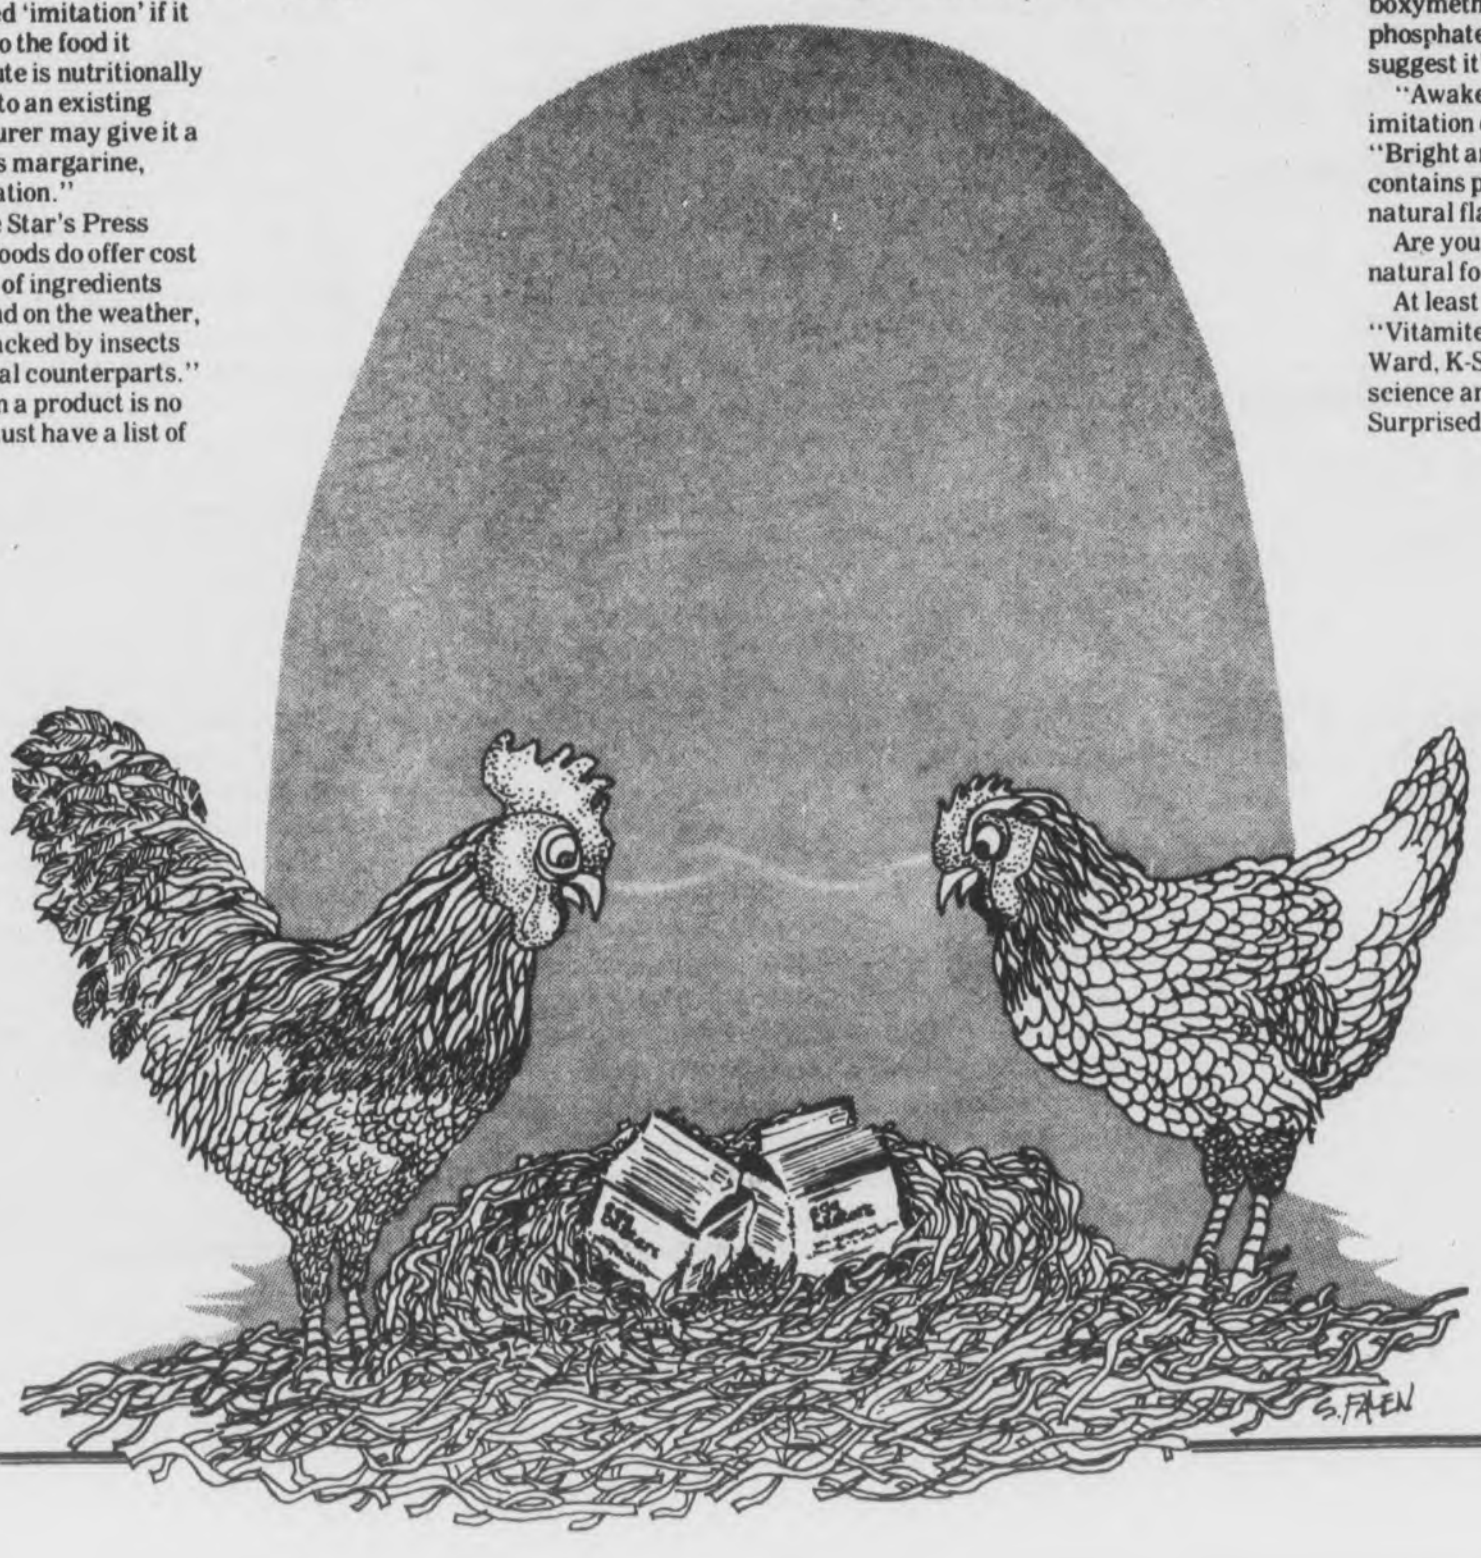
Maybe you'd rather not have pancakes or muffins. Anyway, if you did find a pancake you like, you'd still have trouble finding real maple syrup.

Generic pancake and waffle syrup contain three percent maple, "Golden Grittle" contains two percent, Aunt Jemima, two percent, and Log Cabin "Country Kitchen" had no maple at all. "Staley Syrup" is 100 percent natural, natural maple flavoring that is.

Only one syrup, "Vermont Maple Syrup," contained pure maple. It cost $8.66 per can.

How about hot chocolate for chilly days? Only one out of 21 instant dry mixes tested by Consumer Report actually contained chocolate. All contained cocoa, but even cocoa isn't their primary ingredient. Sugar is. And most of them also contain cottonseed and, of course, soybean.

There is a new product, still being tested, that duplicates the flavor and texture of cocoa. It is made from roasted brewer's yeast and can replace up to 100 percent of the cocoa in baking goods, dairy products and dry mixes according to Herb Knechten, president of Knechtel Laboratories of Skokie, Illinois, as quoted by the Star Press Service.



Fresh orange juice. You can still buy fresh orange juice, but be careful. On the grocer's shelf you'll find orange juice containing 100 percent orange juice, next to 50 percent orange juice next to 10 percent orange juice, next to zero percent orange juice.

Orange drink mixes' ingredients include—but are not limited to—aliginate, artificial color and flavor, BHA, BHT, copper gluconate, corn syrup, cottonseed oil, soybean oil, dioctyo sodium sulfo succinate, magnesium oxide, modified starches, sodium, carboxymethylecellulose, tricalcium phosphate, xanthan gum, and others that suggest it's not orange juice.

"Awake," frozen concentrate for imitation orange juice, contains no juice. "Bright and Early" frozen concentrate contains pulp. Some brand contain natural flavor from rind.

Are you surprised at the amount of natural food you'e not eating?

At least have a glass of milk. It's called "Vitamite" and according to George M. Ward, K-State professor in animal science and industry, it's artificial milk. Surprised?

The age of test-tube foods

Shopping in the superlab

'I cannot understand why people keep on clinging to the myth of the superiority of nature. If anything, synthetic products are better than natural ones...'

Most people think of food as something that farmers grow for people to eat. Not quite. The final step in manufactured food has been taken. Synthetic food is here. The new farm is the laboratory, and the American provider is a multinational, multiproduct food oligopoly.

Fabrication of protein, fat or carbohydrate into food products is not a new technological development, but it is new to consumers who believe that there have been undesireable changes in the food supply.

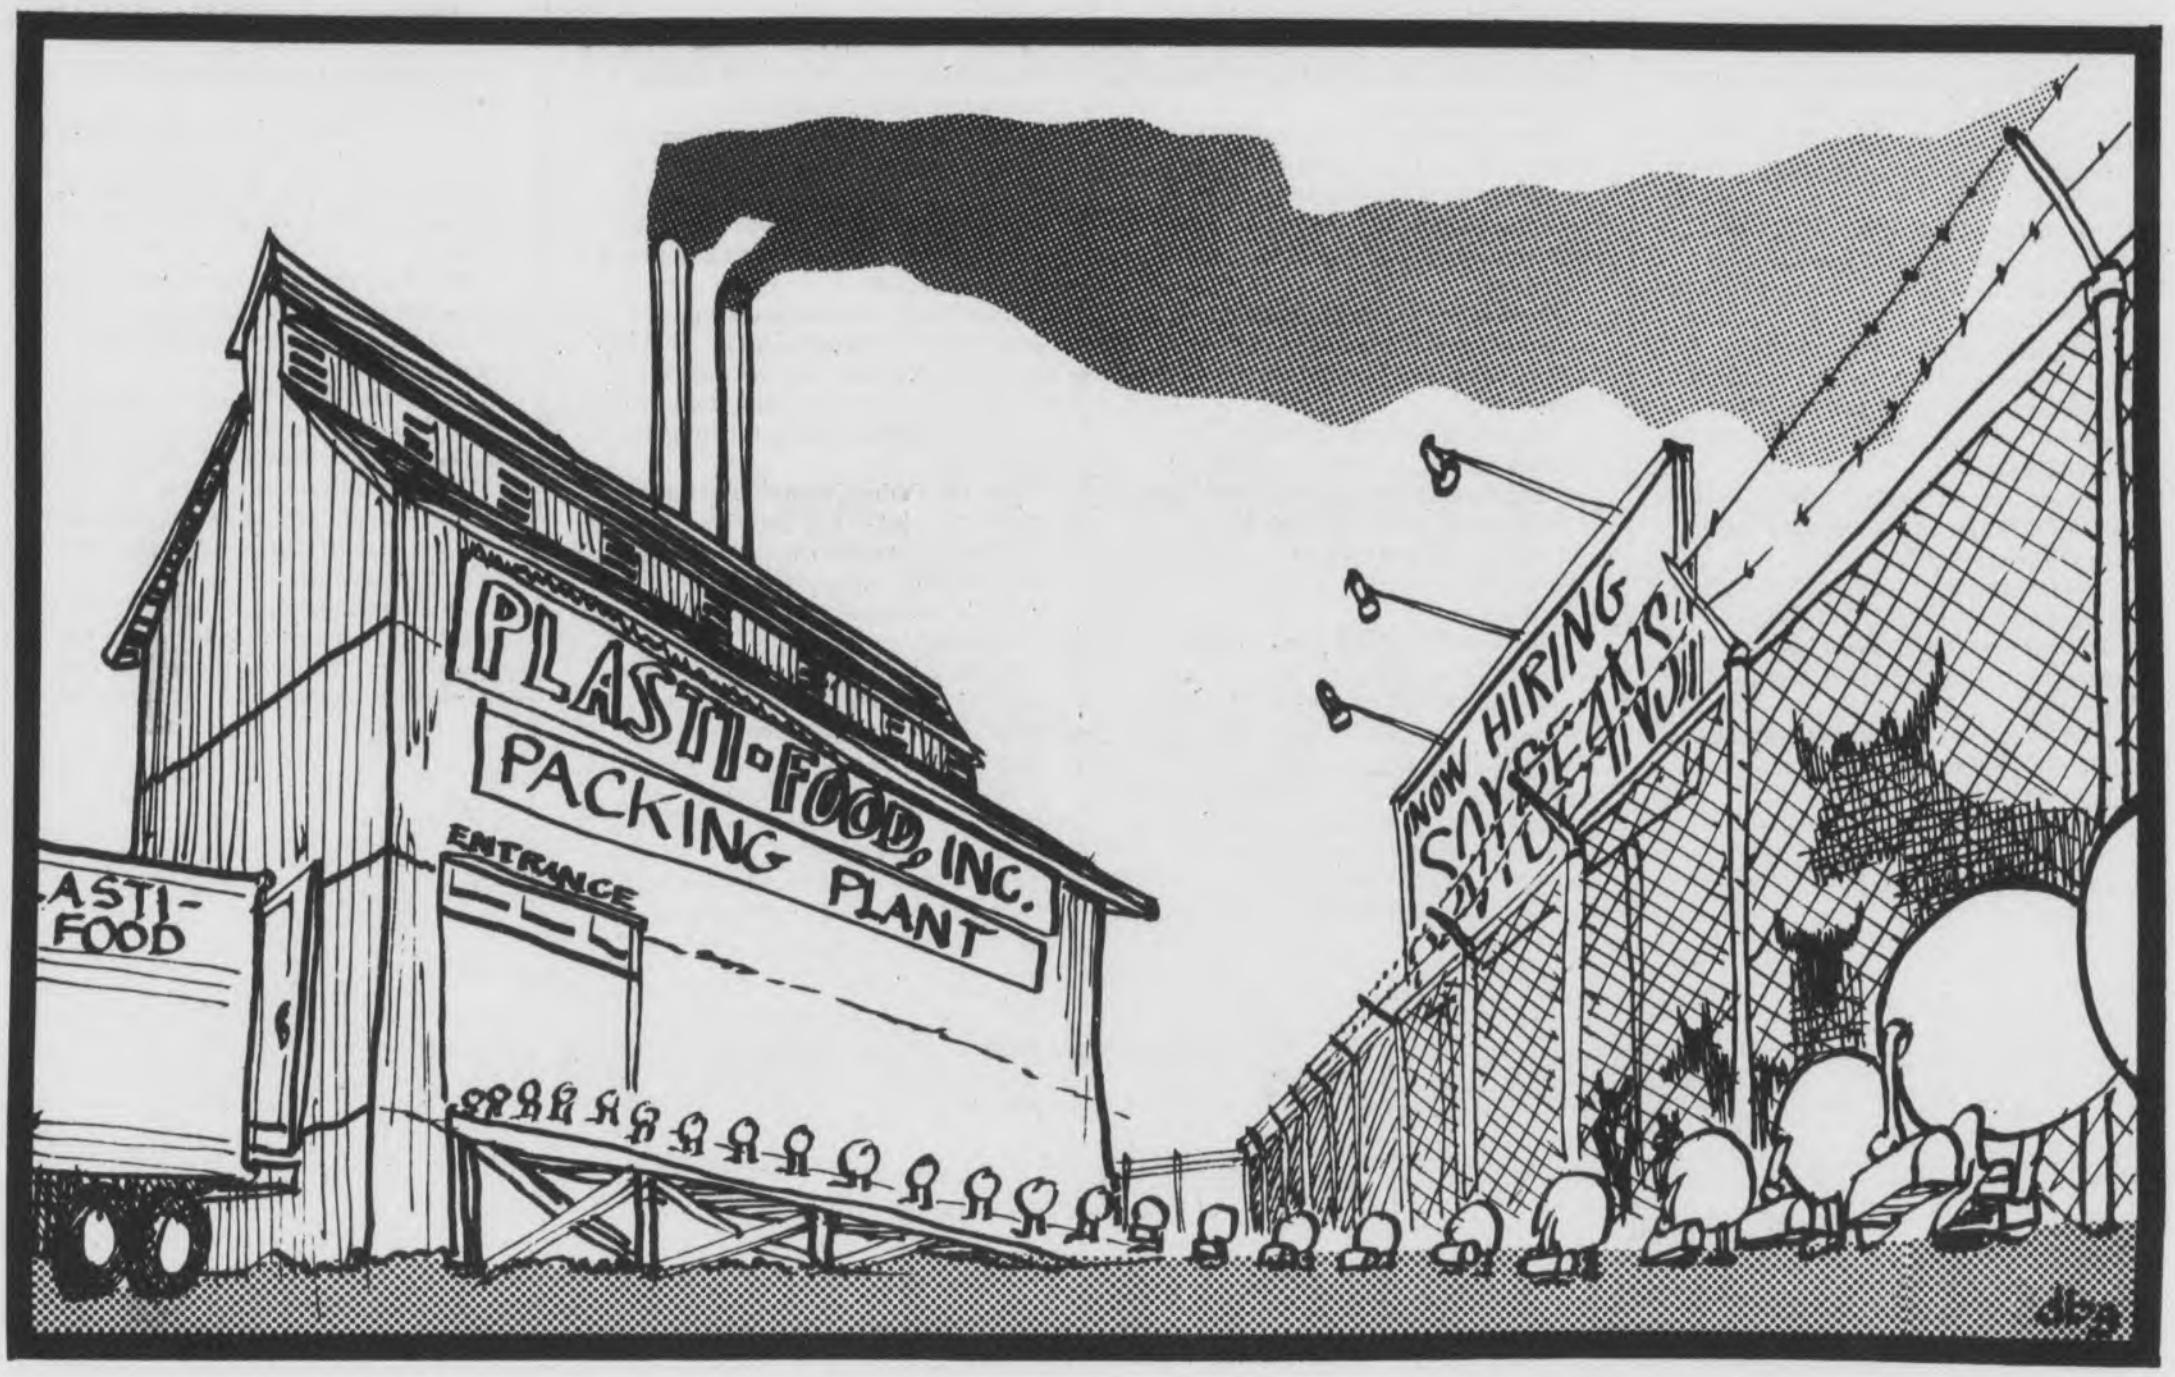
Traditionally, food was harvested, washed, graded, heated, etc., and packaged to protect it for distribution through retailers to consumers. There were few, if any obvious changes in foods, and a general attitude that food was safe and not significantly changed by preservation.

In recent decades, the food industry has developed new technology while consumer needs changed. Consumers wanted to spend less time preparing food (especially as they entered the working force).

Scientific consensus appears to be that synthetic foods are actually an improvement on natural foods. "I cannot understand why people keep on clinging to the myth of the superiority of nature. If anything, synthetic products are better than natural ones because natural foods contain, in addition to their basic components, all sorts of little things that should be fed only to laboratory mice," one scientist said.

There is some confusion on use of the term protein food analog. Names such as textured vegetable protein, analog and vegetable protein foods are used interchangeably. Protein food analogs are defined as products which resemble conventional meat, poultry and fish products in flavor, color, texture and appearance.

Many people consider analogs as almost 100 percent soy protein combined with small amounts of artificial coloring, flavorings, seasonings and fat. This is not the case.



Plant protein products can also be made from peanuts, sunflower seed, rape seed, cottonseed, wheat protein and yeast protein. But these are still usually marketed in the form of livestock and poultry feed. Upgraded for human consumption, they could help to overcome the protein shortage.

The concept of plant protein products is over a hundred years old. It began in the U.S. when John Harvey Kellogg started the plant protein industry in 1866. The science of nutrition was in its infancy and the importance of protein in the diet was unknown.

During Kellogg's life he invented the toasted wheat flakes, decaffeinated coffee and a peanut butter. He also made products which tasted vaguely like beef or pork or veal — the first meat analogs. Today plant protein products differ greatly from the proto-type veal steaks which Kellogg made from fresh wheat gluten. During the last two or three decades processing developments have provided the industry with a variety of technological possibilities.

The range of plant protein products being offered on the market today is as broad as the variations in cost, quality characteristics and functional properties.

In 1954, Robert Boyer patented the technique of spinning protein into fibers, which provide a meaty texture. A combination of orientated and mixed soy protein fibers can simulate nearly any biological structure that exists in natural meat, nut or vegetable products. Vegetable protein, flours, concentrates or isolates can be combined with other ingredients, including colors and flavors, and extuded to form beeflike strips, meatlike nuggets and other analogs.

In order to simulate different types of meat, there are a number of variables which can be modified: the binder ingredients can be aided in one treatment or if a fatty meat product is desired, the fibers can be passed through a bath of melted fat products after binding. Filaments can be made of different size by using different dies; some groups of filaments can be coated with fat, others not, and the differently treated bundles can then be compacted together. Similarly, some bundles can be colored and others not. By variously mixing the two together, the products resemble bacon, corned beef and the like.

The fiber bundles can be made to simulate the meat of mammals, fish, fowl and shell fish by altering their grouping, the type and thickness of the fat coating, the number and direction of the muscle fibers and connective tissue, and the flavoring, coloring and toughness. If additional nutritive value is required, amino-acids, dried milk solids, vitamins, etc. can be added.

Basically the purpose of processing is to make the raw material more suitable and acceptable as food or as an ingredient of foods. Factors to be considered are: flavor, color, texture, nutritional quality, physical form, composition, safety for human consumption and cost.

The importance of each of these factors varies with the product and the number and type of treatments it receives. Heating, for example, improves the flavor and the nutritional quality but must be properly controlled since excessive heating can cause undesirable changes in the protein, such as the destructin of lysine, an essential amino acid. Thermal treatment destroys urease and a heat-sensitive typsin inhibitor which improves the nutritional quality. For high solubility, heat treatment must be minimized or completely avoided.

Until recently, many considered the meat market immune to invasion by substitutes because of strong consumer loyalty and taste preferences. The attitude prevailed that food processors could not possibly duplicate meat texture, flavor and nutritional qualities. Now the technology of fabricating foods from vegetable proteins has been so improved that substitutes for meat command more and more attention. The lower cost of vegetable protein has provided an incentive to use it to upgrade diets of low-income people. As a result of these pressures, food technologists have developed a number of protein foods designed to replace meat. These meat analogs have been marketed for some time. Recently more firms have entered this field and have begun to expand the market.

Present indications are that analogs will be required to duplicate meat in every nutritional respect. Work is being done to improve flavor and texture. Changes in technology, market acceptance and regulations take time. It is expected that by 1980 analogs will comprise only a small proportion of the red meat market, because the advantage of the lower prices of analog components will not be fully realized owing to other constraints and limitations.

The first major penetration for the extender-type proteins will be the institional market, including hospitals, schools and other institutions that must provide nutritious meals under food budget restraints. Certain types of restaurants are also prime initial markets for vegetable protein products. Food served in restaurants is not subject to the same labeling and indentification requirements as food sold for home consumption. But use of soy product extenders in restaurants will probably be restricted initially to items such as meat loaf and patties. The trend toward more away-from-home eating increases the potential of the market for extenders.

Marketing products through the '70s and into the '80s will involve obvious factors such as nutrition and taste, but marketers should also consider the psychological implications of how consumers perceive product name, logo, package design and theme.

Fake foods, synthetic foods and all that lies between are definately the future. Producers will be concentrating on selling a product that looks, tastes and has texture of the natural foods we are used to eating.

Butter! Margarine! Butter!

Will the real imitation please stand up?

Coffee lovers had to sift out chicory, parsnips, carrots, wheat, flour, acorns and sawdust.

Flour, sugar, lard, tallow and potato starch were often used in cocoa.

And milk was saturated with sugar, chalk, starch and cereal matter.

But modern regulations have outlawed many additives. Foreign objects and extenders have been overrun by chemical emulsifiers, thickners, flavors and colors.

Analogs are more than simple additives, however. Most meat analogs have comparable if not better nutritional value than natural foods.

Vegetable protein has scored the biggest success as a meat extender. Vegetable proteins usually contain 40 percent protein, the same content as most meats.

Soybeans and their by-products carry even higher amounts of protein than most analogs.

Soy products include full-fat soybean flour and grits (40 percent protein), defatted soybean flour and grits (50 percent protein), soy protein (90 percent protein).

Soybeans are also full of vitamins and minerals are low in saturated fats and have virtually no cholestrol.

While meat analogs are high in nutrition, beverage analogs, also known ersatz, are relatively low in nutritional value.

Nonetheless, beverage analogs far outsell meat analogs.

"Basically, it all centers on the consumer's likes and dislikes. The most important thing is convenience, and then prices. Taste is more important than nutrition, it seems," according to Dr. Dorothy Harrison, K-State professor of foods and nutrition.

Four major food companies (General Mills, General Foods, Pillsbury and Quaker) have issued nutritional policy statements assuring customers that beverage analogs contain adequate nutrition

These advertisements have salved the consumer and increased beverage analog sales, one Manhattan food store owner said.

"Most of the drinks are just water drinks, that's all," said Virgil Smith, general manager of the Westloop Dillons. "Packaging, freighting and advertising all cost more than the product itself. But it's definitely worth it to them (food companies)."

The powdered drink business alone netted $450 million prior to 1975, and canned ersatz net more than $400 million annually, according to Consumer Reports.

Depite the economic boon to food companies, analogs, both meat and beverage, are less expensive to the consumer than natural foods.

One pound of soybean-blended hamburger currently costs 82 cents compared to $1.09 per pound for real hamburger, said Oak Smith, president of Wenger International, Inc.

Wenger manufactures soybean by-products.

Ersatz sales also skyrocketed as their natural counterparts became too expensive for most consumers.

"Most of the coffee analogs gained in popularity when coffee prices went up. We sell alot of Tang, and it'll probably outsell orange juice—it's pretty close," said Jim Peterson, grocery manager at Westloop Dillons.

The recent trend toward weight-watching has jumped sales in non-dairy creamers and other low-fat analogs.

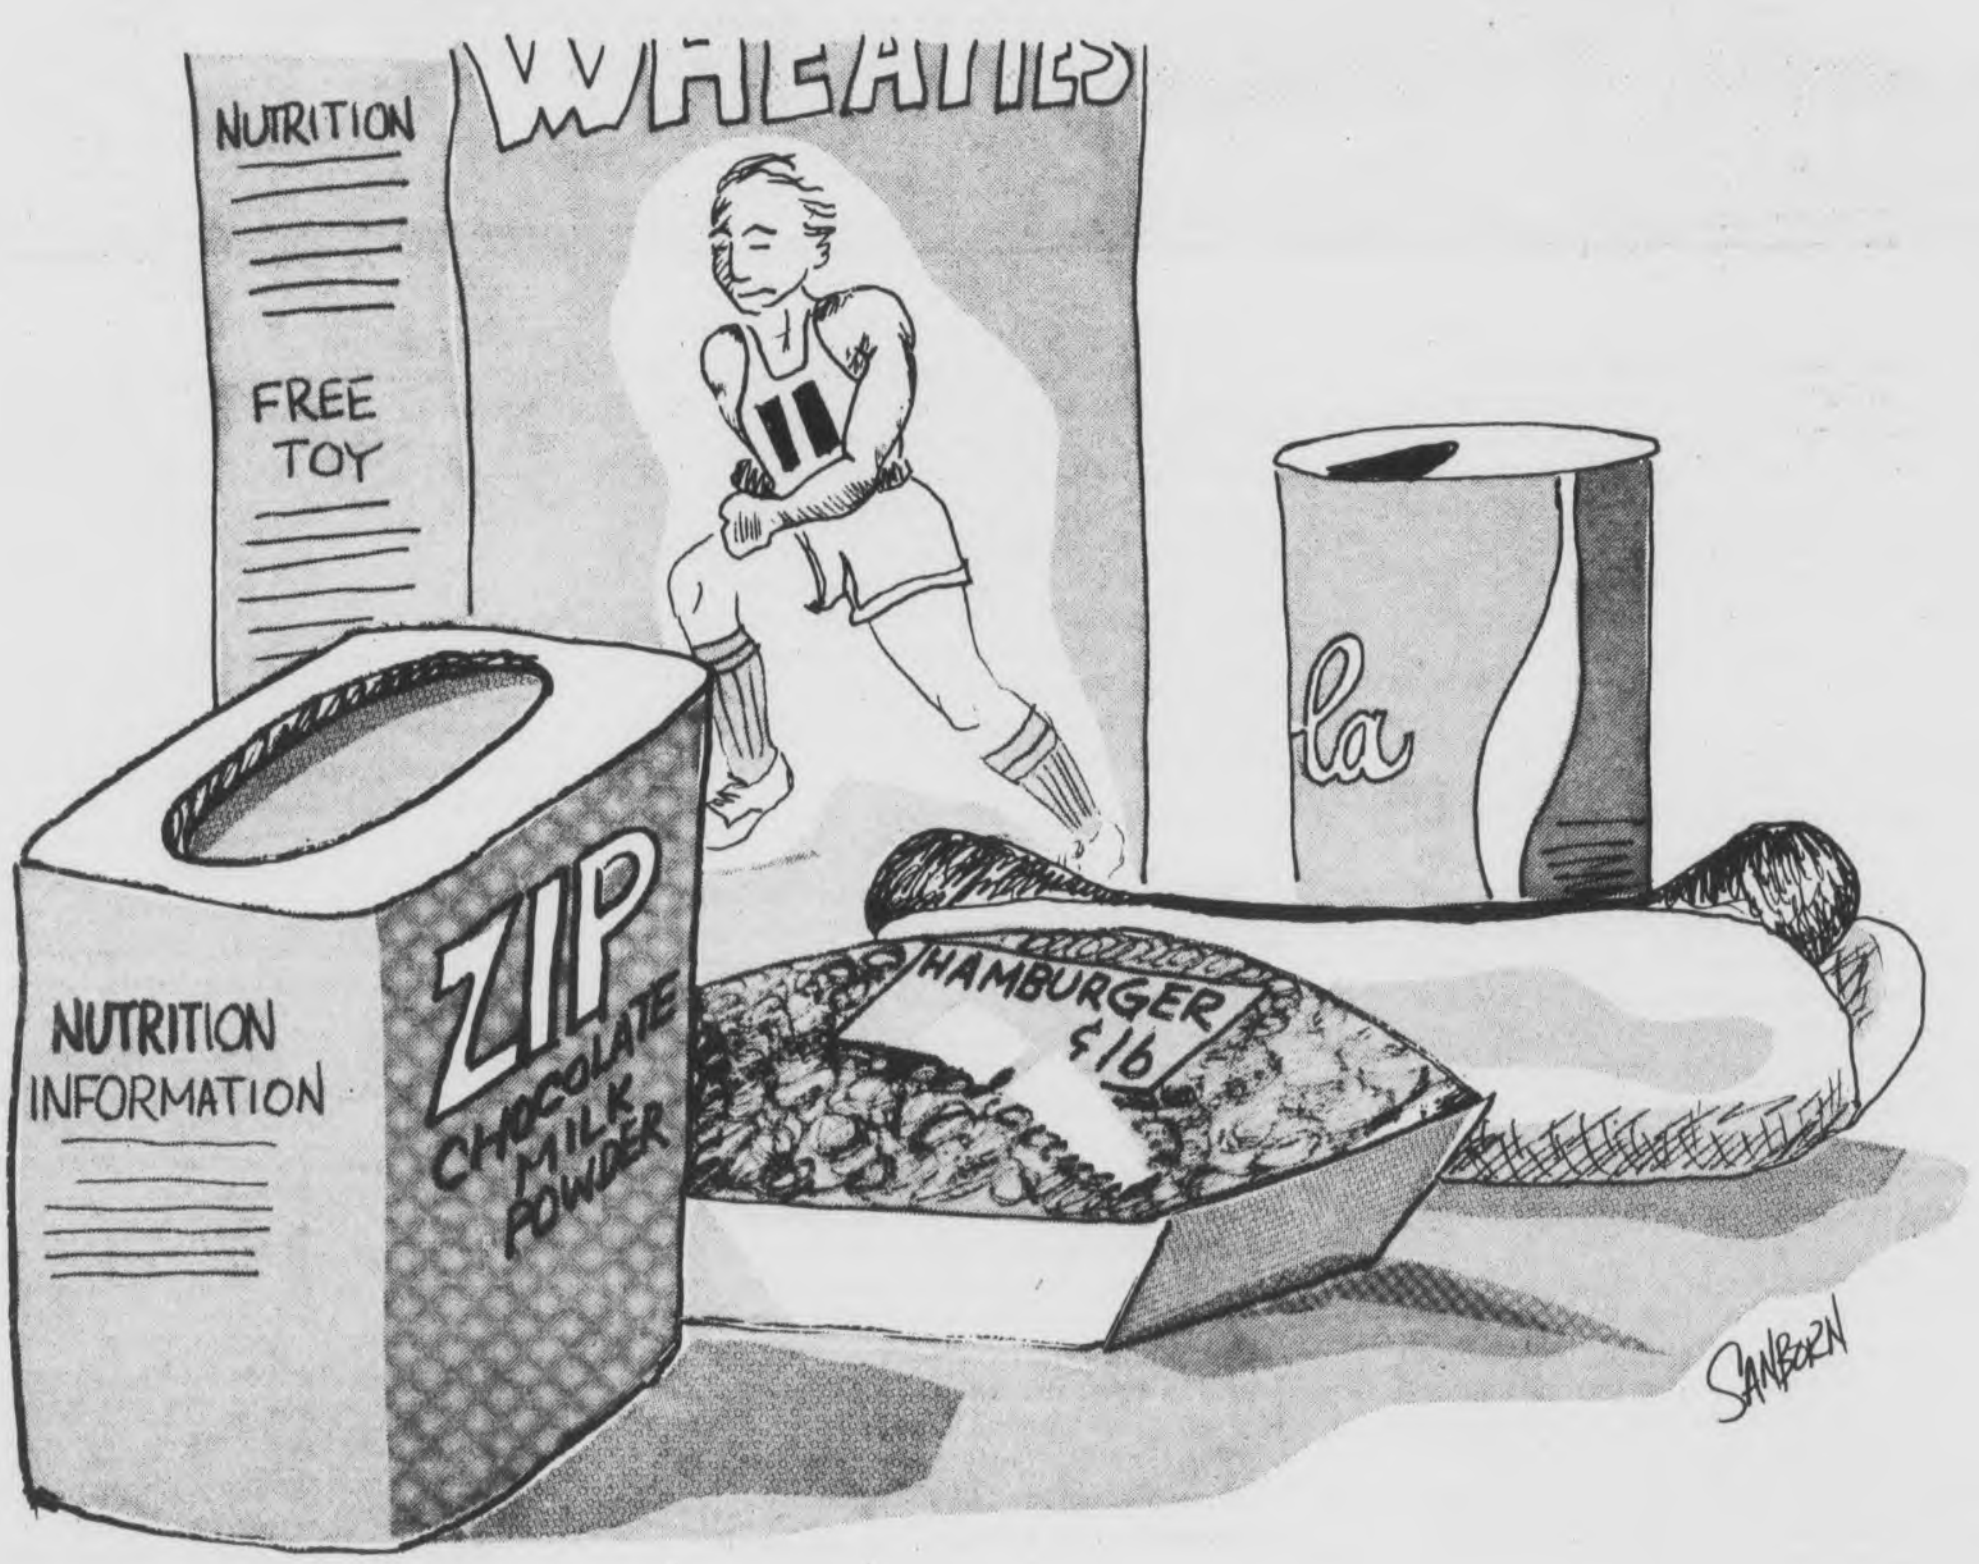
"A lot of people can't have butterfat in their diets, so the analog is better," Smith said.

Low-fat analogs include non-dairy creamers such as Coffee Rich, artificial whipped toppings such as Cool Whip and Dream Whip, sugarless Kool-Aid and Pro Sobee, a milk analog made of sugar, soy water and corn syrup.

The U.S. Department of Agriculture expects price- and weight-conscious America to depend increasingly on analogs. It expects vegetable protein to replace 20 percent of red meat in processed foods — chili, hot dogs and bologna — by next year.

Soybean business is expected to grow from a $75 million a year enterprise in the '70s to a $2 billion dollar annual business in the '80s.

One example of a meatless meat, "Granburger," is now sold in the Manhattan Food Store.



"The product is one of our bestsellers," said employee Debbie McCleave. "I think that this type of product will be accepted in 10-20 years."

One food company alone has developed more than 50 varieties of meatless chicken, beef, ham, luncheon sandwiches, salisbury steaks and frankfurters.

Whatever the acceptance now, analogs are definately in the future. In a world facing food shortages, analogs may become the answer.

Half of the world lives on vegetable protein almost exclusively, according to recent reports. With vegetable proteins feeding the other half as well, the world could theoretically suppo 40 to 50 billion people — more than 12 times the present world population.

Meat and potato lovers may be forced into becoming bean and potato lovers. Even more, they may decide they like analogs' low price, high nutrition and good taste.

Does the Cookie Monster know?

There's more to Pitter Patter than peanut butter

Food labels have a dual obligation to fulfill. Besides merely advocating a company product, they must clearly relay information about the contents they cover. Labels are now used to "expose" rather than "hide" the product.

For example, in the Pitter Patter cookie label created by the Keebler Company, there are five specific areas that must be satisfied before the Food and Drug Administration (FDA) will approve it. They are the principal display panel (PDP), information panel (IP), identity statement, company name and address and an ingredient statement.

"We have our own departments that take care of each of these areas. However, the FDA, more than we, sets the standards for the label. All we do is conform to their regulations," said Narayn Sankran, head of the marketing division of the Keebler Company in Elmhurst, Illinois.

The PDP is the part of the label most likely to be seen by the consumer. This part of the label carries the brand name (Keebler), the variety statement (Pitter Patter), the identity (peanut butter creme cookies), and the quantity of the package (one pound). The PDP is the most important part of the label because it attracts the consumer's interest. It should be colorful, but colors must blend well and be appealing.

Richard Morse, head of the Department of Family Economics at K-State said he believes the label is very important in the selling of the product.

"Aunt Jemima sold a lot of pancakes because of the label," Morse said. "It also has a lot to do with the quality and extend of detail in the information on the label.

"You heard the story about the little boy who bought ice cream and asked if it had any ingredients in it," he added. "He was told it didn't, so he went ahead and ate it. He died 24 hours later because he was allergic to something in the ice cream."

"Consumers have a right to know what they are buying. The label is the only information they have. That's why its content is so important."

The PDP which specifies pertinent information on the product is only one important part of a food label. The information panel (IP) which is adjacent to the PDP on either side contains data similar to that on the PDP. This part of the label is often overlooked because consumer interest tends to direct them to the PDP only, for the general type of information they find there seems sufficient. The IP may not be appealing yet it is required.

The IP contains the Keebler name and address, the ingredient statement and nutrition statement. This information is included on the IP solely for the benefit of the consumer. It must be clearly legible and not less than one-sixteenth of an inch in height.

Don Dubois of the American Institute of Baking (AIB) said, "These are new FDA regulations that just took effect on July 1, 1978. And because of them, many companies are having to revise their lables."

Each label change can cost a company from $500 to $15,000 — Pillsbury has 1,300 lables," said Howard Bauman, vice-president of the Pillsbury Company. "If we had to change all of those labels at once, our direct out-of-pocket expense would be approximately $1 million."

The argument of most companies facing label revision deals with cost. Is this a legitimate excuse?

"They are talking out of both sides of their mouths," Morse said. "Who says they have to continue what they're doing with their labels now? They might have to make some sacrifices concerning the apppearance of their label, i.e. less white space, tightening up elaborate layouts, and-or compacting the size of the package."

An additional part of labeling is becoming a necessity to coincide with America's public health awareness. A mandatory nutrition statement is in store for the future.

"One of the main concerns for adding nutrition information to food labels is that there is a shift away from traditional foods taking place," M.J. Babcock, editor of "Food Facts from Rutgers," said.

"From a nation whose dinners used to start from scratch, with potatoes peeled at the kitchen sink and a piece of raw meat, we've moved onto menus that are more and more likely to include a frozen beef stew or a pizza mix for dinner or an Instant Breakfast for breakfast.

"Already it's more difficult, even for the enlightened, to tell what constitutes a balanced diet. And the future promises to go much further in this direction with textured soy protein as the forerunner that could present consumers with a dietary quandary," he said.

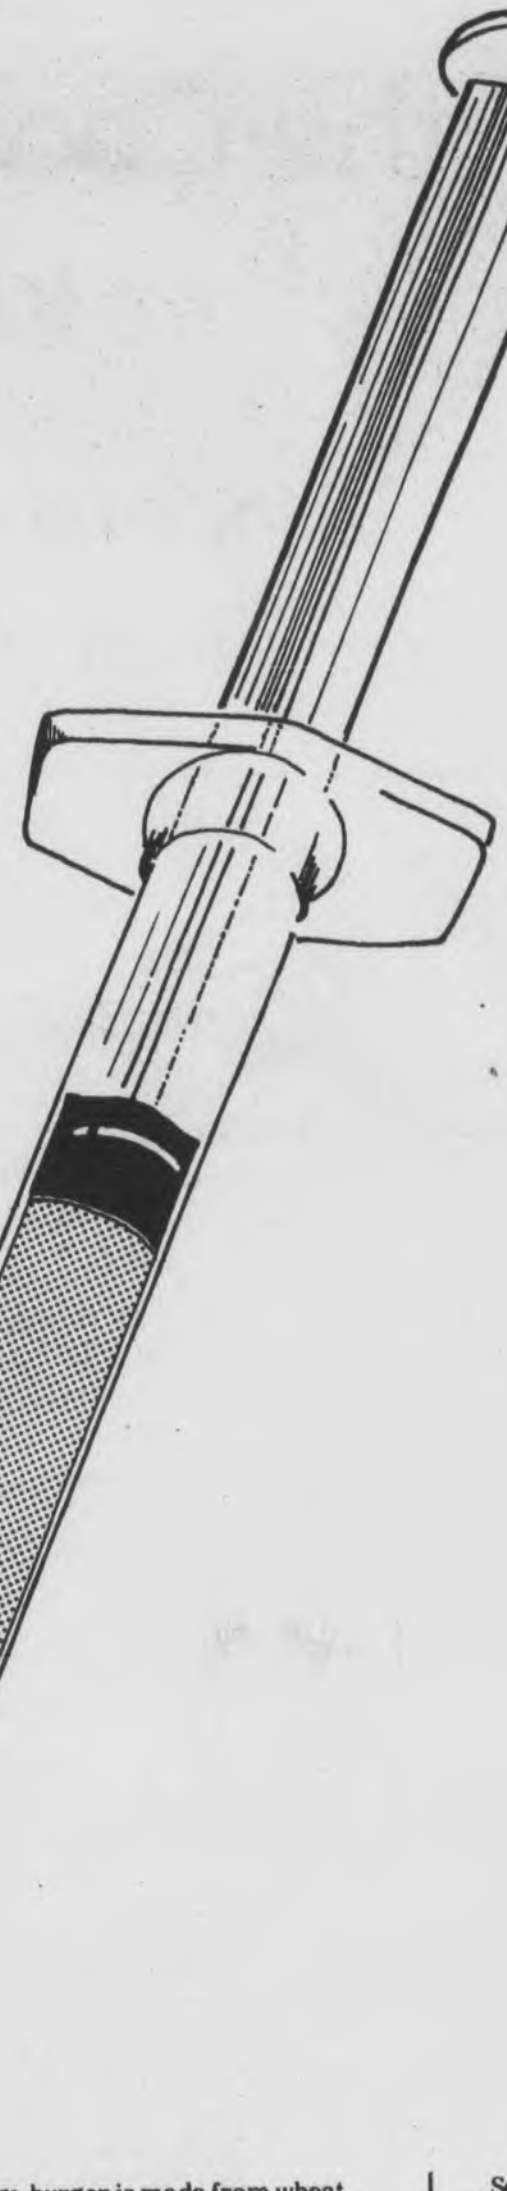
Although the Pitter Patter label does not carry a nutrition statement yet, Sankran said, "it will definately be warranted in the future, probably within the next few years," The newly established set of regulations the FDA had released concerning nutrition makes it a requirment. If it is not complied with the product will not be marketed.

Controversial issues with the labeling industry have prompted the FDA to specifically rule on ingredient information. On Jan. 1, 1978, the FDA declared "the designation of ingredients will be assigned by the precise name of each ingredient used — including leavening agents, dough conditioners and yeast foods."

This declaration includes all bakery and standardized foods where the ingredients are listed in descending order of weight predominance. The listing of animal and vegetable shortening on the Pitter Patte label is an example of this. They are followed by their components of beef fat, partially hydrogenated coconut, soybean, palm kernel or palm oils. Where these ingredients may occasionally be used in the product, they are listed as "and-or," "may contain" or "contains one or more of the following."

Morse, who analyzed the Pitter Patter label, said it was an adequate label in may respects. However, he said, it lacks a nutrition statement.

"It looks like, on the whole, that the Keebler Company has done more than the law requires," Morse said.



Although the FDA set the majority of requirements for the Pitter Patter label, there are two parts of it they had no decisive say in — the brand name and the variety name. Sankran could not specifically name anyone who was principally responsible for the variety name Pitter Patter.

"It was catchy and we had it test-marketed. Consumers caught on and approved of it," he said. "Pitter Patter today is one of our most successfuul varieties."

Keebler, the brand name of the product, was selected by an "internal division of the company." They also created the motto and elfin image for their products, Sankran said.

Throughout the development of a label, a main concern is liability. If consumers are not satisfied with the labeling or think they warrant misreprensentation of the product, their initial action is to contact the company. But, according to Sankran, complaints are few with Keebler products. He recalled one incident, however, where their "Rich-in-Chips cookies had cocoa drops in them — not just chocolate chips."

Labeling is a very in-depth and exact process that takes vast amounts of time and money. Strict laws and regulations govern the content of a label. Reading a label is the first step a consumer takes to judge a product. After the initial purchase, however, the company reputation rests solely upon the consumer's comprehension of the label and satisfaction of the product within.

Substitutes: Itching for a chance to prove themselves

Steak, lobster, chocolate pies, strawberries and milkshakes will make the mouths of most people water. But for some, these foods can only cause a rash.

These people—often children—have allergies.

Allergies, or hypersensitivity, are caused by a reaction to a particular food, pollen or other substance such as hay or grass.

Hypersensitivity will often show up as a rash, asthma or even diarrhea when the subject is exposed to the substance.

Allergic reactions often show up within a few months of birth and continue through childhood and, if not discovered or treated, into adulthood.

When brought to an allergist (a physician specializing in the treatment of allergies) the allergist conducts a patch test to determine what substances the person is allergic to.

The test involves placing a substance on the person's back for about two days to see if a rash develops.

"I was six when I was first taken to the allergist," Craig Chandler, sophomore in journalism and mass communcation, said.

"All I could remember is I couldn't wash my back for two days and the patches itched."

Once a reaction is observed, the subject avoids the substance for two months to see if the allergic reactions disappear.

Because of the number of foods tested for possible reactions, single foods are slowly added back into the diet until the foods causing reactions are discovered.

Once discovered, a vaccine containing small amounts of the substance are injected over several years to build up an immunity toward the substance.

"I had to take the shots for over 5 years," Chandler said. "For about a year and a half, I had two injections a week and after that only about one a week.

"They really didn't hurt after I got used to them," Chandler said, "except when my mother first decided to inject me herself instead of a nurse to save some money. She wasn't very good at first.

"My parents had to double my weekly allowance just so I would let mom give me the shot," he added.

During the immunization program the patient often has two choices on what he eats. He can either eat a synthetic or analog food, made from chemicals or vegetable proteins (soybeans), or he can just eat a food he isn't allergic to.

"Usually if a patient is allergic to beef, for example, we will just tell them to eat turkey, chicken, or sea food instead," Dr. Thomas F. Rosenberg, allergy specialist in Wichita, said.

"Mainly because there is such a variety of natural foods available, we don't need to recommend artificial foods," he said.

But if the patient is allergic to beef and wants a hamburger, an analog food may be substituted.

"We sell a meat substitute called Vega-Burger as a substitute for hamburger," said Mrs. Gladys Woodward, co-owner of A B Special Foods. The store stocks foods for special diets including hypoallergenic ones.

"Vega-burger is made from wheat flour, soybean proteins and other substances to give it the same feel and texture as hamburger," Woodward said.

"We also sell Choplets—a pork substitute—and a chili substitute made from the same ingredients," she said.

"There are some completely artificial foods on the market," Woodward said, "but we don't sell any of them because of some of the chemical additives in many completely artificial foods aren't good for you."

A natural substitute for chocolate is also available for persons allergic to chocolate. Carob, a bean from a tree found in the Mediterranian, has a taste similar to non-sweetened chocolate when ground into a powder.

"We sell carob in a powder and as a candy bar," Woodward said.

"Carob really wasn't that terrible," Chandler said, "although when I was six, I didn't think anything could replace a Hershey bar.

"When the doctor first determined I was allergic to foods, I was taken off beef and sea foods," Chandler said. "That left only chicken, turkey, and, of course, liver.

"Why couldn't I have been allergic to liver, why?" he said.

"I was also determined to be sensitive to milk and had to drink a milk substitute for about a year or so," Chandler said.

As much as 15-20 percent of the population is allergic to milk in some way, Rosenberg said.

"For these people we recommend a synthetic milk made from soybeans.

Soyalac contains larger amounts of protein, vitamins and minerals and less fat than cow's milk does, according to Loma Linda Foods literature from the company that manufactures Soyalac.

"Without allergies, it would be hard to sell a fake milk," Chandler said. "Who would drink a soybean liquid flavored with a bean grown in the Mediterranean in place of a chocolate shake!"

With the exception of synthetic milk, analog foods are not used widely to treat allergies, Rosenberg said.

One possible reason is the small market for hypoallergenic foods.

According to Rosenberg, with the success of vaccines in treating allergies, subjects do not remain hypersensitive to a substance for any length of time with the possible exception of hay fever and specific unusual substances.

Pete Souza, graduate in journalism and mass communictions, is allergic to cottonseed oil, a substance used as a cooking fat in many commercially produced foods, including chocolate. Souza said the oil was nasty.

"It makes my throat swell up and I can't breath or swallow," Souza said.

Because of the small market, hypoallergenic foods often cost more to the consumer.

"Vega-burger costs at least 1½ times what hamburger costs," Woodward said. "Many people will just buy whatever the cheapest meat is they can eat instead."

The Rescuers

Film gets seal of approval from 12-year-old

By JANET DAVISON
Review Editor

There's probably no better way to evaluate a movie than to ask an expert on the subject to go along and offer advice on technical aspects and subject matter.

Well, when it was time to review this week's feature film, Walt Disney's animated "The Rescuers," I decided to take along an expert on animated films; a 12-year-old.

Collegian Review

Photo editor Pete Souza's little sister Amy was here for the week and went along when I screened the film. She wants to follow in the footsteps of her big brother and become a journalist someday, (we're still waiting for Pete to become one) so she decided to write a review herself.

And you know what? The kid wasn't half bad. So this week's film review is brought to you courtesy of our guest reviewer, Amy Souza.

The Rescuers review, by Amy Souza

"The Rescuers is a good film to see if you like animated Walt Disney movies. It has a good plot and the animation is very good. The way in which the characters are drawn is amusing.

One character which I liked best was a dragonfly named Evinrude. The way he was drawn made him extremely humorous. He was the motor for a leaf boat. Another character I liked was an albatross which carried the two mice to Devil's Bayou. He ran an airport from the top of a building.

I've read the book, and I think it (the movie) is about as good as the book, though the book goes into more detail, as is the same with most books turned into movies.

One thing though, the book is a little bit different. Oh, the characters are the same, it's just where the story takes place and who they're (the mouse rescuers) going to rescue which are different.

THE MOVIE was colorful and the actors who did the characters voices were very good also.

The main characters were two mice and three people. The two mice's names were Bernard and Miss Bianca (Bob Newhart and Eva Gabor). The three people's names were Madame Medusa (Geraldine Page) and Mr. Snoots (the late Joe Flynn), and a little girl named Penny.

One other thing which was funny is one of the settings for the story. In the beginning it took place in the basement of the United Nations building in a trunk. It was furnished with people's clothes and a large candle plus a few other things which you will see if you go to see the movie. (The reason I'm not telling you what else is in the trunk is because that would be telling you too much.)

Well, all I can say now is that in the eyes of a 12-year-old it's a good movie. But the only way you're going to know if you like it is if you go see it. Well, if you do, have fun. I did.

New Tucker album is energetic, emotional

By KELLY WILKERSON
Collegian Reviewer

The Marshall Tucker Band is rapidly becoming an institution on the southern rock scene.

To say Marshall Tucker's latest album,

Collegian Review

"Together Forever" is good is an extreme understatement.

With seven preious albums, the group has proven themselves a truly professional and experienced group of musicians.

Rather than try and show the world they can vary their music to include all forms and styles, they have refined themselves to a point near perfection.

"Together Forever" opens with "I'll Be Loving You", written by Toy Caldwell. The word which best describes this song is energy. It demands that you move, if only to tap your toe.

The energy is in the music; everything is tight. The lyrics are simple and strong.

The main theme behind the album is love; having it, wanting it, needing it and losing it.

ONE OF the better songs on the album is "Love is a Mystery". After about five bars all you want to do is grab your favorite drink, throw on the headphones and listen. No matter how uptight you may be, this song can relax you.

"Singing Rhymes," the last song on side one, is too short. The combination of simple, emotional lyrics and some of the better solo work on the album makes it a song that goes by too fast.

The first song on side two, "Dream Lover," is the only song on the album not written in the usual Marshall Tucker style.

"Everybody Needs Somebody," returns to Tucker's style of phrasing on the guitar and vocal harmonies.

Once again, energy is the best way to describe "Change Is Gonna Come." The song drives with so much energy it's hard to sit down and listen to it.

IN THE song "Change Is Gonna Come," the sound seems to come easily and has an up tempo, high-energy feeling. I hope to see the group perform this one in concert.

"Asking Too Much of You," another song by Caldwell, is simply fantastic.

I've never been One for acoustical pieces, but this one changed my mind, and, again, Caldwell's lyrics are basic and emotional.

"Asking" contains something many songs lose in the sterile environment of a recording studio; noise.

At first the background noise is distracting, but later they begin to make the song live.

"Together Forever" is probably one of Marshall Tucker's better albums and anyone who buys it won't be disappointed.

Eat less saturated fat.

Big 8 title on the line Saturday

Although few would have expected it before the season, K-State is playing for the Big 8 basketball championship Saturday afternoon in sold-out Lloyd Noble Arena in Norman, Okla.

Even fewer would have expected K-State title chances after seeing Missouri beat the Wildcats Wednesday night, but Iowa State did the 'Cats a favor and beat Oklahoma in Ames.

Oklahoma, whose last conference championship in basketball was in 1948-49 in the Big 7, now leads the conference with a 9-4 record, and K-State can tie the Sooners for the championship with a victory Saturday. The game will be televised regionally on NBC and will begin at 2:40 p.m.

The game will pit Oklahoma's experience against K-State's youth, as Oklahoma's top six players are seniors John McCullough and Cary Carrabine, juniors Terry Stotts, Al Beal and Aaron Curry and sophomore Ray Whitley.

McCullough has a 16.6 point average, and has been hitting more than 20 points in the Sooners' last six games.

"Oklahoma is driving the bus," K-State Coach Jack Hartman said. "They have a good basketball team. They are talented, experienced and well-prepared. What else is there?"

BEAL ripped the 'Cats for 21 points in the last meeting between the teams, which Oklahoma won 70-62 in Manhattan. Oklahoma also beat the Wildcats in the Big 8 preseason tournament, 62-61.

Rolando Blackman leads K-State with a 17.1 point average, and he's scored 26 points in each of the two earlier Sooner-Wildcat contests.

Saturday's game, which will decide the conference championship, will also help determine postseason tournament pairings.

Tournament pairings place the No. 1 team against No. 8, No. 2 against No. 7, No. 3 against No. 6 and No. 4 against No. 5.

The top four teams play first-round games at home Tuesday. The four winners of those games then meet in Kansas City for the two final rounds.

If two teams tie in conference standings, there are three ways to break it. If one team has beaten the other twice in the regular season, it will get the higher spot. If the teams split their season games and played in the preseason tourney, the winner of that game will get the higher spot. If they split and didn't meet in the preseason tournament, a coin toss will decide.

The Sooners are assured the No. 1 seed whether they win or lose Saturday.

K-STATE will get the No. 2 seed if it wins, because the 'Cats lost to Oklahoma in the preseason tourney.

Missouri will take the No. 2 spot if it beats Iowa State and Oklahoma beats the Wildcats, because the Tigers would then tie with K-State for second and get the higher position because of their two wins over the 'Cats this season.

Promising tracksters travel to Big 8 Indoor

Basketball won't be the only game around in Oklahoma this weekend.

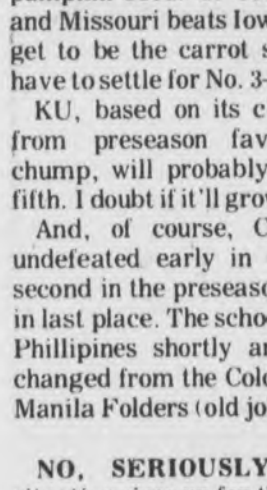
The K-State men's track team will be within a stone's throw of the K-State-Oklahoma basketball game in Norman, as they compete in the 51st Big 8 Indoor meet in Oklahoma City's Myriad Center today and Saturday.

The K-State tracksters have shown some promise this season, winning the Sooner Invitational and beating Oklahoma in a dual in Manhattan.

They'll be trying to improve on last year's fifth-place finish in the Big 8 Indoor.

Head Coach Mike Ross said defending champion Kansas will probably win, but he expects a close meet.

"In the past, there have been clear favorites for the title," Ross said. "But, there will be several teams fighting for first this year."



"They (KU) will probably get points on tradition. They can score in every event."

THE 'CATS should be able to score in most events, Ross said, especially the long jump, triple jump, 440-yard dash, mile, shot put and mile relay.

Vince Parrette has a shot at becoming the first to win three events in the Big 8 Indoor. He'll compete in the 60-yard dash, the triple jump and the 60-yard low hurdles.

"You can sum up our chances by saying, I don't think we're the favorites, but by no means do I think we're out of it," Ross said.

Sports

Kent Gaston

Reggie, Tensing and other seedy characters

With the Big 8's regular basketball season coming to a close this weekend, many unenlightened souls don't understand how the simple Big 8 postseason tournament works.

It's designed to determine who will go to the NCAA national tournament, and if you don't understand it, pay close attention.

If K-State can win this weekend, the 'Cats will be the No. 2 seed. Now that means they'll be a carrot seed. The No. 1 seed is a pumpkin seed. Of course, if K-State loses and Missouri beats Iowa State, Missouri will get to be the carrot seed and K-State will have to settle for No. 3—a tomato seed.

KU, based on its clever metamorphosis from preseason favorite to postseason chump, will probably be seeded fourth or fifth. I doubt if it'll grow.

And, of course, Colorado, which was undefeated early in the season and took second in the preseason tournament, is now in last place. The school will be moved to the Phillipines shortly and the name will be changed from the Colorado Buffaloes to the Manila Folders (old joke).

NO, SERIOUSLY, here's how the situation sizes up for the postseason tourney pairings.

If K-State wins, it's assured of a second-place berth, which will probably put the 'Cats against Oklahoma State in Manhattan next Tuesday. If K-State loses and Fordham, Grambling and Manhattan High School win, then the 'Cats will be fourth seeded, unless, of course, Valdosta State beats Cheyney State in the semifinals of the AIAW national tourney in two weeks.

The confusion in the Big 8 this year stems from the striving for mediocrity which has plagued all eight teams. Oklahoma has the best overall record, and it's only 16-9. Usually the conference slips one or two teams into the Top 20, but not this year.

It's nice to have balance, but it would be nicer to have the balance of a conference like the Big 10, which has had four or five teams in the Top 20 all year.

Extra points

ALL OF THIS goes to show that the day of the dynasty may be ending. UCLA is No. 1, but it's not the team it used to be. The old John Wooden teams used to kill, maim, pillage and then divide the spoils. Now the No. 1 spot in the AP poll is held by a different team every couple of weeks.

And, the dynasty days will not return, because I have an idea which would help finance college and pro athletics and still help make the teams evenly competitive.

Advertising.

American Legion baseball uniforms have advertiser's names on the back, so why not all sports? The ads could be in proportion to the athlete's salary and worth.

Reggie Jackson would carry a 10-story Marlboro billboard around on his back, while more obscure athletes would carry a microfiche business card in their shoe. So, the great athletes would be slowed down and it would help keep teams evenly matched.

SPEAKING of new sports, (was I?) the Manhattan Pothole Dodgers are having tryouts next week. The idea is to keep from breaking your car in half on the potholes which are blossoming all over the place.

So, fire up the Silver Dart, Iggy. Hit the road, keep your eyeballs peeled, and call me at 532-1234 if you happen to see my car. It fell into one of the potholes on 17th and I haven't seen it since I climbed out with the help of Sir Edmund Hillary and Tensing Norkay.

Please look carefully. I just can't get around town much without the ol' mud wagon.

CONGRATULATIONS!

'Killer instinct'

Competitive edge drives Parrette towards track, musical goals

By CINDY FRIESEN
Asst. Sports Editor

"It's ring time...it's ring time...."

The rhythm pounds in Vince Parrette's head.

"It's ring time...it's ring time...."

The beat sends adrenalin flowing. It pulsates to his fingers as he positions his palms above the conga drums, or to his feet as he steps to the line, waiting his turn at the triple jump.

"It's ring time...it's ring time...."

Parrette, a member of the K-State track team and jazz ensemble, already knows the joys of success as a musician and world class triple jumper. But Parrette doesn't know the feeling of a Big 8 track championship ring around his finger.

He and the K-State track team will have their chance this weekend at the Big 8 Indoor Championship in Oklahoma City. But the ring is just a stepping stone to Parrette's ultimate goal.

"See, this is just part of the plan I laid out a long time ago, and everything seems to be falling in place," the junior in radio and TV said.

TRUE, PARRETTE has realistic hopes of making the 1980 U.S. Olympic team, but that's not enough to satisfy the "killer instinct" in the man. He knows he is capable of more, and won't stop until he's attempted all he can.

"Track is my vehicle. Right now I'm using it as a vehicle to get where I want to go," he said. After graduating from K-State, Parrette has dreams of cutting a jazz album.

That may sound rather far-fetched, coming from a world class athlete, but in Parrette's case, it is not.

One night last summer at the Montreaux (Switzerland) International Jazz Festival, Taj Mahal, an internationally known jazz-blues musician, heard Parrette and his party band, Paradise.

Taj was so impressed with Parrette's talents that he asked him to play with his band during a concert that night. Still impressed after the performance, Taj offered him a job.

"I was so excited after he told me it was all green light if I wanted the job. I was just (snap) that close to going, but it wasn't part of my plan yet," he said.

"I knew even before I went over there that someone was going to find me, but this was supposed to happen in a couple of years—it was all just happening too fast."

THOUGH tempted to deviate from "his plan," Parrette knew the time wasn't right.

"I can always sing and dance and play the congas, but I can't always run and jump. I've spent too much time and effort dreaming to abandon it all now," he said.

Parrette told Taj that someday he would like to accept the standing job offer, but first he wanted to make the Olympic team.

"Right now, the music is fine. I'll let it sit there and simmer 'til it's ready. I'll just let it ferment for a couple more years and break out with it come Olympic time," he said.

Parrette said he believes his success in track will open doors for him in the music field.

"It's not just a matter of being good. There are a lot of people singing and playing in garages, and you'll never hear about them. There's got to be something different about you; something that slaps them in the face that makes them notice you."

WHILE IT may seem that track and music don't mix, the parallel between the two becomes obvious with examination of Parrette's experiences.

"When I'm in the blocks or running, a rhythm gets going in my head. The congas help with that.

"It's the same with my music. When I'm ready to go out on stage, I feel like I'm in the blocks...everything just intertwines," he said.

Although the actual physical performances are different, the results are very much alike, he said.

"Before going on stage, you ask yourself, 'How do you make someone you don't even know like you and appreciate you?' In track they'll respect you because you beat the hell out of them.

"But on stage everything matters—your attitude, your stage presence. If you come on too cocky like Mr. New York big show time, they won't like you," he said. "When I'm on stage, I'm having fun and I want the people to have fun. If they aren't, I'm not doing my job."

While both track and music inflict tremendous pressure on the performer, Parrette said track taught him to cope with his nerves.

"I have a lot of pride under pressure situations. It's just unbelievable," he said. "Track has more of an institutionalized pressure. If you mess up, you affect more people: the coach, the team, the school's pride."

BESIDES KNOWING how to perform under pressure, Parrette said he believes a person has to develop a "killer instinct."

"To compete, you've got to have a killer instinct. You can't give your opponent anything; you just get nasty.

"I know that's kind of a sad way to train and show determination, but when the chips are down, that instinct is still there," he said.

(see PARRETTE, p.21)

Biofeedback and tennis: it's time to relax

By NANCY ZOGLEMAN
Collegian Reporter

He sits comfortably in a chair and places his hands in his lap.

Gradually, he relaxes his body, taking deep, even breaths.

He is now ready to begin practicing tennis.

Tennis?

With the help of Tim Lowenstein, director of the Applied Biofeedback Lab in the Counseling Center, eight members of the men's tennis team and Coach Steve Snodgrass are taking biofeedback and relaxation training.

The players, who have met with Lowenstein twice a week for four weeks, are now on the court applying what they have learned.

"Steve contacted me last fall about getting the whole team together for biofeedback lessons," Lowenstein said.

The program is designed to teach the players to be more effective in dealing with stress and their emotions while competing.

The players started by learning to relax their muscles. Next, they learned to regulate their inner thoughts, resulting in a dream-like sleep.

AS THE SESSIONS progressed, the players imagined themselves playing tennis. They would then isolate the parts of their game they wished to improve, he said.

"It's almost like you don't need a tennis court to practice," Lowenstein said.

One team member, who had a habit of stepping back when he hit a volley, imagined himself stepping into the ball and hitting it properly. When he got on the court, he no longer had to think about doing it right because it seemed natural, Lowenstein said.

"This helps the players get away from self-criticizing. It relieves the stress and tension, and puts the players in a more relaxed state of mind," he said.

Lowenstein, who has been working with the biofeedback program since 1972, said this was the first time he has worked with an entire team and its coach.

HE WORKS with 40 to 60 people each semester in the biofeedback and relaxation program. The biofeedback labs are self-taught, with up to six persons per hour stopping by Holtz Hall to receive biofeedback.

Snodgrass said he first thought of biofeedback for his team when the squad was playing the University of Kansas last fall.

"KU wasn't that much different physically, but it seemed that the K-State players didn't believe in themselves as much as KU did," Snodgrass said.

Although everyone is responding to the biofeedback sessions, Snodgrass said each player must be treated differently and no one can be forced into doing the drills if he doesn't want to.

"I think it's a little early to tell, but I have noticed a little relaxation when they were playing," he said.

The players also have found it easier to concentrate on their studying, Snodgrass said.

BIOFEEDBACK will be used on days of matches and major tournaments, Snodgrass said. Lowenstein will guide the team through relaxation drills and Snodgrass will give them visual thoughts while their eyes are closed.

The players will be instructed to imagine themselves playing well and concentrate on watching the ball, he said.

The tennis team will test its biofeedback training when it travels to Lindsborg March 7 to play in a tournament at Bethany.

ON TRACK...Vince Parrette improvises on the congas during a rehearsal with the K-State Jazz Ensemble.

Parrette...

Parrette's instinct didn't develop over night. It mostly has grown from a childhood of full of spite.

Parrette, who grew up in Overland Park, a predominately white suburb of Kansas City, said he always believed he had to prove himself.

"When I was in fifth grade, I was just thrown into an all-white situation, just before things started setting in my head," he said.

"I just hated it. I hated to be rejected and denied. I was never good enough for some of my friend's parents. I always had to get through the barrier, 'Oh, he's all right—for a black guy.'"

"I certainly wasn't going to drive into Kansas City every day to sit around on street corners," he said.

AS A RESULT, Parrette became involved in student council, choir and athletics. As a track star for Shawnee Mission South, Parrette gained state and nationwide recognition.

On New Year's Eve 1977, a month before his first Big 8 Indoor, Parrette's career and life nearly ended when his back and legs were severely burned in a fire which destroyed his family's home.

"After the fire, I was lying in the hospital reading in the paper that I was on the critical list. I thought, 'This means I could die,'" he said.

But Parrette didn't die. In fact, just one week after he got out of the hospital, he won the triple jump in the Big 8 Indoor.

"I wasn't even supposed to be in that meet. I was supposed to be resting somewhere, talking about how good I could have been, but I won," he said.

Two years later, Parrette still follows "his plan." He and Taj see each other whenever they can.

And Parrette will never have to talk about how good he could have been, because..."it's ring time."

Leaks plague Shellenberger

This week's warmer temperatures have intensified the problem of melting snow seeping into Shellenberger Hall.

Last week it was reported that more than 1,000 pounds of grain for campus livestock were destroyed by water leaking into the storage warehouse connected to Shellenberger.

Water is still destroying grain in the warehouse and is now leaking into other parts of Shellenberger, according to Keith Behnke, faculty supervisor of the warehouse.

"We have water dripping from the lights and running down the vent duct into the power room," Behnke said. "A few days ago we had water standing in the incoming grain receiving pit. I anticipate there'll be more down there soon."

Behnke said snow drifts up to six feet deep were on the roof after the last snowfall. As a result, there is now about two inches of water standing on the flat roofs of Shellenberger and the warehouse.

The roofs are inadequate for drainage and need resurfacing, he said.

"The roofs need to be stripped down and retarred. It would also help if the roofs had a bit of an angle to them to ad draining.

"Right now we're only able to use about 75 percent of our space (in the warehouse) of water problems. The unused space is costing around $1,000 a year," Behnke said.

Behnke estimates that another $75 to $100 of feed in the warehouse has been destroyed this week. Water is also leaking into offices and classrooms in Shellenberger.

Carl Hoseney, a professor in the grain science department, said he has been complaining about the water problem for five years.

"I complain and they send someone over from the physical plant. They usually get here after all the water has dried and say 'Well, it's not dripping now'," Hoseney said.

"It's a nuisance to me in my office, but worse is what its doing to the research lab. We can't set any equipment next to one wall for fear of water damage."

Hoseney said the water problem is much worse after a snow thaw than after a rain because snow accumulation is usually heavy on the flat roof.

"I still have hope that something will be done," he said.

Don't be fuelish.

A free press? Case contested

TOPEKA (AP)—The attorney for a Kansas newspaper convicted of prematurely releasing information contained in an arrest warrant told the Kansas Supreme Court Thursday that press freedoms under the First Amendment would mean nothing if the conviction is allowed to stand.

The high court is considering the Douglas County District Court conviction of Stauffer Communications Inc., owner of the Topeka Daily Capital, for a misdemeanor offense for releasing the names of two persons sought in a criminal investigation.

Stauffer was fined $1,500 for publishing the names under a Kansas statute forbidding disclosure of information contained in arrest or search warrants prior to execution.

The case involves the right of news media to publish information contained in such warrant that were obtained from open court records.

"I think the law is clear that the press can't print everything it gets its hands on," declared Harry Warren, assistant district attorney for Douglas County, to the court.

The newspaper contends the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution protects it from prosecution of information, freely obtained, on governmental functions.

"Our intent was to invoke our constitutional right of free press and to inform the public, not to break the law," said Topeka attorney Michael Merriam, representing Stauffer.

Club horsin' around with equine contest and western singer

Four legged all-stars will gallop in for the Third Annual K-State Intercollegiate Horse Show today and Saturday in Weber Arena.

"This year we are really excited about the show; we have contestants from various colleges in Kansas and also participants from Northwest Missouri State," Michael Dikeman, associate professor of animal science and adviser of Block and Bridle, said.

According to Lance Markley, junior in animal science and chairman of the show, events scheduled include: showmanship, western pleasure, western horsemanship, English pleasure, barrel racing, pole bending, ribbon roping, team roping, rescue racing and reining.

All events will be judged by R.B. Warren, professor of animal science from the University of Nebraska, Dikeman said. The preliminary contest will be tonight and Saturday afternoon.

"We expect the biggest crowd on Saturday evening since the top six contestants from each category will be returning for the finals," Dikeman said.

Besides the finals competition, a dance will be given featuring Red Stegall and the Coleman County Cowboys. Red Stegall and the band also will play Saturday afternoon during the horse show.

"The students are really excited," Dikeman said. "Not only will we have a good horses for the show, but also a popular country-western singer."

Pedestrians vs. drivers

By CHRIS TOOHEY
Collegian Reporter

"But, I did have the right-of-way," the epitaph of the pedestrian said.

right-of-way and its ownership is not the question when discussing the Anderson Avenue-Mid Campus Drive crosswalk, the Riley County Police Department said in its latest report.

Mutual consideration and increased safety by both walkers and drivers are areas which must be worked on.

First, as suspected, there is a high volume of both pedestrian and vehicle traffic at Mid Campus Drive and Anderson Avenue, Larry Woodyard, RCPD operations commander, said.

"This is not astounding to anyone," he said.

Second, "percentage-wise, the number of pedestrian violations is fairly equal to the number of vehicle violations," Woodyard said.

Through their observations, officers note the varying incidents of infractions, Woodyard said.

"Essentially, these infractions are failing to yield both in vehicle and pedestrian instances," Woodyard said.

JAYWALKING and not utilizing the crosswalk is a pedestrian infraction, he said.

"They (the pedestrians) are in close enough proximity (to the crosswalk) that it tends to create congestion," he said.

Over the next few weeks, RCPD has scheduled an enforcement program that will vary in times and actual days, Woodyard said.

"The times, at the minimum, will be several times a day, but will not be continuous.

"What we hope to accomplish is an awareness of that crosswalk at Mid Campus Drive and Anderson Avenue and voluntary compliance or mutual regard of pedestrian to vehicles and motorists to pedestrians," Woodyard said.

It's an attention-getting activity, Woodyard said; the officer in the area of the crosswalk will be summoning violaters.

"That is really the only attention-getting device available.

"It's not to increase our quota of citations or funding, but strictly to get the drivers and pedestrians attention," he said.

An excerpt from The Standard Traffic Ordinance For Kansas Cities, which has been adopted by nearly every incorportated city in Kansas, including Manhattan, pertains to driver responsibility and pedestrian right-of-way:

"(a) When traffic-control signals are not in place or not in operation, the driver of a vehicle shall yield the right-of-way, slowing down or stopping if need be to so yield, to a pedestrian crossing the roadway within a crosswalk when the pedestrian is upon the half of the roadway upon which the vehicle is travelling, or when the pedestrian is approaching so closely from the opposite half as to be in danger."

"The ordinance should dispel some of the misconceptions that pedestrians have the right-of-way, because that is not the case," Woodyard said.

IN REFERENCE to jaywalking, the Ordinance says:

"(a) Every pedestrian crossing a roadway at any point other than within a marked crosswalk or within an unmarked crosswalk shall yield the right-of-way to all vehicles upon the roadway.

"(d) No pedestrian shall cross a roadway intersection diagonally unless authorized by official traffic control devices; and, when authorized to cross diagonally, pedestrians shall cross only in accordance with the official traffic control devices pertaining to such crossing movements."

"The whole object of this enforcement program is to establish a rasonable amunt of effort or caution on both the part of the pedestrian and the driver," Woodyard said.

"We certainly don't want anyone else to get run over up there, whether it's their fault or not," he said.

The enforcement program at Mid Campus Drive and Anderson Avenue will be in effect as long as necessary, Woodyard said.

"At this point," he said, "we already have set up a schedule for the next several weeks, and we may have to run it until the semester is over."

Chinese to launch offensive; set twin goals of destruction

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—Well-informed Chinese sources in Peking predict China's invasion force in Vietnam will launch its biggest offensive within several days, Japan's Kyodo news service reported Monday in a dispatch from the Chinese capital.

It quoted the sources as saying China's "punitive action" will reach its critical stage this week, with the twin goals of destroying at least one Vietnamese army division and Vietnam's military bases near the border, including artillery positions.

KYODO ALSO reported that Peking Radio said Chinese troops had engaged Vietnamese army regulars in hand-to-hand fighting near Dong Dang, a village three miles inside Vietnam. Most reports from China and Vietnam have indicated Vietnamese militias were doing most of the fighting, with the Hanoi government not committing its regular army units.

The Peking broadcast said that after a day of heavy fighting "a Chinese batallion overran five hilltop positions" near Dong Dang, "destroyed a maze of enemy dugouts and repulsed repeated attacks mounted by the enemy from below," according to Kyodo. It said the broadcast gave no casualty figures and didnt't say when the fighting occurred.

VIETNAM SAID Sunday its counter-attacking troops killed almost 4,000 Chinese in weekend battles all along the border, and a total of 16,000 since the invasion began Feb. 17. But China was pouring in reinforcements, Hanoi radio said.

At U.N. headquarters in New York, Vietnamese and Cambodian delegates exchanged bitter charges Saturday at the Security Council's debate on the invasions of both Cambodia and Vietnam.

Moonshadow

The moon's shadow will darken the sun this morning during the century's last total eclipse. The eclipse will last about 2.5 hours across the state, reaching its most noticeable stage at about 10:30. If clouds aren't in the way, Manhattanites should be able to see about 60 percent of the sun darkened.

Although a partial eclipse will be visible in all states except Alaska and Hawaii, the path of totality crosses only the northern states and Canada and is never more than 195 miles wide.

Persons watching the eclipse must be careful to avoid serious eye damage, according to Charles Hathaway, head of the physics department. A solar eclipse should never be viewed with the naked eye, and even the use of special optical equipment can be dangerous, he said.

Some people believe they can safely view the eclipse through exposed photographic film, but the procedure is unsafe, Hathaway said.

The best way to view the eclipse is indirectly. Hathaway said a simple cardboard "pin-hole camera" can be made from a shoebox. The viewer should stand with his back to the sun, watching the image of the eclipse projected through the pin hole onto the cardboard.

Old buildings culprits in K-State energy waste

By BILL LIPPOLD
Collegian Reporter

Energy conservation and K-State buildings just don't seem to be compatible.

Overheated classrooms, leaking walls and poor insulation in several buildings on campus contribute to energy waste at K-State.

Calvin and Waters Halls are two such buildings where classroom temperatures surpass the comfort level, wasting enery and bothering students and faculty.

"In Calvin, most of the rooms are too hot," Steve West, senior in business, said. "It must be 75 to 80 degrees in there."

"When it's as hot as it is in Waters, it's easy to fall asleep," Paul Lacy, sophomore is business, said.

"I had a class in there (Waters) last semester; it seems like they keep the heat on even when it's 70 degrees outside," Lacy said.

The Universty is heated by steam, gas and electricity. The most common source of energy is steam, which is pumped from the Physical Plant to campus buildings through a network of underground tunnels.

THE TEMPERATURES in all campus buildings should be set at 68 degrees, acording to Larry Hedman, plumbing supervisor for University Facilities.

Although room temperatures in the newer buildings are controlled individually, the heat in the older buildings is controlled by a single thermostat, he said.

Overheated classrooms, however, are just one way in which K-State is wasting energy.

Several weeks ago, the residents of seventh floor Moore Hall wrote at letter to University officials and the Collegian complaining that the lobby walls, infested with cracks, were letting in cold air.

After three weeks of hearing about the problem, maintenance workers patched up the crevices.

"Maintenance finally fixed the wall," said Eric Rosenblad, senior in pre-law and a resident of seventh floor Moore. "I guess a letter was what we needed to get the problem corrected."

FAIRCHILD HALL also has similar problem of leaking air.

"The front doors doors of Fairchild have no weatherstripping and neither do the windows," Myron Calhoun, associate professor of computer science, said. "There must be a square foot of open space around those doors," he said.

The problem of conserving energy on campus could be easily solved, according to Bernd Foerster, dean of the College of Architecture and Design.

The best ways to retain heat in the campus buildings is to install weatherstriping around doors, install interior shutters, double glaze windows (two panels of glass approximately one-half inch apart) and insulate curtains by adding thicker fabrics, he said.

Foerster said landscaping could be used in conserving energy.

"By placing trees by windows, they will shade an office during the summer when the leaves are in bloom, and in the winter, the bare tree will allow the sun to shine through," he said.

FOERSTER also said University Facilities is constantly asking the Kansas Legislature for money to "tighten up" K-State's buildings, but requests are constantly turned down.

"We apply for money in the same manner as all state agencies," said Case Bonebrake, utilities superintendent for University Facilities.

When applying for state aid in cases like ths, Bonebrake said he first points out the need for money to Gene Cross, vice president-designate for University Facilities.

According to Bonebrake, the request then goes to the University administration for approval. If approved, the administration then sends the request to the governor's office for review.

President Carter is worried about Billy

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter has denounced recent remarks about Jews by his brother Billy, a close Carter adviser confirmed Sunday.

Robert Strauss, special U.S. trade representative, quoted Carter as telling him: "I am terribly concerned with the whole situation of Billy, including his health. You know, Bob, I just totally disassociate myself from his comments. They are objectionable and foreign to everything about the way we live our lives."

The president's criticism was his strongest yet in connection with his brother's remarks, made while Billy Carter was playing host to visiting Libyan businessmen.

After being criticized for his role in escorting the Libyans, the president's brother was quoted as saying, "There's a hell of a lot more Arabians than there is Jews."

Chinese aggression threatens U.S. relations, Blumenthal warns

PEKING (AP)—Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal bluntly warned China's leaders Sunday that their invasion of Vietnam could turn world opinion against them, block progress in U.S.-Chinese relations and perhaps ignite a wider war.

His Chinese hosts told the American envoy their war against Hanoi is "fully justified."

Blumenthal had said he was bringing with him a message from President Carter to the Chinese leadership. He delivered it in a banquet toast in the Great Hall of the People.

"Our bilateral relations, particularly our commercial and scientific relations, will only flourish in a world of peace and stability," Blumenthal said.

"Even limited invasions risk wider wars and turn public opinion against the transgressor," he said. He did not mention China by name, but the reference was clear.

The treasury secretary, the first American official to meet with Chinese leaders since the invasion was launched Feb. 17, read excerpts from a recent speech in which Carter said the United States opposes the Chinese invasion and the earlier invasion of Cambodia by Vietnam.

BLUMENTHAL'S Chinese counterpart, Finance Minister Chang Ching-fu, said in his toast that China was "fully justified" in invading Vietnam and indicated the Chinese forces will stay until the Vietnamese agree to a conference to settle the dispute. Vietnam rejected an earlier proposal for negotiations.

"The occurrence of today's grave armed conflict between China and Vietnam is wholly the creation of Vietnamese authorities," he said. Peking has said the invasion was launched to "punish" the Vietnamese for border provocations.

The Carter administration has said Blumenthal's trip does not mean American approval of the invasion. But the Soviet news agency Tass charged Sunday that it is "clearly encouraging" Chinese aggression.

Blumenthal, who arrived Saturday for the nine-day official visit, will preside over the official opening of the U.S. Embassy here Thursday and will initiate trade talks with the Chinese.

There was little visible evidence in Peking that a war was going on 1,500 miles to the south. Sunday was unusually warm, with sunshine filtering through smog. The streets were jammed with pedestrians and bicyclists. Soldiers were unarmed and appeared to be enjoying the sunshine like everyone else.

Iranian oil in hands of radicals

ABADAN, Iran—Iran's oil industry, once the world's No. 2 supplier, is in the hands of radical workers who demand a major role in deciding who gets their product and at what price.

Marxists are actively recruiting among them, although they remain a minority.

Labor leaders who organized the general strike that halted oil exports and brought the Iranian economy to its knees say they are willing to allow oil to be sold to anyone except Israel and South Africa once they receive orders from the provisional government of Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan

Deputy Prime Minister Amir Entezam said the new government hopes to resume selling oil abroad in about two weeks.

But in interviews with The Associated Press, workers made clear they expect the government to heed their demands—among them redistribution of income, an end to foreign control of the industry and the right to reject management appointees.

U.S. prepares to use force in Mideast

WASHINGTON—Two administration officials said Sunday the United States is prepared to use military force if necessary to protect oil sources and vital interests in the Mideast.

"Protection of the oil flow from the Mideast is clearly part of our vital interests," said Defense Secretary Harold Brown. "...In protection of these vital interests, we'll take any action that's appropriate, including the use of military force."

The defense secretary added that military force "is not necessarily appropriate in every instance."

Energy Secretary James Schlesinger, speaking of U.S. interests in the Persian Gulf said: "The issue of a U.S. military presence is under consideration. That would involve military personnel. Whether it would involve a deployment of troop...combat arms of the ground forces, is another question."

Brown's comments were in response to questions about Soviet actions in the Mideast. The defense secretary said that while all problems in the region cannot be blamed on the Soviet Union, the Russians are "clearly eager to fish in muddy waters."

He said that many nations in the Mideast recognize a threat from the Soviet Union.

Police pull off garbage dump pickets

NEW ORLEANS—Striking police agreed Sunday to obey a court order and pull pickets away from garbage dumps and Sanitation Department garages. City officials said they hope to have New Orleans cleaned up by the time Mardi Gras arrives Tuesday.

"We just complied with the court order that the Fourth Circuit Court of Appeal gave us—a restraining order from picketing the Sanitation Department," said Mitchell Ledet, a representative of the Teamsters union, bargaining agent for the striking Police Association of Louisiana.

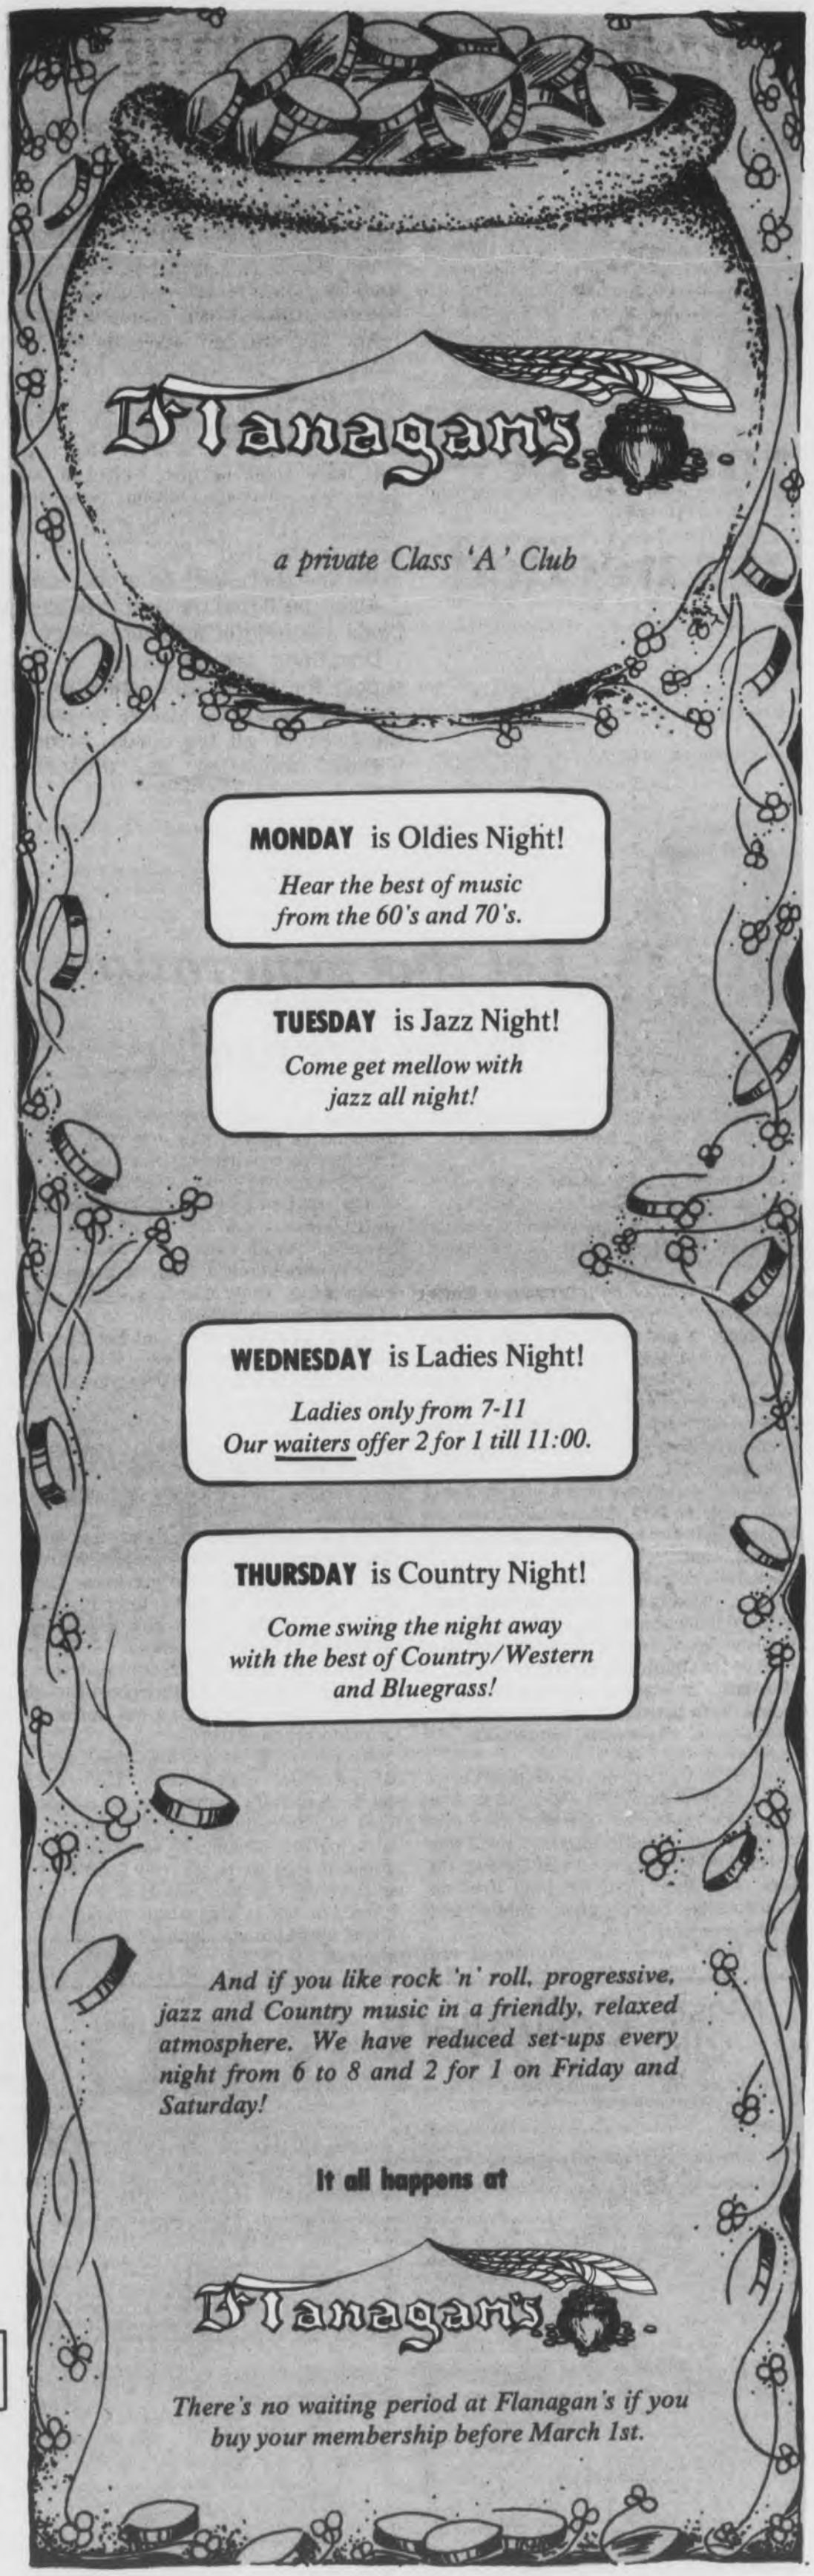
Ledet said police pickets left the dumps and garages Sunday afternoon—about 17 hours after the appellate court handed down the five-day temporary restraining order.

A Sanitation Department employee said the French Quarter, the heart of the boisterous Mardi Gras revelry, was substantially cleaned up Sunday morning.

Garbage had piled up since Thursday, when police started picketing the Sanitation Department facilities.

Soviets en route to Salyut 6

MOSCOW—The Soviet Union launched two cosmonauts into orbit aboard a Soyuz capsule Sunday, Tass reported. The spaceship, Soyuz 32, is to dock with the space station Salyut 6, which has been circling the globe for 16 months.



Tass identified the two as Air Force Lt. Col. Vladimir Lyakhov, 37, the flight commander, and civilian flight engineer Valery Ryumin, 39, who made his first space trip in October 1977 on the ill-fated Soyuz 25. That craft went into orbit but failed to dock with Salyut 6 and was brought back prematurely.

Since then, the Salyut scientific station has been the orbiting home for several crews, including cosmonauts Vladimir Kovalenok and Alexander Ivanchenkov, who set a world space endurance record by staying aloft for 139 days, 14 hours and 49 minutes.

The Soyuz 32 launch marked the first Soviet manned space mission since Kovalenok and Ivanchenkov returned to Earth last Nov. 2.

Weather

Look, up in the sky! Ooooops. We're having an eclipse today so don't look up in the sky, or you'll burn your eyeballs out. Particularly since the forcast calls for sunny weather with highs in the upper 40s. Tonight and Tuesday will be partly cloudy with highs Tuesday in the 50s.

Opinions

Whatever your type— it's needed

It takes all types—to give blood, that is.

This semester the bloodmobile at K-State needs 1200 pints of those different blood types to fill the quota set by the Red Cross. That's 200 more pints than they needed last spring and 150 more than have been donated during a spring semester blood drive.

And appointment sign up last week was slow.

Students can still make appointments today between 9 a.m. and 4 p.m. in the Union. However, don't let not having a reservation stop you from giving blood.

It may take longer, being a walk-in, but giving away a pint of your blood is nothing to skip lightly through. This year donations should go faster because the Red Cross is sending two bloodmobile units and there will be more nurses.

Also, you'll find the people in charge of taking your blood are helpful and competent.

Donations are necessary to maintain a blood supply for all K-State students plus any spouses, children, brothers, sisters or parents. As stated on the back of all fee cards, blood can be received without obligation for replacement for a year because of this Red Cross Regional Blood Program.

That's a fine deal—one pint of your blood for a guarenteed blood supply for you and your family. But the 1200 pint quota must be filled.

This year it will be more convenient to donate with the bloodmobile located in the K,S, and U rooms in the Union instead of Derby as in the past.

The two bloodmobiles will be here Tuesday through Friday and will be open from 9:00 a.m. to 3:00 p.m.

Even if you fail to make an appointment, go on over to the Union anyway.

They won't turn you down.

What they'll do is take your temperature, test your blood, inventory your health and if you check out—take their pint.

The bloodmobile people are well-prepared for their part, are you ready for yours?

They're waiting for donations so don't wait to donate. It takes all types to give blood and yours is needed now.

Let this generation stop prejudice

Being a multi-racial, ethnic awareness of my races and of other people's heritage is of utmost importance to me.

Another February is about to draw to a chilly close and besides Ground Hog Day, Valentine's Day, Washington and Lincoln's birthdays, and Mom's birthday, February also bought us another celebration—the celebration of the cultural heritage of black Americans.

My blood is one-fourth black. My father grew up an Alabama half-breed who went to New York and then to war. When I visited Birmingham last November, I was filled with eerie sensations as I walked the same streets my father might have walked in his adolescence.

I wonder sometimes how it was for him, growing up a dark-skinned half-breed in Alabama in the 30's with both parents dead since his twelfth year.

Alex Haley's recollections, my historical readings, and the various articles that appeared in local newspapers during Black Awarenes Week reminded me of how bad racial discrimination really was.

It's easy to forget at K-State when the student body president and other student leaders try to "whitewash" campus life.

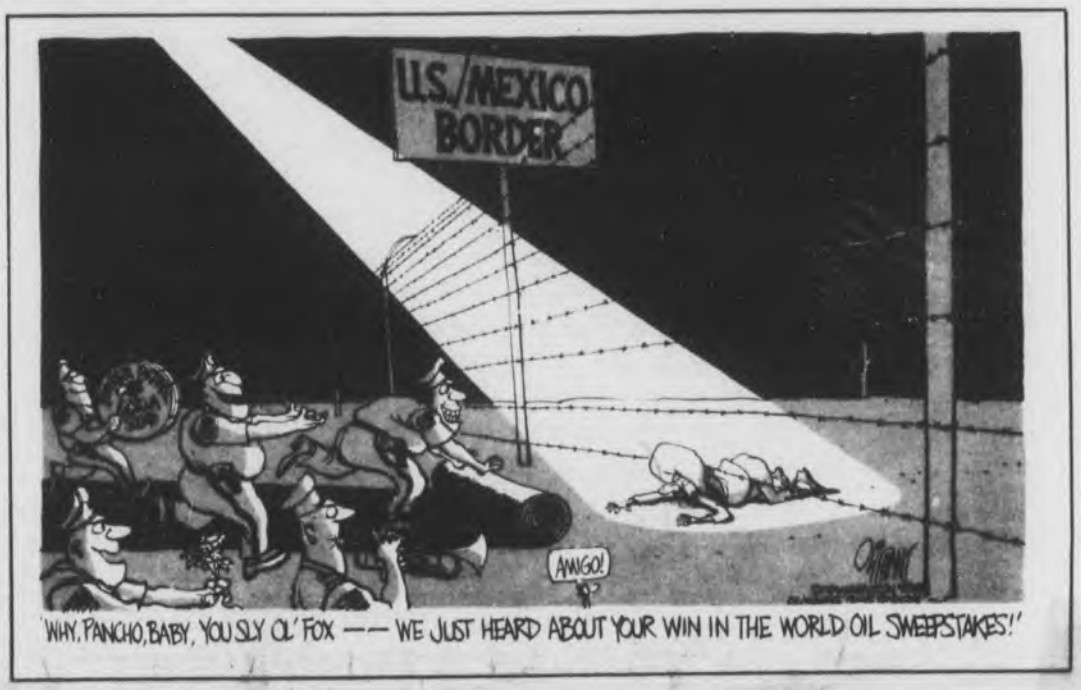
TO THINK that desegregation didn't even begin in Kansas until 1961 and is incomplete today in the real sense. The black race was brought to this country against its will was encircled by the whip of slavery for over 200 years. And after that, the whip lived on although its crack grew subtle and sometimes silent.

The Rosa Parks mentality began two decades of consciousness-raising and protesting for black rights in the land of the free where all men are created equal.

Two decades of going forward after over 200 years of being held back—and America can't stand it. Cries of reverse discrimination fill the air, and many stand ready to shred their dignity and forget the actions of their white ancestors.

I used to be so optimistic.

God let us be different, I said. Let it be my generation that transcends the racial barriers just as my parents joined east and west and created me.



LET US truly interact. Let us care. Let us not be blind to our responsibilities or deaf to the haunting cries of the ghosts that dance among us.

You know the ghosts. Our ancestors have paved the way for us. Their prejudices are a liability on the balance of our lives. They leave us with accounts to pay, and sometimes we don't know why or to whom but that doesn't ease the debt.

We are all supposed to be equal these days, right? Well my balance sheet isn't so bad. I get along fine with a few minor adjustments here and there.

But the black race as a whole has a balance sheet whose assets have been stolen, forcefully withdrawn or denied. What all the ethnic yelling is about is balancing the accounts of varied minority groups so that we're all truly standing on equal footing.

And I'm not talking about money, I'm talking about human dignity. God, let us be different.

"WHY, PANCHO, BABY, YOU SLY OL' FOX —— WE JUST HEARD ABOUT YOUR WIN IN THE WORLD OIL SWEEPSTAKES!"

Public transportation slows pace of energy waste

Editor,

Following up on the views expressed by Sharon Buckner, this letter attempts to add a few more thoughts on energy conservation.

As one coming from a Third World country where energy is far more expensive than here, I feel very pained to see a one-ton vehicle carrying a 150-pound person every so often.

In contrast, a five-ton vehicle carrying about 50 people would not be as luxurious as a car, but it would save precious energy.

Whenever possible, an attempt should be made to have better public transportation. With a good public transportation system, one may not even need to have a car. People could begin to share cars when going to work.

The United States, with 6 percent of the world popluation, has been consuming 33 percent of the world's energy. As long as we continue to spend energy the same way, we will continue to sink deeper into the energy crisis.

Just a little sacrifice on the part of all of us can ameliorate the situation, if not eliminate it.

Susan B. Anthony Day

Editor,

Marianne Adams held 50 people spellbound on Feb. 15, by dramatically presenting speeches and poems from ardent feminists. Impersonating Susan B. Anthony, Ms. Adams skillfully wove 19th century speeches on suffrage, and 20th century poems on anger and the oppression of women into a stunning feminist drama.

To Marianne, to the women who helped coordinate this event, and to the people who attended, thank you for a wonderful Susan B. Anthony Day.

Savitch slated for first convocation

Former Congresswoman Bella Abzug is among the three convocation speakers K-State will host this semester, said William Sparkman, chairman of the University Convocations Committee.

Sparkman said Abzug will speak May 2. Abzug served six years as a representative from New York. She was recently fired from her job as chairman of President Carter's Commission for the Status of Women.

Jessica Savitch, NBC's weekend newsman, will speak March 27. Savitch, who is frequently on the road or NBC, has been dubbed "NBC's Golden Girl" by Newsweek magazine.

On May 9, Robert Shaw, musical director for the Atlanta Symphony, will speak.

"Shaw has made numerous records and is nationally known," Sparkman said. His visit will correspond with the K-State music festival the same week.

All convocations will be in McCain Auditorium at 10:30 a.m.

Red Cross has slow evening at Tucker concert

Life for American Red Cross workers was quieter than usual during the Marshall Tucker Band concert Saturday night in Ahearn Field House.

Drug use and other injuries at the concert were less than average, according to Dr. William Tiemann, director of the American Red Cross Emergency First Aid Service.

"Sure, there was some drug use, but most of it had to do with alcohol," Tiemann said.

The American Red Cross usually has an emergency first aid crew at K-State concerts to aid people who get sick or injured.

"Most of the cases we were involved with were minor," Tiemann said. "Most of the cases involved illness or falling."

Students at concerts who require medical assistance may be taken to Lafene Student Health Center. Non-students at the concert needing medical care would be taken to St. Mary Hospital.

According to a source at Lafene, Saturday was an unusually quiet night, and no drug-related incidents were reported. St. Mary reported a busy night, but said the concert was not a cause in the high number of emergencies.

"Only one person was transported to St. Mary Hospital and that person did not require hospitalization," Tiemann said. That incident was not drug-related, he said.

No arrests were made and no major problems occured at the concert, according to Security and Traffic.

Pancake eaters pile up funds

You've heard about Volkswagen stuffing, but what about pancake stuffing?

Various campus living groups spent Wednesday, Thursday and Friday participating in a pancake eating contest at Grampy's Pancake House to raise money for the Riley County Heart Association. For each buttermilk pancake eaten, five cents was donated to the Riley County Heart Fund. Winners of the contest were chosen on the number of pancakes eaten.

In the men's division, Sigma Phi Epsilon fraternity, co-sponsors of the contest, was awarded first place for eating 792 pancakes. The women of Ford Hall's fifth floor ate 606 pancakes to take the title in their division.

Andy Kiorpes, president of the Riley County Heart Association, said 4,790 pancakes were consumed during the three-day period, and along with other donations, netted $260 for the heart fund.

Approximately 25 men's and women's teams competed in the contest, Kiorpes said.

As part of the competition, a pancake eat-off was held Friday for individual competitors. Steve Kurtz, freshman in horticulture from Haymaker 3, ate his way to the $25 first place prize with at total of 41 pancakes eaten in a 30-minute period.

"They (Grampy's) had tried to do something on this line last year to help the heart fund. This year they wanted to do something similar, but on a larger scale," Kiorpes said.

Marshall Tucker crew sets stage for sounds of music

By KELLY WILKERSON
Collegian Reporter

The tickets listed 8 p.m. Saturday as starting time for the Marshall Tucker concert, but the show got underway hours before.

When I arrived at 10 Saturday morning, Ahearn Field House was as busy as an ant colony.

People quietly rechecked the bleachers, swept floors and waited with a tense quietness.

At 11 a.m. the tension was replaced with a burst of adrenalin. The first truck had arrived, on time and with no breakdowns.

Five men stretched and yawned as they walked into the fieldhouse, but within a few minutes the sleepy figures had come alive and the Ahearn Complex Crew was working at a fast clip.

In 20 minutes the first semi-tractor trailer truck was relieved of its load, but things weren't moving fast enough for Randy Day of Mountain Sound, Marshall Tucker's sound company.

By 12:15 p.m. the second truck was being unloaded, and the speakers set in place.

The people on the light crew gave orders while the sound crew worked furiously, connecting the hundreds of necessary wires for the audio system.

The road crew began to relax, knowing the trucks had been unloaded in less than two hours.

Few problems had been encountered, yet members of the road crew didn't slow the pace, and lunch was either forgotten or quickly eaten.

These people know the business and anticipate problems.

As expected, the problems began.

The electrical wiring caused harsh words, but after a short time everthing was working.

More chairs were set up and the spotlights delivered.

The power was turned on and the equipment received a quick checkup. After encountering and solving another electrical problem which left about one-fourth of the 86 lights working, each light was turned on and given the proper "gel" (a colored sheet of plastic put in each light).

Firefall's equipment arrived at 3 p.m. and the stage was set for their performance.

A check was made of the sound system. Day, the sound engineer for the concert, worked at equalizing the system to get the best sound for Ahearn.

Lights were raised and adjusted. A crew member walked across the light trusses 35 feet above the fieldhouse floor as if he was walking across the stage.

More than nine hours of work had been spent getting ready for a night of music, and the band had yet to go on stage.

At 8 p.m. the lights went up; the sound swelled; the crowd cheered. The concert began.

Band's southern roots influence Tucker's 'southern rock' style

By SCOTT FARINA
Contributing Writer

What's in a name? For the Marshall Tucker Band, it's a key (pardon the pun) issue.

"We'd rented this place to practice (in Spartanburg, S.C.). The guy that had it before us was a blind piano tuner, and he had his name on a tag on the key, which was still there when we got it. So we just kinda took his name and used it ourselves."

The piano tuner's name, of course, was Marshall Tucker.

Jerry Eubanks tells the story in an easy, Southern drawl. He's the flute player and altoist with the band, and he swears to the tale's authenticity.

This country-rock-jazz sextet has been together since 1972, and it has not had one change personnel.

"We never will, unless someone dies. We all grew up together in Spartanburg; we have a lot of the same roots, and that contributes to the way we play. We played on and off in different combinations until we came down to this six."

EUBANKS SAID the musical influences where they grew up were opposites: "Mostly bluegrass or straight black music."

Now the band is known as a prime exponent of "Southern rock." Does Eubanks like that label?

"We started this Southern rock thing with a lot of promotion for our first album; we used the label to help us. Then a lot of bands came along and called themselves Southern bands, like Lynnard and Atlanta Rhythm Section and all them."

The bearded musician admits the label now is limiting. Too many people equate 'Southern rock' with boogie bands, and Eubanks said he thinks the Tucker band is much more.

"We'd just keep playing songs and eliminate what didn't feel right and kept what worked. We've played straight rock, and straight country, and even today we still are changing. The versatility and proficiency of the musicians helps to bridge the transitions."

ALTHOUGH ALL the Marshall Tucker Band members are good musicians, only Eubanks and drummer Paul Riddle have had musical training and read music. Eubanks was trained in classical music, and he admitted for a long while he hated rock 'n' roll.

"When the Beatles first came out, I thought, 'man, that stuff is awful.' Now I like most of today's rock music, but I hate disco!"

Eubanks is justifiably proud of the group he is with, but he is also quick to acknowledge the debt the band owes to non-rock performers of the past.

"We're not doing anything unique; Bob Wills (and the Texas Plowboys, one of the best Westeren swing bands) was doing the same thing we're doing now. We're just the only ones doing it in a rock context. Our group of musicians and instruments gives us a different sound."

"We all still live in Spartanburg, and we're all still good friends. That contributes to the way we play; we can talk out disagreements."

Rock 'n' Roll

By SCOTT FARINA
Collegian Reviewer

Saturday night in Ahearn, amidst frisbees, the heavy smell of marijuana and "Disco sucks" T-shirts, rock 'n' roll raised its foot-stompin,' hand-clappin' head.

Firefall and the Marshall Tucker Band were the instigators of the frenzied feeling, playing to an audience estimated at 6,300. This crowd was definitely in the mood to party.

Opening the show was Firefall, a minor band whose performance causes

Collegian Review

one to paraphrase the old adage: "You can't judge a group by its records."

On wax, Firefall is a California-style, mellow group. Saturday night they were a hard-driving rock 'n' roll band.

"Cinderella" was the opening number of the energy-heavy set. In fact, there was not one slow song, despite the fact Firefall's hit singles are in a laid-back vein.

"Goodbye I Love You," "You Are the Woman" and "Just Remember I Love You" were all done with a heavy beat and an uptempo feel. The sax work on "Goodbye" was drowned out by the other instruments, but "Woman" and "Just Remember" featured some nice flute playing that carried above the din.

FOR SHEER hard rock, there was "Mexico" and a new song, "Lips," that has a tremendous brass hook; plus "Wrong Side of Town," a rhythm and blues number that worked up the audience.

Most of the Firefall segment was professional and tight, but a few tunes dragged. "Livin' Is Easy" had an extended sax-guitar break that was high on energy, but offered little thoughtful improvising. And the encore, "Winds of Change," started with a l-o-n-g chord buildup that dragged on until the volumn level must have peaked at 150 decibels. Whew!

The Marshall Tucker Band members came on stage one at a time, and the audience went crazy. Firefall had done a good show, but this was the band the audience came to see. For nearly two hours the Tucker boys showed why they have remained popular for six years.

In one respect Tucker was like Firefall; the energy level caused some changes in song tempos from the recorded versions. "Heard it in a Love Song," for example, was taken at a gallop. It worked, though, and there was some fine soloing by Toy Caldwell on lead guitar and Jerry Eubanks on flute.

"Blue Ridge Mountain Skies" also was played fast, although you could still feel its Western background. Another Caldwell solo highlighted this number, but the vocals were completely drowned out.

THAT PROBLEM with the vocals persisted through most of the performance, which is a shame, as Caldwell and lead singer Doug Gray both have interesting singing styles. There was also an occasional problem with feedback that was a minor irritant.

What separated Tucker from Firefall was diversity and musicianship. All the solos by Tucker members had substance to them, especially those by Eubanks on alto sax and flute. Combining creative musicality with energy is the mark of a fine band, and that's just what the Marshall Tucker Band does.

Tucker may be the world's only country-rock-jazz group. Their show had elements of all styles. "Dream Lover" had a swing feel to it. "Fire On the Mountain" was down-home country with Caldwell on steel guitar.

"Can't You See," the one song the band HAS to play at every concert, was one of the high points of the night. Caldwell's vocals came through well on this one.

There was a long, interesting jam on "24 Hours" with bassist Tom Caldwell (Toy's brother), rhythm guitarist George McCorkle and Eubanks,each sharing the spotlight on some well-done solos. It was too bad drummer Paul Riddle didn't get a solo, because he provides powerful backing with real style.

The crowd called the band back for three encores. The second time out, Gray said, "What the hell, we've got nothing else to do tonight!" Everybody was on their feet as the band finished the show with "Searchin' for a Rainbow."

The Marshall Tucker Band doesn't use fancy gimmicks on stage. It relies on its music to move an audience...and it succeeds.

From Excelsior's rusty stream springs secret of good health

By GREG HENDERSON
Collegian Reporter

Out of the ground it flowed in 1880, just as it does today. Bubbling rust red, it passed over rocks, staining them yellow before entering and discoloring the stream.

It is called mineral water.

Excelsior Springs, Mo., did not exist before a farmer, quite by accident, discovered the usefulness of this unique water.

George Travis Million's first-born, Lou Ella, was sick with Scrofula (primary tuberculosis). He had taken the 17-year-old girl to doctors in Kansas City and the surrounding area by 1880, but none were able to help her.

Just as the Millions began to lose hope for their daughter, her condition began to reverse. So Travis took her back to the doctor.

AFTER MILLION told how he liked to fish, and how Lou Ella always followed along to go swimming, the doctor concluded that iron and other elements in the water had made the girl's cough and sores disappear. Soon only scars remained to give proof of her illness.

News of Lou Ella's recovery traveled fast.

Now, the dark, suspicious-looking water became valuable. People flocked to the springs where open wounds healed and illness was washed away. They came to be cured. They came to get Excelsior.

"His brow was sad; his eyes beneath
Flashed like a falchion from its sheath,
And like a silver Clarion rung
The accents of that unknown tongue, Excelsior!"

Jamie Shupert reported in the Excelsior Springs Daily Standard the town received its name from this popular poem by Henry Wadsworth Longfellow.

EXCELSIOR SPRINGS grew rapidly as hotels and boarding houses were built to accommodate the people who came to bathe in and drink the unique water.

Tests on the water proved it to be iron manganese mineral water, a natural blood builder. Only six places in the world have this kind of water and two of them are at Excelsior Springs.

Lost in all of the excitement and glory of the rare water is the story of Travis Million and his family.

Now only Georgia (Million) Maxwell, Lou Ella's half-sister, remains to give the account of her family, and their experience with the waters of Excelsior Springs.

Maxwell, 86 and a Manhattan resident since 1942, is a woman full of spirt and energy that denies her age. She is warm and thoughtful as she recalls her father.

"Papa was born into slavery in Lexington, Kentucky," Maxwell said. "My grandmother died giving birth to him, and papa was taken in by the white woman that he belonged to. She raised him right along with her boy that was born the same year (1842).

"Papa stayed with that family even after slavery (was abolished) until he was grown," Maxwell said.

HER FATHER eventually moved to what is now Excelsior Springs, where he became a farmer, she said.

"Papa loved to fish. Everyone around would go down to the creek (Fishing River) where a spring of mineral water flowed into it. The water had a rusty color, or the color of iron," she said.

Georgia Maxwell

Maxwell has lived a healthy life, yet she is not sure if it was the water of her youth or her faith in God which has sustained her.

"I was never very sick, so I can't say that the mineral water has helped me to live to be 86, but it might have. But I can say that living a Christian life has helped me," she said.

Once the qualities of the water became known, the area around the springs began to be developed. Bath houses and hotels took the place of formerly quiet woods.

"I was born in 1893, and that's about the time the town was growing and they began to sell the water."

MAXWELL FINISHED high school at Excelsior Springs, continuing her education at Western Baptist College in Macon, Mo., where she earned a bachelor of science degree in general education in 1913.

After graduation, she returned to Excelsior Springs, where she taught elementary school for seven years.

"Papa couldn't read or write, but he wanted all his children to get an education and they all finished high school," she said.

Through her 86 years, Maxwell has worked as a schoolteacher, a government employee during the Roosevelt administration, a nursery director, and now, at an age when most people are retired, she works as a file clerk at the Manhattan Douglass Center.

Brownback reviews multi-facet job

By SUZANNE SCHLENDER
Collegian Reporter

He rode a bull, raced a cockroach and manned a dunking tank as part of his duties.

He is Sam Brownback, student body president, whose term ends Thursday.

He often worked 50 hours a week as president, Brownback said. The most time-consuming part of the job was attending meetings: during the day, in the evening, late at night and on weekends, he said.

"My responsibility is to be the voice of K-State students," he said. Brownback said he tried to do this by speaking with K-State administrators, Kansas legislators, alumni and students about their needs and concerns.

Brownback campaigned last year on a platform of 15 goals. He said he believes his first goal—to research and develop a plan for a new fieldhouse—was successfully completed except for final funding stages, which are being pursued.

Forming the Student Legislative Network (SLN) was his second goal for the year. SLN, a student lobbying group was formed to communicate the concerns of K-State students to state legislators, Brownback said.

He said he hoped to have a 320-member network, but the group only has about 100 members this year. Even with low membership, Brownback said he thinks SLN has had a good start.

PARKING WAS another major concern, Brownback said. Because of student pressure, a storage parking lot was constructed west of the Stone House, he said.

"I feel good about the number of minorities that have become involved in student government," Brownback said.

He said he tried to encourage minorities to get involved in student government by sending out letters asking them to apply for cabinet and committee positions.

Brownback said he also tried to get off-campus students involved in student government.

"This was a very successful project. They (Off-Campus Commission members) did polls, wrote up a constitution and formed an Off-Campus Council," Brownback said.

An issue passed on to Brownback from prevous years was the A-Pass-Fail grading system.

"The students aren't going to be happy with the situation (A-Pass-Fail) when they come back next year," he said. "We've salvaged as good a thing as we could."

Brownback said Faculty Senate was working on a very restrictive Pass-Fail system, but finally compromised with a less restrictive A-Pass-Fail system.

With A-Pass-Fail, a student will receive an A for A work, but an F for failing work will also be computed in the student's grade point average. Other grades will be recorded as credit but not included in the person's grade point average.

"I'm convinced it's going to help the academic climate," Brownback said.

OTHER AREAS Brownback said he worked on to improve academic quality were the advising system and student influence in reappointment and tenure. Academic and career advising were listed as the number one item on the formula funding proposal for K-State's budget as a result of requests by students to give it a high priority. Formula funding has been rejectd by Gov. John Carlin for next year's budget, but Brownback said he believes it was a step forward to get the administrators to see there was a need.

Two students have been appointed to work on the Faculty Senate ad hoc committee to study faculty evaluations. Brownback said he hopes to see student evaluations carry more weight when faculty members are reviewed for reappointment or tenure.

Of Brownback's original goals, only one was not accomplished. The issue of reapportionment "was not even addressed," he said.

Reapportionment involves studying the system of government to see if senators are adequately representing the students who elect them. Electing half the senate by living group and half by colleges has been considered.

BROWNBACK said he also had to contend with student opinion of his performance even when it was ill-founded. He came uunder heavy fire when basketball tickets were sold last semester.

"I didn't write it (the ticket sales policy) and I didn't approve it," he said. "I did read it and didn't foresee any problems with it, so I can be blamed there.

"I had to unplug my phone a couple of nights because people kept calling."

Another problem Brownback said he came up against during his term was in his dealings with the Collegian.

"There are so many things that student government and the Collegian could work on together. The Collegian has the opportunity to expose a lot of areas with problems and tell it to the students. They can bring pressure to bear by making students aware," Brownback said.

"Most of the year we spent at each other's throats. It doesn't help either one of us," he said.

Brownback said he "hated a lot of the aspects" of being president because it was so "negatively oriented."

"People only come to you when they have a problem," he said.

Brownback, a senior in agricultural economics, said he hopes to graduate in May and attend law school. After completing law school and working for a few years, he said, he would like to go back to farming.

Ending his term in office, Brownback is writing end-of-the-year reports to present to the new student body president, Greg Musil, and the new Student Senate. He is passing his responsibilities on to them.

Bakhtiar slips out of war torn Iran

LONDON (AP)—Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini said Sunday the Shah of Iran's last prime minister, Shahpour Bakhtiar, has fled the country, Tehran Radio reported.

The whereabouts of the 62-year-old Bakhtiar, who had been appointed by Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi in early January, have not been known since his government was deposed by Khomeini's Islamic revolution two weeks ago.

"We request our friends abroad to inform us wherever they may find him so that we can ask the government concerned for his return," Khomeini was quoted as saying in the Tehran broadcast, monitored here.

In a meeting with Lebanese and Kuwaiti emissaries to Tehran, Khomeini said, "He has fled, and on behalf of the Iranian nation we appeal to all foreign nations to hand this criminal over to us," the radio reported.

Sooners ruin 'Cats' fairytale ending

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

NORMAN, Okla.—There once was a basketball team called Cinderella.

Sports

Cinderella wanted so badly to go to the ball, but everyone said "No, Cinderella, you're too young. Two of your sisters will probably get to go to the ball."

But then Cinderella started to get the kingdom's attention.

Twice, she beat up her evil stepsister of the East.

And, finally the last week of the season came and Cinderella got to go to the ball against the evil stepsister of the South. The ball was held in a shiny palace, and Cinderella, all clad in purple, began to dance. And, she was doing quite well.

But, suddenly, the clock struck midnight. K-State lost its chance to tie for the conference championship. Oklahoma became very angry, smashed Cinderella's glass slippers and threw her out of the shiny palace and none of her dreams came true.

It was the Sooners' first conference title since 1948-49, and they won it convincingly, 65-52.

IN THE EARLY MINUTES, neither team looked like it wanted to win, as both offenses opened tentatively and cautiously.

Both teams' "handsome princes," K-State's Rolando Blackman, who had 20 points, and Oklahoma's John McCullough couldn't hit.

McCullough missed his first six attempts an finshed the first half two for 11. Blackman was three for 10 at halftime.

A tense minute for the few K-State fans in Norman came at the 13:01 mak when Blackman stole a pass and went the length of the court for a slam dunk. He somehow got hung up on the rim, swung out and crashed to the floor. After a few minutes, he got up and began walking, but he favored his right knee for the rest of the game.

A crucial turning point for Oklahoma came a few minutes later. Aaron Curry scored to break a four-minute drought in which the 'Cats had built a 16-10 lead.

K-STATE'S Glenn Marshall grabbed the ball and prepared to throw it inbounds, but no one was around except Sooners. The 'Cats were whistled for a five-second violation, and from that point on, the crowd went wild, the Sooners began to shoot well, and they outscored K-State 20-6 to build a 30-22 lead. Senior Cary Carrabine came off the bench and hit three jumpers from outside which helped spark Oklahoma.

"We kind of backed off and let them take charge of the game," Coach Jack Hartman said. "They shoot too well to let them get going."

After shooting nine for 25 in the first 15 minutes, the Sooners hit better than 60 percent for the rest of the game. Curry was their high-point man with 16.

The Wildcats, who were nine for 26 at halftime, shot 35 percent in the game.

A look at the shooting totals for the K-State players tells the story: Blackman, nine of 21; Marshall, two of nine; Tyrone Adams, two of six; Ed Nealy, two of seven and Jari Wills, two of six.

K-State, KU, Missouri tie; 'Cats play Nebraska Tuesday

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—K-State will host Nebraska, Missouri will host Oklahoma State and Kansas will host Iowa State Tuesday night in the first round of the Big 8 postseason basketball tournament.

The matchups were settled by a drawing Saturday night at conference headquarters after Kansas defeated Colorado 71-60 to forge three-way tie for second place in the regular season race. K-State, Missouri and Kansas finished the Big 8 season at 8-6.

Oklahoma, which won the Big 8 title by beating K-State 65-52, will host Colorado in the other first-round game.

The first-round winners will advance to the semifinals in Kansas City Friday night and the tournament winner will get the Big 8's automatic berth in the NCAA basketball tournament.

The postseason tournament format calls for the regular season champion to play the eighth-place team, the second-place finisher to play No. 7, etc. Oklahoma State, with a 5-9 record, finished seventh, Iowa State finished sixth at 6-8 and Nebraska's 7-7 record was good for fifth. Colorado is eighth at 4-10.

K-State emerges in fourth from teeming Big 8 Indoor

By CINDY FRIESEN
Asst. Sports Editor

OKLAHOMA CITY-From the upper-row bleachers of the Myriad Center in Oklahoma City this weekend, the view of the oval arena below looked like an ant hill after a good stirring by a mischievious child.

Perched high near the rafters, one could see objects moving every which way, seemingly without purpose or direction.

But upon closer examination, it became obvious the objects were men: some clad in sweat suits, some wore white tuxedo jackets with stop watches hanging like necklaces over light blue ruffled shirts. They were there for a purpose important to all of them—determining the 1979 Big 8 Indoor Track Championship.

With several events going on at the same time, the 51st running of the meet took on a three-ring circus atmosphere.

JUST AS an abundance of sweat dampened the air, tension filled the arena, but not without reason. Four of the eight teams believed they had a chance to win the meet, but no one would predict themselves to be a sure winner.

Finally at 11:30 Saturday night, as the last high jumper toppled the bar, the Missouri team turned into a gold and black mass of hugging and hand slapping. Shouts of joy, many in African tongue, penetrated the arena.

The Tigers had accumulated the highest score with 91 points, followed by Kansas University with 83.5 and the University of Nebraska with 79.

The Wildcats, who finished fourth with 65½ points, accumulated 21½ more points than fifth place Iowa State. Following the Cyclones were Colorado, Oklahoma State and Oklahoma.

Even though the Wildcats didn't finish as high as some of them had hoped, don't be fooled by that fourth place position.

"We're pleased that we're able to improve over last year," assistant coach Barry Anderson said. "Our kids—they are winners and not happy with fourth place. We'll be a lot better outdoor team."

THE 'CATS, who suffered three crucial injuries—two during the final events, gave an outstanding team effort, placing in 12 of 15 events.

"After talking to some of the other coaches last night, they were impressed with the way our athletes competed," K-State head coach Mike Ross said. "I definitely think we opened quite a few eyes this weekend."

Halfway through the finals in two distance races, junior Tim Davis and sophomore Rick McKean gave the Wildcats an unexpected boost. Both ran personal bests.

Davis, who had suffered injuries for nearly three years, won the mile with a time of 4:06.14, defeating favored Mark Fluitt of Nebraska.

looked like the ball club we were to get there," Hartman said.

"We've played with a caution and hesitancy, and it bothers me," he said.

THE QUIET of K-State's locker room was contrasted by the wild fans on the court and the rowdy Sooner locker room.

In the teams' customary postgame prayer, McCullough asked a blessing on Coach Dave Bliss, because he was about to get wet. After McCullough, Carrabine and Beal carried him head-first into the shower, Bliss came out and said "A person would think you guys had never won a Big 8 championship or something!"

"The best part of the whole game was when I saw (seniors) John and Cary cutting down the net," Bliss said.

DRIVING THROUGH...Gayla Williams (right) of K-State gets set to pass to a teammate while Sandy Smith of Wichita State tries to hold her ground during Friday night's game.

'Dedicated' trio helps 'Cats blow away WSU

By JIM BOEH
Collegian Reporter

Seniors Tami Johnson and Laurie Miller, playing their final game in Ahearn Field House, led the K-State women to a 90-51 bombing of Wichita State Friday night.

The two seniors, along with junior LeAnn Wilcox, combined for 40 points. Johnson and Wilcox had 14 and Miller added a dozen.

"They're very dedicated, outstanding defensive players and good team people," Coach Judy Akers said of the trio. "Stats don't explain their value to the team."

The victory, which made K-State 17-9, sets the stage for tonight's game against Kansas in Lawrence. The 'Cats are now 3-0 in conference play, and can earn a trip to the AIAW Regionals with a victory over the Lady Jayhawks (2-1). Wichita is 0-4 in the conference.

Against the Shockers, K-State never trailed and cruised to a 42-24 advantage at halftime.

In the first seven minutes of the second half, the 'Cats outscored Wichita 17-2, and the game was out of hand at 59-28.

THE FAST BREAK was a key, with K-State capitalizing on numerous three-on-two and two-on-one situations.

"We were well into our momentum," Akers said. "We played real good defense in the second half."

All 12 players who saw action for K-State scored. Akers praised her team's bench support, particularly the efforts of Jeanne Daniels, who came in and scored 11 points, grabbed five rebounds and hit five of seven from the field.

Eileen Feeney also had a solid game with 10 points and nine rebounds.

The Shockers were led by freshman Kathy Garofalo's 16 points. Terry O'Bryon added 12 points and 10 rebounds.

AIAW regional berth at stake as women play KU tonight

When K-State plays Kansas in anything, it seems like a life and death situation, but when the Wildcat women's basketball team meets KU tonight at Lawrence, the game is a "must".

K-State hasn't lost a conference game yet and dumped the 17th-ranked Lady Jayhawks 73-65 in late January. The Wildcats also hold a 21-5 edge in its series with KU.

If K-State can pull off anything like the 90-51 stampede over Wichita State Friday night in Ahearn Field House, the Wildcats will end the season 4-0 in the conference.

"KU will be on their home court pushing everything for a playoff. We will be trying to protect our interests as league leaders and will have to play a good solid game to withstand the attack," Coach Judy Akers said.

If the Lady Jayhawks win, they will tie K-State at 3-1 in the conference. A playoff game at a neutal sight would then decide which team goes to the AIAW Regional in Minneapolis, Minn.

KU IS LED by Lynette Woodard, averaging 31.8 points a game, and Adrian Mitchell, who is nearing 2,000 career points. Both are All-American candidates.

On the other hand, K-State has been led by balanced scoring in their last six games. In five of those, four Wildcats have been in double figures.

Davis was the lone champion for K-State in the meet.

"That was probably the most painful race I've ever run," Davis said. "With four laps to go I was really in pain and my legs just kept getting number and number."

LESS THAN an hour after winning the mile, Davis was back on the winners' stand for placing fifth in the 1000-yard run.

The biggest surprise of the evening for the Wildcats was McKean's second place finish in the two-mile run.

McKean, who was red-shirted after an operation last year, hung back in the early part of the race, but came on strong in the end, finishing in 8:58.3

"Realistically, we thought we'd be lucky to get sixth place in the two-mile. We had three freshmen in there and distance running sports have always been dominated by the old runners," Ross said.

Ray Hanf contributed twice to the Wildcat's score with a second place 48.81 in the 440-yard dash and a fifth in the 60-yard dash.

After placing third in both the 60-yard low hurdles and the 60-yard dash, junior Vince Parrette, who was favored to win the triple jump, suffered a pulled hamstring during his final jump of the event. His previous attempt of 51-6¼ was enough for him to win third.

The extent of Parrette's injury has not yet been determined.

"I think this hurts more inside than outside," Parrette said.

Another round: Carter calls for new summit

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter, determined to "spare no effort" for peace in the Middle East, called on Sunday for a new Camp David summit conference to try to conclude a treaty between Egypt and Israel.

Underlining the urgency, Carter said he hoped to have the talks with Prime Ministers Menachem Begin of Israel and Mustafa Khalil of Egypt going by the end of the week.

Carter made the announcement on the White House south lawn at the end of pre-summit negotiations between Khalil and Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan.

Later, Jody Powell, the White House press secretary, said that "sometime, midweek or so, we ought to know" whether the new round of negotiations will be held.

Carter said Egypt and Israel shared his determination to complete the long-elusive peace treaty.

There was no immediate explanation why Egyptian President Sadat would not come to Camp David for the new summit. He represented Egypt last September in arranging a framework for the treaty with Carter and Begin.

SADAT IS the unquestioned decision-maker in Egypt. There is no doubt that Khalil would seek his approval before taking any major steps at the talks.

Begin, meanwhile, would be able to speak for the Israeli government. However, his decision would require the ultimate approval of the Cabinet and the Israeli parliament. Dayan was flying to Jerusalem where a special meeting of the Cabinet was scheduled for Tuesday.

Carter's statement indicated some headway was made by Secretary of State Cyrus Vance in the four days of talks with Khalil and Dayan at the Maryland mountain retreat.

But Carter gave no details.

In Cairo, meanwhile, the Middle East news agency reported that Khalil would fly directly home instead of stopping in London, as initially planned.

The mediation effort, directed by Vance, was aimed at clearing roadblocks to completion of the treaty initially blueprinted by Carter, Begin and Sadat in September.

The Egyptian newspaper Al Ahram said the United States had submitted a proposal to deal with the future of the Israeli-held West Bank of the Jordan River and Gaza.

Al Gomhouria, another Egyptian newspaper, said Khalil's delegation had responded with ideas for ending the Israeli military government in the two terrtories once a Palestinian authority is established.

Other items in dispute included the provision for reviewing treaty terms in the future and whether Egypt's military ties to other Arab countries should take precedence over peace with Israel.

Amputees face a greater chance of heart disease

WASHINGTON (AP)—A new study says limb amputation can significantly increase the risk of death from heart disease, a finding that may mean increased benefits for some military veterans and further expand the definition of service-related injury.

The unpublished National Academy of Sciences study done for the Veterans Administration is the first hard evidence of the amputation-heart disease link, although it was suspected for several years.

VA spokesmen say the agency has been evaluating the study since last December. The report, with VA comment and proposed benefit changes for some amputees, should be sent to congressional veterans affairs committees this week, they added.

VA sources, though reluctant to discuss details of the study before it goes to Congress, said it shows heart problems in amputees can be service-related and, therefore, eligible for compensation.

The definition of service-related injury could be expanded further as the agency looks at other potential health problems that may not have been evident at time of discharge, they said.

THE VA IS studying the effect on soldiers of herbicides used in Vietnam and nuclear weapons testing.

Sources familiar with the amputation study say the academy's Medical Follow-up Agency examined the records of about 12,000 World War II servicemen.

About 3,900 had one or more amputated limbs and another 3,000 had lost a foot or hand. These groups were compared with 5,000 men who were wounded or disfigured without amputation.

The examination found that those having one or both legs amputated at or above the knee had a 150 percent higher death rate from cardiovascular disease than other wounded veterans.

The study also found a slightly higher heart death rate for elbow or above arm amputees, but no increase for those losing feet or hands.

Although the cause of the increased heart and vessel problems are unknown, the study said contributing factors could be less activity, greater exertion and emotional stress caused by amputation.

VA OFFICIALS said they have no figures on how many amputee veterans there are, but said there must be at least "several thousand."

Dr. Lawrence Hobson of the VA's Department of Medicine and Surgery said the increased mortality results were "surprising" to him even though there was some previous suggestion of the relationship with amputation.

Norman Hartnett, director of services for Disabled American Veterans, said the VA intends to expand benefits to only leg amputees with heart and blood vessel problems.

Brown endorses balanced budget

WASHINGTON (AP)—Gov. Edmund Brown Jr. brought his balance-the-budget crusade to the nation's capital Sunday, saying federal deficit spending led directly to California's tax revolt.

The 40-year-old governor said it is too early for a decision on whether he will challenge President Carter for the Democratic presidential nomination in 1980, adding that he is still "mulling over" the possibility.

But in interviews that opened his East Coast swing, Brown outlined themes that could play a role in such a campaign, including his push for a constitutional amendment to balance the federal budget.

Brown said federal budget deficits fueled the inflation that led California voters to pass Proposition 13 last June, slashing property taxes by 57 percent.

"I think Prop 13 occurred because of the fiscal policies of the federal government...Their wild deficits, the inflation, the heating of the economy, led to the increase in home values, leading to rises in property taxes, leading to the tax revolt," he told reporters.

On ABC's "Issues and Anwers," he defended his call for a constitutional convention to pass a balanced budget amendment if Congress does not do so.

"Too many people in this political establishment are underestimating the very deleterious consequences of the fiscal excess of the last decade. I don't think they are taking it seriously enough. And that is why I have endorsed the rather serious initiative of a constitutional convention," he said.

Brown was in Washington to attend the winter meeting of the National Governor's Association.

Squad talks way to fourth place

Speech Unlimited, an individual events speech squad, talked its way to fourth place last week in a contest at Rock Valley College, Rockford, Ill.

"We're really pleased about it," said Harold Nichols, associate professor of speech and one of the squad's coaches. "It's one of the toughest contests in the country. There were 41 schools there altogether."

Nichols said the squad missed third place by only two points to Northern Illinois. Eastern Michigan, the defending champion, won the contest.

In the individual contests, several K-Staters plaaced high, Nichols said.

In the senior division, Bob Holcomb, junior in business, took sixth in impromptu speaking. Linda Roberts, sophomore in speech, placed sixth in prose interpretation, and the Readers Theatre Production placed second.

In the junior division, Darla Beisner, junior in speech, took first in persuasive speaking. Tom Downing, freshman in general, placed second in after-dinner speaking. Jeni Hiett, freshman in speech, placed second in extemporaneous speaking and third in informative speaking.

Membes of Speech Unlimited try to go to this contest each year to prepare for regionals, Nichols said.

The squad has a small tournament this weekend at Ottawa University, and then will attend the regional tournament at Oklahoma Christian College in two weeks.

"We won our regional a year ago, and we hope we can do it again," Nichols said.

Needs: Kansas senators assess University

By LUKE BROWN
Staff Writer

Nichols Gym once again attracted the attention of state legislators when two Kansas state senators toured K-State Monday to evaluate University needs.

Senators Wint Winter (R-Ottawa) and Joe Warren (D-Maple City), members on the K-State subcommittee of the Ways and Means Committee, toured areas where the University has requested capital expenditure funding for next year.

They were shown Nichols Gym, the possible sites for the coal-fired power plant, the old power plant, the veterinary medicine school, the swine research facility and the sites of two recent fires.

K-STATE IS requesting state money to rebuild the animal resource building. Gifts and federal money will be used to rebuild the poultry facility, which is planned to be used for a grain research facility, according to Barry Flinchbaugh, special assistant to the president.

K-State administrators explained to the legislators the need for a new engineering building, labeled Engineering Phase II. The building would be constructed north of Durland Hall, according to Flinchbaugh.

"It's easy to see why they want to build a new building," Winter said. "It would be nice for the school of architecture to get engineering out of there (Seaton Hall) and it would be nice for engineering to get their own building.

"One thing we are concerned about is that the state hasn't been getting good buildings for its money," he said.

"It seems like the cost skyrockets and the quality goes down," Warren said.

"Many legislators have suggested some type of moratorium on state building so we can see just what the problem is," Winter said.

Winter and Warren said they are impressed with the veterinary medicine building.

"We were very surprised at the extensiveness of it. It seemed we had enough room for two veterinary medicine schools," Winter said.

K-State is requesting an amendment to a bill passed last year to authorize a $45,000 feasibility study on Nichols Gym. The study has been delayed because of a technicality. Flinchbaugh said he sees no problem with getting it passed.

The subcommittee will report on K-State when its budget comes before the Ways and Means Committee after being passed by the House of Representatives.

A similar subcommittee from the House toured K-State last month.

New B.A., B.S. requirements would give 'real world' view

Seeking to give students in the College of Arts and Sciences a "broad view of the real world," faculty members are discussing the addition of new requirements for fall semester.

An ad hoc subcommittee was appointed last fall by the Course and Curriculum Committee of Arts and Sciences to review curriculum required for a degree, John Lilley, dean of arts and sciences, said.

"We (the ad hoc subcommittee on curriculum reform) spent hours talking to all the areas of arts and sciences," he said.

The committee is considering a proposal in which freshmen would take an arts and sciences orientation course.

"Students come here without knowing the liberal arts tradition," Lilley said. "If you can write and think critically, there are a million things you can do. We want to educate students to a broad view of the real world."

Although the proposal would keep requirements in the humanities and sciences the same for the bachelor of arts (B.A.) and bachelor of science (B.S.) degrees, and the B.A. would still be distinguished from the B.S. by requiring four language courses and one math course, the proposal would require new additions.

If the proposal is approved, students wanting to complete a B.S. will be required to take four courses in math, statistics, computer science, accounting and-or symbolic logic, said Arthur Dayton, head of the Department of Statistics.

Another proposed change in the B.A. and B.S. degrees would require two courses in international studies. This requirement could be fulfilled, however, with required courses in humanities and sciences, he said.

An open faculty meeting to discuss the proposal will be from 3:30 to 5 p.m. today in Ackert 120. No votes will be taken on the draft, which, when finalized will go to the Course and Curriculum Committee for revision and approval on March 20.

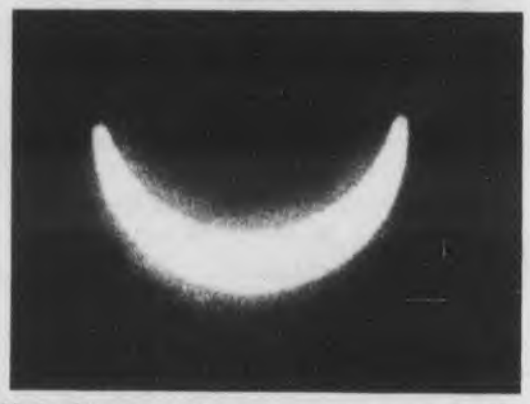
Vietnam holds ground against Chinese attack

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—Vietnamese troops defending the Red River valley corridor to Hanoi held their ground Monday against a three-pronged Chinese armored and infantry attack, Hanoi radio said.

It claimed Peking's soldiers were being killed at a rate of 800 a day all along the border front lines.

China's Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping said Monday the 10-day-old conflict might end within 10 days, but analysts in Bangkok and elsewhere expect the Chinese invasion force to first mount an all-out assault against Hanoi's troops.

The official Soviet news media charged that China was massing troops near its border with Laos for an invasion of that Vietnamese-dominated country. The report could not be confirmed.



In a speech in the western Russian city of Minsk, Soviet Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko reiterated the Kremlin warning to China to pull out of Soviet-allied Vietnam "before it is too late." He said the invasion was "doomed to failure."

A Soviet airlift of military supplies to Hanoi appeared to be continuing. Airport sources in Calcutta, India, said three cargo planes—one Bulgarian and two Soviet—refueled there Sunday and Monday on their way to the Vietnamese capital.

A Voice of Vietnam radio broadcast monitored here claimed Hanoi's troops had killed more than 2,300 Chinese in fighting since Friday at scattered battlefields along the front.

New trial sought in kidnap case

A motion for a new trial for convicted kidnapper Darwin May was filed Friday in Riley County District Court.

May was found guilty Feb. 16 of the Oct. 4 kidnapping of 5-year-old Gary Thomason, Manhattan. Two others, Stephan Werle, 21, of Junction City and Marlon Holum, 21, a Fort Riley deserter, pleaded guilty to the charges before May's trial.

Defense attorney Jim Morrision pointed out what he believed were several court errors in the conduct of the trial.

The court erred in excluding the defendant from participation in motions to supress evidence based upon the illegality of the arrest of a co-defendent (Holum)," Morrison said in his motion.

Morrision contended, as did Holum's and Werle's attorneys in pre-trial motions, that the confessions by Holum and Werle were inadmissible because they were arrested illegally. He said the confessions were part of the "fruit-of-the-poisonous tree" which says any evidence obtained after an illegal procedure is tainted and inadmissible.

District Court Judge Jerry Mershon rejected those motions during the pre-trial motions, ruling the arrest procedures were correct.

MORRISON ALSO said in the motion that the court failed to provide the jury with the option of handing down a verdict for the lesser charge of unlawful restraint, which carries a lower penalty.

Other points filed by Morrion include:

—failure of May to receive a fair trial because a change of venue (changing the location of a trial beccause of possible prejudice) motion was denied.

—insufficient evidence existed for the jury to reach a verdict.

—the failure of the court to demand a Bill of Particulars (stating the specific acts constituting the crime for which a defendant is tried) for May.

—the court's error in "allowing the State (prosecution) to endorse additional witnesses immediately prior to trial."

The motions will be reviewed March 9 in Riley County District Court.

Robbers beat up students; unidentified men take $300

By HARVEY PERRITT
City Editor

Police are investigating an incident in southwestern Manhattan where three males in their early 20s kicked in the back door of an apartment and attacked two K-State students Sunday night.

The three, dressed in short, blue coats, were armed with a revolver and a shotgun, according to one of three students in the apartment, who asked not to be identified. One was wearing a multi-colored stocking cap, police said.

"They hit my roommate in the kitchen in the face with the butt of the pistol. He fell, and they hit him in the face again," the student said. "Then they went into the living room and kicked my other roommate in the face."

He said the man with the shotgun told them the guns were loaded and to lie on the floor.

"Then they went through the house," he said. "The one with the shotgun told us to empty our wallets."

According to police, about $300 was taken in the robbery. No description of the getaway vehicle was available.

Islamic revolutionaries arrest American

TEHRAN, Iran—Islamic revolutionaries arrested an American, a Belgian and two Britons employed by an oil drilling company, a company spokesman reported. British officials said the men were questioned and then released.

Sources said the four were trying to flee Iran. There were few details about the arrests. The American Embassy said it knew nothing of the matter and spokesmen of Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini declined comment.

A spokesman for California-based Fluor Co., the drilling firm, identified the American as John Cassiba and the Britons as W. Walsh, K. Thompson and P. Dtrez. No hometowns were available. The four were employed in the southern city of Aghajari.

Hassan Nazih, new director of the National Iranian Oil Co., said, meanwhile, that Iran would resume oil exports next week. He did not say exactly when or in what amounts.

Nazih notified oil workers in Abadan of the resumption of exports and said the production and export politics "will be based entirely on Iran's national interests and we shall never accept colonially imposed agreements."

At present Iran is producing about 700,000 barrels a day to meet domestic requirements.

Senate OKs Woodcock ambassadorship

WASHINGTON—The Senate voted overwhelmingly Monday to confirm Leonard Woodcock as President Carter's choice to become the first U.S. ambassador to mainland China since 1949.

The 82-9 vote followed a brief, unsuccessful floor protest organized by Senate Republicans against Carter's China policies.

Woodcock is to be installed Thursday in Peking, where he has headed the U.S. liaison mission for the past two years. There had been some speculation Senate conservatives might try to block a vote.

But after a few hours Monday it became clear there was insufficient support to use the nomination as a vehicle for sustained opposition to Carter's shift in policy.

Liberal pancakes outstack Mardi Gras

LIBERAL—The Mardi Gras may be off in New Orleans, but it's business as usual for the 30th annual International Pancake Race between the women of Liberal and Olney, England.

Fifteen apron-clad housewives will dash over a 415-yard, S-shaped course this morning in this southwest Kansas community, flipping pancakes in an effort to beat the best time recorded by their English counterparts.

The pancake race has been run in Olney every Shrove Tuesday since 1445, according to legend. Liberal joined the competition in 1950, and since then Kansans have built an 18-11 edge.

Last year, Stephanie Wagner, a 18-year-old student at Seward County Community College, won the race in 59.5 seconds. The Olney winner, 24-year-old June Statham, had a time of 64.0 seconds.

China invasion not 'that big an issue'

PEKING—A Chinese official told American reporters Monday that China's invasion of Vietnam is not "that big an issue," and he indicated Peking's leaders are not concerned about U.S. criticism of their actions.

"We don't force our views on anyone else," the official said, adding that Vietnam still must be dealt "some blows" before the fighting can end.

The official spoke with the reporters—who are accompanying Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal on his current visit to China—on the condition that his name not be used.

There were signs Monday that Chinese leaders were annoyed by Blumenthal's banquet toast Sunday describing China as the "transgressor" in the Indochina war and warning that it could hinder the growth of U.S.-Chinese relations and risk a wider conflict. This "message" to the Chinese was said to have had President Carter's endorsement.

A senior U.S. official said that during Blumenthal's meetings with Chinese officials on economic matters Monday, "I did not hear a single reference to the toast last night."

Another indication of Chinese pique may be the apparent lack of participation by top Peking officials in the formal opening ceremony of the U.S. Embassy here Thursday.

Weather

Good morning. There's only nine more school days until spring break. For those who'll trek to Padre Island or Fort Lauderdale, you'll have to start your tans with sun lamps. Indoor tanning treatments should start soon because cloudy skies will shut out Manhattan's sunshine beginning today. There's a chance of afternoon showers today with high temperatures in the upper 40s to low 50s. Showers are likely tonight with lows in the upper 30s. There will be a chance of rain or snow Wednesday with highs in the upper 30s to low 40s.

Drinking—a matter of individual choice

Instead of collapsing in a drunken stupor after the recent Kansas Supreme Court decision, liquor-by-the-drink is just having one for the road—a road that should lead to a constitutional amendment.

When 15 counties approve a measure allowing alcoholic beverages in restaurants, there can be no doubt that many support liquor-by-the-drink.

But, the Kansas Supreme Court, in a 4-3 vote, gave the bill its final belt by declaring the measure unconstitutional under Article 15 Section 10 which prohibits open saloons.

The dry forces celebrated the decision, without realizing it would probably lead to a proposed constitutional amendment.

Why all this interest in liquor-by-the-drink when everyone knows they can get a drink by joining a private club?

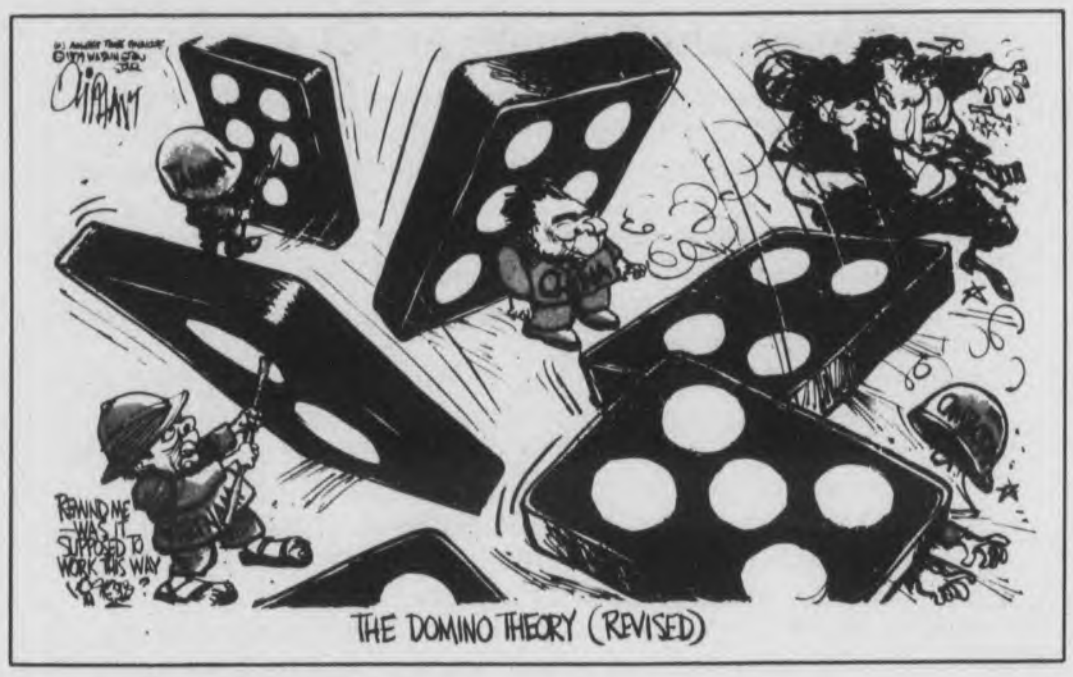
To begin with, Kansas liquor laws are extremely hypocritical.

If the intention and desire of most Kansans is to prevent liquor consumption, then liquor should be outlawed. If Kansans want to drink, then why have pharisee laws which allow liquor-by-the-drink to members of private clubs?

The only word for Kansas liquor laws is stupid.

There is no reason for the law as it stands; it serves no purpose; it doesn't keep drunks off the road; it doesn't keep Kansans from drinking; it doesn't prevent alcoholism—about all it does is let some believe Kansas is a morally superior state.

The adoption of liquor-by-the-drink wouldn't neccessarily contribute to traffic fatalities, alcoholism or increase alcohol consumption. Virginia, which allowed liquor-by-the-drink in restaurants 10 years ago, has a lower per capita alcohol consumption today than it did 30 years ago.



It wouldn't increase alcohol-related accidents; current laws make it possible for many to drink and drive.

The puritanical idea that drinking is sinful remains, but this is the 20th century, and most people drink occasionally. (Besides, according to the Bible, Jesus drank wine.)

Having liquor-by-the-drink wouldn't force those who don't want to drink, to drink; it would just make it possible for those who want a glass of wine with dinner to have one.

It isn't anybody's business whether an adult choses to drink or not, including the government.

THE DOMINO THEORY (REVISED)

Mike Ream

Fight for U.S.— if necessary

Stand at attention citizens, it looks as if another world war could be just around the corner. But will the nation's security be at stake?

It was pretty sneaky of China to "normalize" relations with us only one week before it decided to start a war. I smell a rat in the woodwork.

If China's offensive continues and Russia decides to protect Vietnam, where will that put the good old U.S. of A.?

China has already negotiated contracts with Boeing to build planes. You don't think China would use these planes for war, do you? That would sort of put the United States on the Chinese side. That's an easy way to start World War III if you ask me.

The American patriots may again be called to defend the world from the spread of communism. But where has the American patriot gone these days?

I see some Vietnam veterans still without jobs and still looking for the self-respect they had before they went overseas to fight a war which the American people entirely supported (?).

I THINK the American patriots would rather fight for what is ours, the land we've grown up on, the cities we live in, the inflation we gripe about.

The armed forces are certainly hurting for good manpower to fuel any national defense effort. The forces are trying to persuade "good" men and women to experience the pride of service.

But how may young people are fooled by the smiling face and the clapping hands of a soldier doing double time in formation—we'd all like to be in his shoes, right?

We're already getting the education of our lives in college and even it's not all fun and games. Who would believe the Army is really as much fun as commercials make you think it is? What ever happened to boot camp?

Granted, the benefits for joining the service are the best they've ever been. The pay is good, a college education can be paid for and loans on the GI bill have about the lowest interest rates to be found in the country.

SO WHY IS the quantity and quality of the service at its worst?

Perhaps the aftermath of a war where our country was humiliated by another country 1½ times the size of Kansas has something to do with the lack of pride in our military strength.

Maybe we've decided not to spread our economic wealth throughout the world, and the inflation that goes with it.

If we must fight another war, let's make it one that truly has meaning for the American people, not politicians. Let's fight a war that will reunite our people for a common cause just as the first two world wars did.

Allow us the pride and confidence in our forces who would give their lives to preserve what Americans believe in.

Webster defines patriot as one who loves his (her) country and zealously supports its authority and interest.

Let this definition be the guideline for any person who must be called to our defense, not another country's offense.

Let us defend our borders, our interests, our people for a change.

Denies making statements

EDITOR'S NOTE: the reporter's notes include the statements published in the story.

Editor,

Wow! I've often heard of misquotes by Collegian reporters, but I have never experienced the agony of being misquoted myself until today.

In Bill Lippold's article "Old buildings culprits in K-State energy waste" I was quoted as saying:

"The front doors doors of Fairchild have no weatherstripping and neither do the windows. There must be a square foot of open space around those doors."

In actuality, I said, "there was over half a square foot of open space between the outside doors;" I did NOT say that the windows have no weatherstripping.

As any fool who looks can plainly see (I would presume that this would apply to Collegian reporters also) the windows DO have weatherstripping! (As a matter of fact, I watched my office windows being weatherstripped when it was done several years ago—1977, I think.)

Please correct this injustice before some "higher-ups" in the administration decide to roll my head through this "square foot" of open space!

Joy cried for and remembered

EDITOR'S NOTE: Joy Balderson was a K-State student who died on Feb. 16.

Editor

I have been raised in a creative environment, and I always thought I had an open mind and a keen awareness to what went on around me and affected me. Throughout my college career, I developed many friends, and came to know my classmates with a private perspective on their lives. I took for granted all the things that I now realize were most important to me.

Joy Balderson died, and I cry real tears for her now. And I cry real tears for myself now.

I am a critical person. I am critical of qualities in people that don't agree with standards that I've set for myself. I think of Joy at the time she was at her worst, and I cannot be critical of her at all. She was warm of heart, full of compassion, and individual as humans are. She affected my life and I respect her.

And now she is no longer there. I can't share my laughter with her, I can't share a good morning with her, and I can't share my life with her.

I've lost her as a friend, possibly, but Joy Balderson will always be an inspiration to me.

Commission wants facilities for Riley County expansion

By JOE LIENEMANN
Collegian Reporter

In a special County Commission meeting Monday, the commissioners agreed additional industrial facilites are needed in Riley County, including an industrial park or individual sites for industry or a combination of both.

Jerry Butler was named chairman for the Riley County Industrial Development and Land Use Action Committee. Also elected to the committee were Jim Rothschild as vice chairman and Marty Hardy as reporting secretary.

"The report which the committee is to present to use in 90 days should include information which will indicate the need for expanded industrial development," Darrell Westervelt, commission chairman, said.

If the findings by the committee are positive and the Commission approves, the commission should take advantage right away and get going instead of waiting a year, he said.

The inventory of positive attractions for industry already existing in the community should be included in this report. Westervelt said.

"The Chamber of Commerce and the K-State business administration group are already studying this and should be a big help in this area," he said.

OTHER ITEMS which are to be included in the report to the Commission are the identification of factors that are needed for the community to attract industry, the types of industry the committee feels would be desirable to the community and an inventory of available industrial sites in Riley County, Westervelt said.

"We also want an inventory of potential sites and we want to rank these sites according to their suitability," Westervelt said.

The rankings would include transportation, soil conditions and drainage, the amount of land available, the adjacent land uses and the availability of utilites, he said.

"We encourage the committee to add anything which they feel would benefit our plans of attracting industry," County Commissiner Rosy Rieger said.

Butler said the committee should get busy immediatley because 90 days is not that much time.

"I think everyone knows that the University and Fort Riley are two big industries for our community, and if growth comes to a halt, there would be a definite downswing in financial growth in Riley County," Butler said.

City to discuss Aggieville parking

Aggieville parking tops the agenda for the Manhattan City Commission meeting tonight as commissioners will decide whether to continue with condemnation of the property adjacent to the parking lot south of the Campus Theater.

The city recently acquired the lot behind the theater and intends to put in parking meters, City Manager Don Harmon said.

The city, however, may have to delete the adjacent property, a gas station at Manhattan Avenue and Laramie Street, from its plan because of increased land costs, Harmon said during a press conference Monday.

"There's no way to know what juries are going to give (in land costs)," Harmon said. The city has budgeted around $500,000 for the entire parking lot project in Aggieville, and the land costs of the property adjacent to the theater lot are around $400,000, he said.

The property is "not crucial, but desirable," Harmon said.

THE CITY owns two other lots in Aggieville, one on the northwest corner of 12th and Laramie Streets and another at 11th and Moro Streets. Part of the money budgeted is for general improvement on all lots, Harmon said.

Harmon also discussed the combining of Union Pacific (Amtrak) and Rock Island railroad service to Manhattan. He said the city will get additional information from Union Pacific on a switching system this week. The proposed switching system will make it possible for both railroads to use existing tracks.

"It's pretty certain the state will fund construction of the switching system," Harmon said.

AAM farmers protest by 'spreading a little bull'

Farmers of the American Agriculture Movement (AAM) spread a little bull at the Farm Bureau office in Meade County as another group barricaded the doors of the Agricultural Stabiliztion and Conservation Services (ASCS) office in Graham County in a protest last Thursday.

Irene LeMaster, secretary at the Meade office said, "I went outside when I saw what they were doing. They backed the manure spreader up to the back door and sprinkled a little manure."

Gordon Hibbard, director of communications at the state Farm Bureau office, said 30 members came into the Meade office. They expressed their displeasure with the Farm Bureau Federation, but didn't have anything against the Kansas Farm Bureau.

The AAM is protesting the Farm Bureau's refusal to endorse the AAM farm strike.

Dan Kissner, a spokesman for the farmers, said they would return home with their tractors but would leave the manure spreader and other implements outside the Meade County ACSC office until the AAM ends its demonstration in Washington D.C.

Another group of farmers barricaded the doors of the ASCS office in Graham county until a letter of protest was sent by telephone to the state office. The farmers also went to the Farm Bureau office in Graham County, but didn't barricade any doors, Hibbard said.

'Cats open tourney with Nebraska tonight

The record will show that K-State has only lost two in a row, but in effect, the Wildcats have sustained three losses in a week—the loss to Missouri, the loss to Oklahoma, and the loss in the draw Saturday night for postseason tournament pairings.

Sports

Missouri, Kansas and K-State finished their regular Big 8 seasons with 8-6 records, good enough for second place behind Oklahoma. In the draw to determine pairings, Missouri was drawn first, then KU, then the Wildcats.

So, Missouri plays seventh-place Oklahoma State tonight, KU plays sixth-place Iowa State and K-State plays fifth-place Nebraska (7-7) tonight in Ahearn Field House.

The K-State-Nebraska winner plays in Kansas City Friday night against the winner of tonight's Oklahoma-Colorado game.

Tonight's game will be the third meeting this year between Nebraska and K-State. Nebraska won in Lincoln 55-53, and K-State won in Manhattan, 58-46.

ROLANDO BLACKMAN, K-State's leading scorer at 17.2 points a game, led the 'Cats in both earlier Nebraska games. He had 16 points in Lincoln and 22 in Manhattan.

Carl McPipe is averaging 17 points and 10 rebounds per game. The Wildcats, however, held the 6-8 center to 13 points on six for 14 shooting in the Feb. 7 game in Manhattan.

Grant Sanborn

The jock who never was

I have never been inclined toward the phenomenon of athletics. It isn't my fault. I just don't like getting my body pulverized.

I used to play little league baseball. I was pretty good, too. I pitched a game once, but after I walked four batters in a row, the catcher got mad and threw the ball (with amazing accuracy) into my solar plexus. My baseball days were through at the moment of impact.

Later, in high school gym class, I was coerced into playing softball. Those balls are in no way soft, by the way. I managed to get a double, but as I was sliding into third, (a stupid move I can only attribute to glory-seeking) the third baseman stepped on my left hand while tagging me "out." He dislocated 11 of the 14 knuckles on the hand and broke my wrist.

SPORTS was where all the pretty girls could be found, so I decided to try out for the basketball team. I wasn't bad, either. However, at this time I was pretty tall for my age, and the coach kept telling me to stay under the basket and jump for rebounds. I couldn't really understand this, because I was shooting a whopping four percent from the field. After two broken pairs of glasses, a jammed thumb, and two bruised knee caps, I decided that the coach could cut me from the team if he wished to do so. He did.

Remembering the song, "You have to be a football hero," I decided I would attend a football practice. After hearing all the bones crack, the players groan, and the coach yell, I decided I would let the fellows whose knuckles touched the ground when they stood up straight be the heros.

Maybe track was my niche. I tried out for the high jump. Always one to take things literally, I went out and got high before practice. In my first jump, I broke two bones but I didn't feel it until later that day. The coach said I couldn't do much high jumping in a hip-high cast.

WEIGHT LIFTING sounded attractive. Perhaps if I had all those rippling muscles, the females would flock to my side. I quickly found that the only female at my side was a ugly old nurse tending stitches from my hernia operation. I think I had a transplant.

Finally, I tried auto racing. This didn't work well at all. The judge told me the fine was $140 for going 110 mph in a 40 mph zone. I was too broke to race anymore.

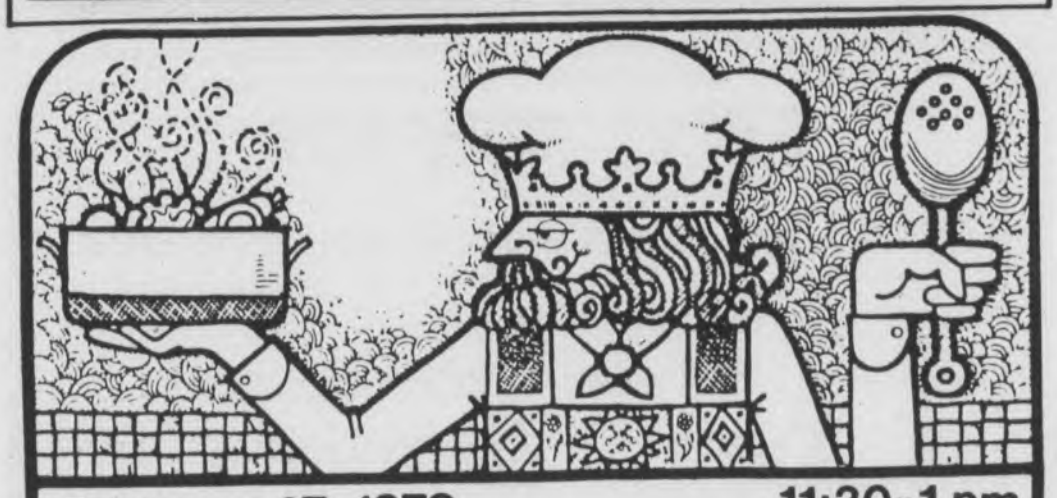
So, there is the life of a jock who never was. Now, whenever I get the urge to exercise, I just lie down with a bag of potato chips and a can of beer until the urge goes away.

Weightlifters take first

Three members of the K-State Weightlifting Club took first place Sunday at the St. Joseph Open in St. Joseph, Mo.

Ray Bradley won the super heavyweight division with a 242-lb. snatch and a 341-lb. clean-and-jerk.

Darryll Bennett took first in the 165-lb. class with a 200-lb. snatch and a 242-lb. clean-and-jerk.



Kevin Fulton won the 198-lb. division with a 159-lb. snatch and a 215-lb. clean-and-jerk.

...'Cats win trip to regional

LeAnn Wilcox's shot with one second left gave the K-State women's basketball team a 92-91 double overtime victory over the University of Kansas last night in Lawrence.

The victory over the 17th-ranked Lady Jayhawks gave the Wildcats a 4-0 record in the conference, consisting of K-State, KU and Wichita State. The 'Cats won the conference and secured a berth in the AIAW regional in Minneapolis, Minn. March 9.

Wilcox led the way for the Wildcats, scoring 29 points. Freshman Tammie Romstad had her career high 22 points and 14 rebounds.

KU blew its chance with 11 seconds left, when K-State's Jeanne Daniels fouled out. The Jayhawks' Kathy Patterson missed the front end of a one-and-one and the 'Cats won the game on Wilcox's shot.

KU led by 10 points with only seven minutes left in the game.

"We tried to mix up the defense," Coach Judy Akers said. "We went into a player (man-to-man) and then a zone trap. They were trying to protect their lead, so we tried to rush them."

After leading 3-0, the 'Cats trailed the rest of the way until tying the game to send it into overtime.

THE LADY JAYHAWKS, playing in front of the largest women's basketball crowd ever in Allen Fieldhouse (1,900) were led by Lynette Woodard's 43 points and 24 rebounds.

"I can't give our kids enough credit," Akers said.

Tickets still available

Student and public tickets are still available for tonight's K-State-Nebraska basketball game in Ahearn Field House.

The $2 student tickets and $5.15 public tickets are on sale at the Athletic Ticket Office in Ahearn.

K-State Union won't be getting a break this spring as about 900 people are expected to participate in the 10th annual Labash convention March 15 through 18.

"Labash gives students from the United States and Canada an opportunity to get together and share in the educational approaches of landscape architecture," said Brian Winterowd, senior in landscape architecture and coordinator of the convention.

"The students attending will get a closer look at the broadening employment opportunities in the field of landscape architecture," he said.

"The speakers represent the major body of the conference, sharing with the students their areas of expertise," Winterowd said.

There will be a $30 registration fee for students and a $50 fee for faculty and professionals. Registration will be from noon to 10:30 p.m. Thursday March 15, and from 8 a.m. to noon Friday, March 16.

To start off the convention, the Jazz 1 Lab Band will be playing at 12:30 p.m. Thursday March 16, in the Union Courtyard.

Zoo admission fee wanted by lobbyists

Free observational safaris at Sunset Zoo may cease if a Manhattan lobbying group has its way.

Because of funding problems, the Organization for Gate Receipt Enactment is lobbying for an admission fee at the zoo, according to Tam Lipps, member of the group and vice president for Friends of Sunset Zoo.

The lobbying group is an offshoot of Friends of Sunset Zoo which had considered publicly supporting a gate receipt until the City Commission responded negatively to the idea, Lipps said.

The group has polled 190 people by telephone and has just begun a door-to-door survey, she said. The majority of people polled did not object to an admission fee, she said.

The group also is lobbying student organizations such as Student Senate for their support of an admission charge.

ADMISSION fees recommended by the group are: $1 for adults, 75 cents for students (It hasn't been determined whether K-State students would pay the student or adult fee.) and 50 cents for children between 6 and 12.

Senior citizens, children under 6 and members of Friends of Sunset Zoo would be admitted free.

Money from the gate receipts, estimated between $25,000 and $50,000, would be put into capital improvements under the group's plan, Lipps said.

"We expect the city government to continue its support at its present level," she said.

Sunset Zoo is one of the few zoos in the United States that doesn't charge for admission, Lipps said.

Of the 200 zoos across the country, more than 130 charge admission fees, Lipps said. Those that don't charge admittance fees often have alternative funding, such as fees for recreational facilities within the zoo, parking and private donations, she added.

"The zoo shouldn't have to go begging," Lipps said. The admission fee would be a way to improve the zoo without raising taxes or taking money from other parks, she said.

City officials estimate that 100,000 people visit the zoo annually, Lipps said, making it the most popular recreational facility in Manhattan.

Push for stalled negotiations

Carter, Begin to talk peace—again

WASHINGTON (AP)—President Carter said Tuesday that Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin has decided to come here for "a frank discussion of all the issues" in the stalled peace treaty talks.

Carter told a news conference that after he sees Begin, who is due here Thursday evening, he will consider asking Egyptian President Anwar Sadat or Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil here as well.

The announcement followed Begin's refusal to attend a Camp David summit with Carter and Khalil. The Israeli Cabinet turned down that invitation on a 14-2 vote.

Carter said he talked by telephone after the Cabinet action with both Begin and Sadat. He stressed the importance of completing a treaty and that he hoped his talks with Begin would lead to an early resumption of negotiations.

Earlier, an Israeli official said Begin refused to attend the talks because Sadat decided not to participate and Egypt had hardened its bargaining position.

Carter expressed regret about the Israeli Cabinet decision. He said he was concerned about the impact on peace prospects.

At the same time, Carter said Egyptian and Israeli delegations meeting at Camp David last week with Secretary of State Cyrus Vance had demonstrated they shared the view that wrapping up a treaty was an urgent necessity.

THE ORIGINAL arrangement for the negotiations at Camp David called Khalil to deal with the details, Naftali Lavi, an adviser to Israeli Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan, told The Associated Press.

However, Lavi said, the intention was for Sadat to be at the Maryland mountain retreat prepared to initial treaty terms if compromises could be struck on the Palestinians and other issues.

But as U.S., Egyptian and Israeli officials discussed the arrangements last week at Camp David, Sadat's participation became increasingly doubtful, Lavi said.

Several Israeli ministers reportedly were unhappy that Sadat picked Khalil to negotiate for him, but no mention of that was in the Cabinet statement read by a somber-faced Begin.

Begin later said the Sadat-Khalil controversy was "an issue" but not the decisive factor in the Cabinet decision. "I would forego this issue of prestige for the sake of peace," he said.

THE CABINET statement said five days of ministerial-level talks at Camp David last week produced "no progress" and that Khalil made new proposals that "nullify the meaning of a peace treaty."

Insiders said Begin argued at the six-hour Cabinet meeting that the Egyptian stand made a summit pointless. They said that only Dayan and Defense Minister Ezer Weizman favored the invitation. Fourteen members, including Begin, voted against it.

"The Cabinet decided that the prime minister is not in a position to accept the proposed meeting with Dr. Khalil," Begin told a throng of reporters.

"It is now evident to the Cabinet that in those talks no progress was made...," Begin said. "On the contrary a more extreme position was presented by the Egyptian delegation."

The Cabinet said Begin would meet Carter "at any time" to discuss issues blocking an agreement or U.S.-Israeli problems.

Later, after Begin met with Sen. Lowell Weicker, (R-Conn.) Begin said, "There will be a next step. Believe me, there will be peace."

Israeli officials said the next move must come from Washington, but said it was difficult to see how the stalemate could be broken.

The armed forces radio, however, quoted unidentified Cabinet officers as saying they believed the decision would force Egypt to back down on some of its demands.

Original Flint staff quits paper; owner says flavor will remain

By SCOTT STUCKEY
News Editor

K-State students, soldiers at Ft. Riley and Kansans in 20 other communities have looked to Flint magazine the past two years as an alternative to the hard news approach of the "establishment press."

But because of financial problems and internal conflicts at Flint, the weekly publication's editorial staff resigned this week after publishing the Feb. 28 issue.

Flint will not be published next week, but will resume in two weeks with a new editor and staff, according to Steve Benz, Flint's owner since August.

"I don't anticipate too much of a change," Benz said. "We will still emphasize the flint hills and the people who live there.

"I don't know why the staff has quit," he said. "I suppose it's a disagreement on financial matters."

"We will keep the human interest stories, but we want to add more investigative and in-depth stories," Kathryn Blesener, new Flint editor, said. Blesener said a news style of writing will be used more in Flint.

FLINT WILL still be distributed free in the same communities, but it may begin paying writers and photographers who contribute to the publication, she said.

"It definitely will not be a 'shopper,'" Blesener said. "We will try to keep the same ratio between stories and advertising."

Manhattan's economic condition is the root of Flint's financial problems, said Roy Krantz, Flint's editor since its inception in September 1976.

"In recessionary periods, large papers survive and small papers suffer," Krantz said. "Advertisers stick to the more traditional publications.

"Flint was not as easy to sell as the Mercury or the Collegian," he said. "With Flint, you also had to sell a concept.

"Our immediate problem is that people aren't paying their bills to us. We are owed more than we owe," he said.

FLINT LOST one of its major distribution points about two weeks ago when the Dillon grocery stores decided to enforce a policy banning free literature. Krantz said Flint's distribution racks were removed from the store.

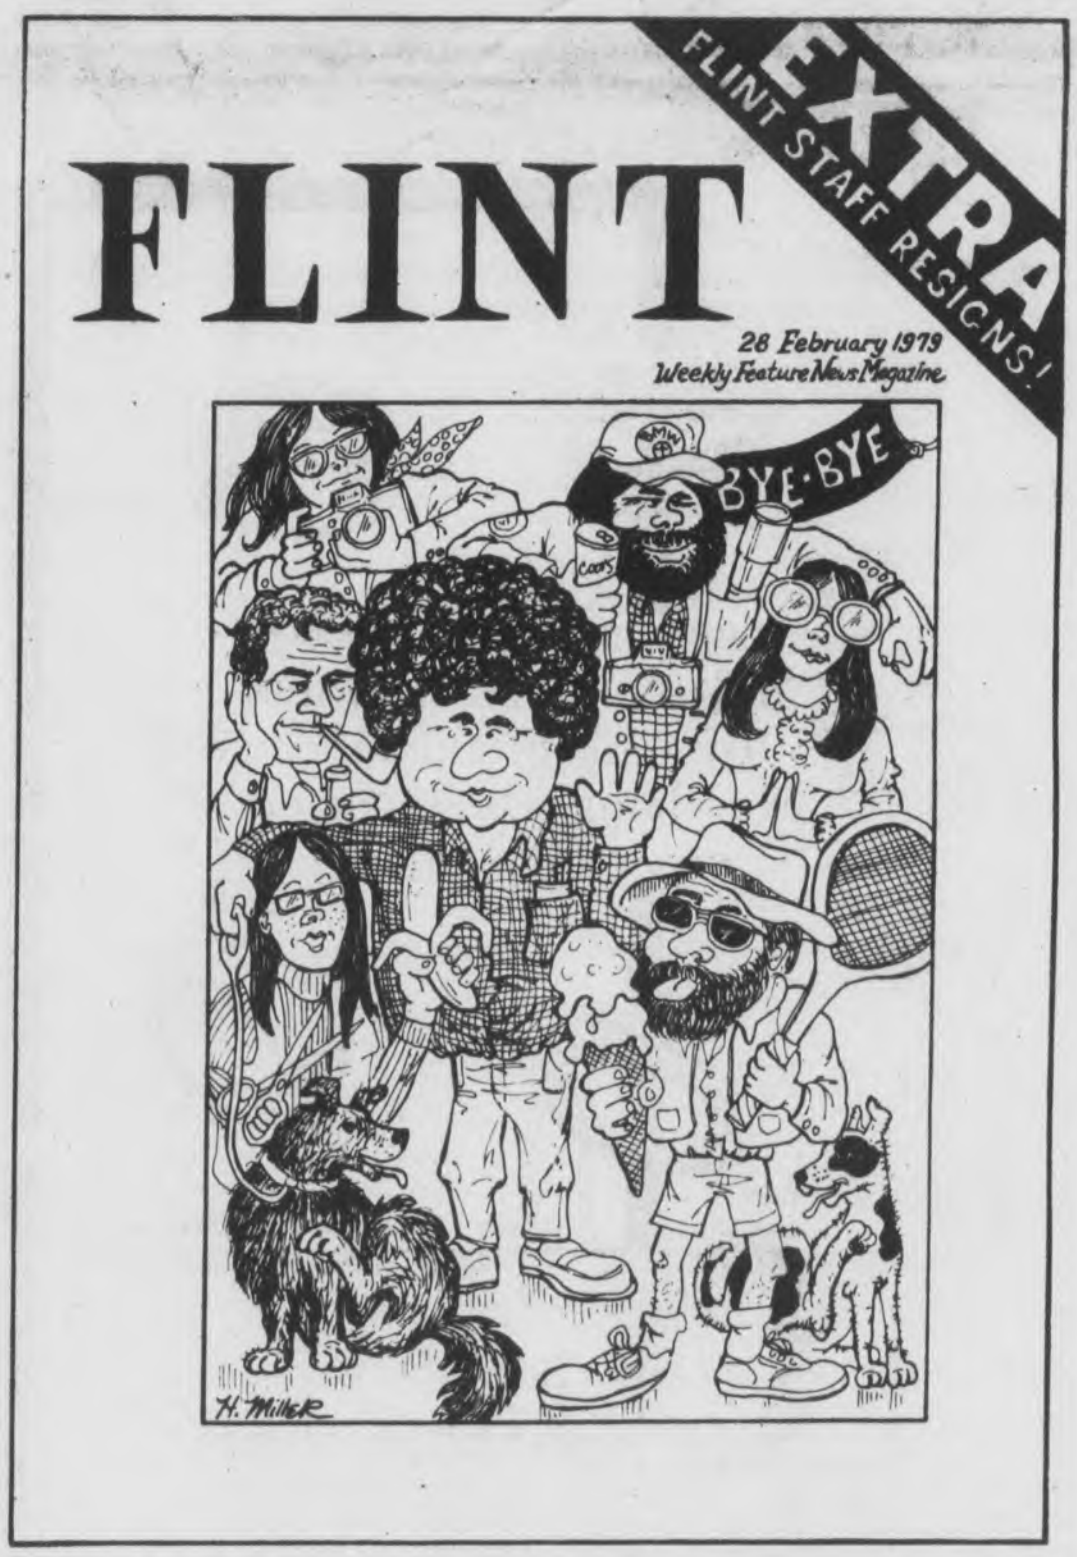
"Grocery stores used to be general stores and community stores," he said. "Now you can't give anything away free."

Krantz said it takes $800 to $1,000 to put out each issue of Flint. He said he has had to assume several loans for Flint and he can no longer make a living working for the publication.

"I'm tired of telling people on the phone that there's no money," he said. "I'm tired of not having money to live on.

"I have to pay the bank $600 a month, but I only take home $440 from Flint," he said.

KRANTZ SAID he's had to work 60 to 80 hours each week and is tired of spending so much of that time selling advertisements.



"I don't like spending more time selling ads and fighting creditors than being an editor," he said. "All Flint has needed for a year now is a professional advertising coordinator."

Flint has been a full-time endeavor for Krantz since it began as a University for Man class project on alternative publications.

Krantz said he tried to create a publication that would reflect the richness of life in the Kansas flint hills and that would cause readers to question their values.

"We wanted to give people of the flint hills their own voice," he said. "We would print whatever was on their minds. We wanted to prove that art could pay."

"I'm going to start making phone calls and try to find enough money to start over again," he said. "I really like this town, and I don't want to leave."

City to condemn land for Aggieville parking

Aggieville's shortage of parking drew the City Commission's attention in last night's special session

The commission passed a resolution increasing appropriations to allow for the purchase of property in Aggieville for a parking project.

The increased appropriation is necessary for the purchase of land located at the corner of Manhattan Avenue and Laramie Street occupied by a service station owned by the Griffith Oil Company.

According to William Frost, city attorney, the city of Manhattan must file a motion before Friday to begin condemnation procedures.

The original appropriation will be increased by $75,594 to allow the city enough money to buy the land and pay $1,150 in court costs for the condemnation filing, Frost said.

The total approximate amount appropriated for the project is $630,000, according to City Manager Don Harmon.

After the petition for condemnation is filed, the owner has 20 days to answer the petition and file a protest which will result in a public hearing on the issue.

Student rams tree with four-wheeler

A K-State student escaped injury and a Manhattan man was slightly injured early Tuesday morning when the four-wheel-drive vehicle they were riding in rammed into a tree at 14th and Humboldt Streets.

Eric Johnson, sophomore in general, skidded more than 200 feet in his four-wheeler, jumped the curb and slammed into a tree on the edge of City Park at about 12:45 a.m. Tuesday.

He was not injured, police said, but a passenger, Curtis Aimsworth, 2468 Vaughn, was transported to St. Mary Hospital where he was treated and released.

According to a statement to police, Johnson said he was heading south on 14th Street when he swerved to avoid an animal in the road. He said he was traveling less than 30 miles per hour.

But investigating officers said, because of the length of the skids and the amount of damage, the vehicle was traveling faster than 40 miles per hour.

The blue four-wheeler struck the tree broadside and crushed the right side of the vehicle near the passenger seat. The base of the tree was split by the impact.

Bill offers support to K-State Union

The K-State Union will receive $20,000 from the state government if a bill passed by the House Ways and Means Committee is approved by the House and Senate.

The panel voted Monday to appropriate $102,000 to student unions at schools under the Board of Regents. Under the plan, K-State and the University of Kansas would each receive $20,000; Wichita State, Pittsburg State and Fort Hays State would each receive $17,500; and $10,000 would be given to the student union at Emporia State University.

The money is being appropriated as rental on classroom space in the unions. It would be the first time the state has given money to student unions.

The amount of money to give each student union was decided by the amount requested, the current and projected enrollments and the amount of time the unions are used by non-students.

While K-State's union is larger than KU's, KU's union is used by more non-students, which is why it would receive the same amount as K-State, according to Rep. Mike Hayden (R-Atwood), chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee. Located closer to Kansas City, which would give it the possibility of being used by more non-student groups was another reason for the money.

The committee appropriated half of the amount Gov. John Carlin requested in his budget and the amount the unions had requested.

Carter 'asks' for Chinese withdrawal

BANGKOK, Thailand—China reported Tuesday that Vietnamese troops launched several counter-invasions into Chinese territory in the previous few days, but were driven back each time.

Intelligence sources here said China appears to show no intention of withdrawing from Vietnam and has even moved to reinforce its troops along Vietnam's northeastern front, where some of the Vietnamese incursions reportedly took place.

In his bluntest comment on the 10-day conflict, President Carter asked China on Tuesday to undertake "a speedy withdrawal" from Vietnam. The request was in a message given to top Chinese leaders by Treasury Secretary Michael Blumenthal, who is visiting Peking.

In Washington, Carter said at a news conference that he has made known to the Chinese his "firm disapproval" of their invasion but said it would be counterproductive to terminate the newfound bilateral relations with Peking.

The Vietnamese, meanwhile, claimed that they wiped out 2,200 Chinese soldiers in four days, 800 of them Monday in clashes along the northeastern coastal front.

Administration fuels gas rationing

WASHINGTON—President Carter revealed a standby gasoline rationing plan Tuesday as a last-resort emergency measure. But he said he has no plans to put that or other fuel-saving actions into immediate effect.

The fuel conservation plan made public by the Energy Department proposes to ration gasoline by mailing to gasoline allotment "checks" to owners of registered vehicles. These could then be "cashed in" for ration coupons at banks or other institutions.

The proposal is to be formally submitted Thursday to Congress, which then has 60 days to approve or disapprove it. The plan could not take effect unless the president declared a national energy emergency and won approval of its implementation by both the House and Senate.

The plan assigns no specific amounts. This determination would be made when necessary, depending on the available gasoline supply and the best current estimates of vehicle consumption.

Besides the gasoline rationing plan, the proposal includes provisions for fuel-saving actions such as restricting gasoline sales on weekends, restricting temperatures in commercial and public buildings and by restricting unnecessary advertising lighting.

Olney hot foots to hot cake title

LIBERAL—Barbara McWilliams, a 29-year-old mother of two children, dashed the Liberal International Pancake Race route in 63.4 seconds Tuesday, but it wasn't fast enough to stop Olney, England, from winning its first race in 10 years.

Earlier Tuesday, 19-year-old Julie Perks managed to get around the 415-yard, S-shaped Olney course in the traditional Shrove Tuesday competition in 63 seconds flat.

The pancake race has been run in Olney every Shrove Tuesday since 1445, according to legend, and since 1950 it has been a trans-Atlantic contest.

Police give ultimatum to farmers

WASHINGTON—Police gave protesting farmers a midnight tonight deadline for most of them to vacate the Mall where they have been camped for three weeks.

Following an afternoon negotiating session, police officials said Tuesday that 50 tractors could remain on side streets near the Capitol, but that some 500 other vehicles would have to be moved when the farmers' permit to use the Mall expires.

After a meeting Tuesday night, farm protest leaders said they would abide by the police order if they are allowed to parade today in front of the Federal Reserve Building to symbolize their unhappiness with government economic policies. Washington officials were to decide this morning whether to grant the parade permit.

"We don't want to leave the Mall. But we have no major objection," said Stan Matlack of Hutchinson, a spokesman for the American Agriculture Movement.

Weather

Good day. Maybe we should ask Rolando Blackman to write this weather report. Blackman, armed only with a basketball, brought sunshine to the thousands of Wildcat fans in Ahearn Field House last night. Well anyway, we could use some of Blackman's sunshine today because cloudy skies with rain and snow are expected. Highs today will be in the mid 30s. The precipitation will end tonight and warmer weather will return Thursday (highs in the low 40s).

Keep emissions down

The Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) recently conducted a two-day seminar to convince state lawmakers that automobile emission inspections will benefit the public.

It's the public that needs to be convinced that emission inspections are in its best interest.

Automobiles emit three pollutants: carbon monoxide, hydrocarbons and nitrogen dioxide. Carbon monoxide is fatal in large amounts, causes dizziness, headaches, and fatigue in smaller amounts and is especially irritating to persons with heart and respiratory problems.

Hydrocarbons and nitrogen dioxide cause problems when they react with sunlight to form photochemical oxidants (ozone). At ground level ozone is irritating to the eyes, ears and throat.

Automoblies are the only major pollution source not regularly monitored.

Even new cars with pollution-control devices don't run cleanly if they aren't kept tuned to specifications. Clean-air benefits from installing such devices are seriously impaired if they are not kept in working order.

The EPA has issued a July 1 deadline for states with high automobile pollution levels to set up a yearly automobile-pollution check-up program. States that fail to do so, it threatens, will not be allowed any industrial growth and could lose federal transportation, sewer and air pollution funds.

State lawmakers are squawking at this method and threaten the states will not tolerate this forced compliance. While their indignation at federal interference is understandable, they must accept the need for air pollution control.

Yearly inspections to cut automobile pollution are needed and automobile owners must support this monitoring move.

It is predicted emission inspections could mean longer waiting periods, higher inspection fees and increased costs for owners if faulty pollution devices are found.

The health benefits resulting from the decrease in pollutants would outweigh any monetary concern. Besides, better maintaince of engines results in lower fuel consumption and longer life spans for cars.

Owning a car is a privilege—an expensive privilege which entails certain responsiblities. It is time to extend these responsiblites to maintaining acceptable pollution emissions. This can only be done with regular maintenance and inspection.

My mom— Mother Nature

Who would believe me if I said Mother Nature was my mother? Well, it's true—but before you call the hospital in Topeka, let me explain.

Mother Nature (alias Gretchen Reese) is a living, breathing creature. It started out as a big joke, actually.

Mom was taking a break from housework, and was sitting in front of the tube, when a margarine commercial flashed on the screen: Mother Nature standing out in the middle of a rain forest exclaiming, "It's not nice to fool Mother Nature!"

It must have been fate or destiny.

When I came in late one weekend night, and Mom was sitting up waiting for me, I was ready to do anything for her to forget I was a couple of hours late on my curfew. Mom asked me where I had been, and I told her a little white lie (I told her I was star gazing). Her rebuttal was: "It's not nice to fool Mother Nature!"

(How she knew I was fibbing remains a mystery to me.)

Anyway, I laughed at her joke, hoping she would calm down and forget what time we were carrying on our conversation.

THAT'S WHERE the story begins. You don't laugh at one of my mother's jokes without paying for it for the next five years. Once you laugh, she's addicted. She has to tell the joke over and over and over, and well, you get the point.

The next victim was our psychologist. He told Mom my brother was normal and she said (you guessed it), "It's not nice to fool Mother Nature."

The doctor laughed. Mistake number two.

This exchange went on for months with neighbors, school friends, preachers—anyone who looked like they would laugh.

Phase two came when my dad bought a CB radio. If you're not familiar with CB radios, you might not know that CB users communicate with a "handle," a code name. Mom's handle—Mother Nature.

A typical CB radio conversation:

"Hey, Mother Nature, you got your ears on?"

"Yes, I hear you," Mom answers, "and Dean (my dad) ooops, I mean Warden, bring home a loaf of bread, a dozen eggs and a gallon of milk."

After all the fun and excitement of playing with the new toy wore off, the name stuck proudly.

THE NAME SPREAD as fast as the filthiest rumor in a small community spreads. No longer was a small handful calling my mom "Mother Nature," it was more like a multitude.

Then, my brother left for college. Mom went to visit him one weekend at school, and met my brother's roommates and, for a while, had a normal visit.

That was until a friend of my brother's walked into the room and said,"You know, Mrs. Reese, Ed makes his bed every morning."

Of course my mother smelled a rat and knew this wasn't true, so she retorted: "It's not nice to fool Mother Nature!"

So much for "situation normal."

The guy burst into uncontrollable laughter, and when he recovered, he went down the hall yelling, "Hey, guys, come to Ed's room and meet Mother Nature."

The situation repeated itself when I came to college. Now everyone at K-State who knows the Reese family from White Cloud, knows my mom as Mother Nature.

I can see my wedding invitations now: "Dean and Mother Nature request the honor of your presence...."

Patriotism or life?

Editor,

What kind of warmonger is Mr. Ream?

He seems determined to see us fighting a third world war. His only questions being who would fight, when we should fight and our inspiration for fighting. I wonder why we should fight at all; we don't have a military alliance with either the Chinese or the Russians.

Mr. Ream seems to think the last two world wars brought this country closer together and that a third would do the same thing, but he has glossed over the death and crippling effect they have had on our young men—or don't our young men count as people; just as objects which are expended to bring the country closer together. Does he expect us to serve the same "useful" purpose?

Wars have always been bloody, violent affairs which include killing whole populations and destroying land. The only reasons for going to war seem pathetically petty: would you want to die for economic prosperity? how about dying for revenge? or would you rather die for someone else's country because the U.S. promised to help them out if they got in trouble? For that matter, would you really like to die at all?

Patriotism is a great word, Mr. Ream, but what good are love of country and the zealous support of its authority and interests if you are dead and unable to enjoy them? Don't give us war with a purpose to bind us together; rather, give us a long-term peace.

Women's basketball a winner

Editor,

I believe our women's basketball team deserves more congratulations and campus recognition than it has received this semester.

As a member of the pep band, I have watched our girls struggle with the agony of defeat and overwhelming joy of victory.

Monday night's game at KU demonstrated that these girls don't stop short of anything less than the conference title, with a 4-0 record to finish the season. Our girls have given the University a record to be proud of, despite the small crowds, the lack of cheerleaders, and the tiny sports articles hidden on page nine of the Collegian.

Women of the team:

My fellow bandsmen and I salute you for your efforts and outstanding achievements and wish you well for the upcoming regionals. May the "pride" of Wildcat land be with you.

'Thank you, audience'

Editor,

My thanks to all who helped to make Ebony Theatre Company's production of "For Colored Girls Who Have Considered Suicide When The Rainbow Is Enuf" the huge success that it was. A special thanks to the many brave souls who trudged out in miserable, snowy weather to see the show. Without an audience there is no theater. No matter how long a cast and crew rehearse, or how well they perform, if no one comes, the magic of theater simply cannot happen. "For Colored Girls" was lucky; it did happen.

For those of you who missed the show, or were turned away at the door because we were sold out each night, we are sorry, but all that we can do is apologize. The Purple Masque Theatre is small, but it is all we have for very limited budget shows.

For those of you who have written or called, asking if the show could be continued, again—sorry, this simply cannot be done. Schedules must be followed. Our set is torn down and a new K-State Players producton is now in rehearsal in the Purple Masque. Most of our crew (and this writer) are now over at McCain Auditorium, busy at work on totally different aspects of "An Evening of Opera and Dance." "The Comedy of Errors" is already past the planning stage. Please help the magic to happen on these productions.

With proper support Ebony Theatre Co., and The K-State Players can collaborate on a new production next fall. Keep your eyes and ears open for our publicity notices, and thank you once more for your past support.

U.S. Geological Survey celebrates centennial

WASHINGTON (AP)—How much oil is under the Atlantic or how much silver is in Montana?

What is the danger of earthquakes in the city where I plan to move?

Will that new industry be able to get enough water from the ground or the rivers?

Is there any danger from that long-quiet volcano?

These and other challenges face the U.S. Geological Survey as it heads into its second hundred years on Saturday.

Today the survey can answer most of these questions with authority. And others too, that hadn't even been thought of in 1879 when President Rutherford Hayes signed the law creating the agency.

The survey will celebrate its centennial Friday and Saturday with an open house at its headquarters, marking what Director William Menard termed "a time for re-dedication and re-commitment to the goal of those who preceded us—the pursuit of earth science knowledge in the public interest."

Menard is the 10th director of the geological survey, following in a line that included the famous explorer John Wesley Powell, second man to head the survey.

IN ITS first century the survey has grown to a staff of 13,000 scientists, engineers, technicians and others. For fiscal 1979 its appropriation totals $640 million. In 1879 it was $106,000.

It is headquartered in Reston, Va., and operates facilities in Denver; Menlo Park, Calif.; Sioux Falls, S.D.; Flagstaff, Ariz.; Hilo, Hawaii and Bay St. Louis, Miss.

Much of the survey's growth can be traced to the directorship of Powell, who in 1869 completed the dangerous exploration of the canyons of the Green and Colorado rivers.

Powell, who had lost his right forearm in the Civil War, opened the last unknown part of the continental United States with this trip, an adventure which historians say brought to a climax the era of western expansion.

The work of Powell and his mule-riding companions in Colorado, like that of Ferdinand Vandiveer Hayden in Yellowstone, helped fill in blank spaces on maps, still one of the survey's primary functions.

The geological survey is mapmaker to the nation, producing topographic maps of the entire country. Today it uses aerial photography and satellites in this work.

THE MILLIONS of maps available at the survey's National Cartograhic Information Center show political boundaries, define land use, indicate topographic features, disclose locations of minerals and other natural resources, and even delineate the nation's flood-prone areas.

The techniques may have improved, but mapmaking remains just as important as it was when the survey was created to merge the work of the Geological and Geographical Survey of the Territories, the Geographical and Geological Survey of the Rocky Mountain Region, the General Land Office, the Geographical Surveys West of the 100th Meridian and the Geological Exploration of the Fortieth Parallel.

While it was originally charged with classifying the public lands and surveying for natural resources, duties of the survey also have grown to include determining the potential for earth-related disasters.

It engages in volcano and earthquake research, determining hazard areas and trying to learn how to predict and control tremors.

Discuss the energy crisis, and the survey is again involved. The agency determines areas of the continental shelf to be leased for oil and gas exploration and manages the Alaskan oil reserves.

The nation's water resources also are catalogued by the survey, which keeps track of ground water supplies and monitors the flow in the nation's rivers and streams.

This information is used both in flood-control programs and in aiding agriculture and business.

Essentially it is information made available to the public that is the business of the geological survey.

And, as such, the survey's work can be a report on rocks brought back from the moon, a report on the availability of ground water on Long Island, a survey of the mineral wealth hidden underground in Wyoming—or just a map carried by hunters and backpackers enjoying their leisure time.

Dry forces leader called 'unscrupulous'

TOPEKA (AP)—A Kansas City senator Tuesday accused the state's dry leader of using unscrupulous tactics, intimidation and deceit in lobbying against liquor legislation.

Sen. Tom Rehorn, a Democrat and liquor-by-the-drink constitutional amendment advocate, criticized the Rev. Richard Taylor Jr., president of Kansans for Life at Its Best, at a news conference the day before the Senate is due to debate a resolution to put a liquor amendment on the 1980 election ballot.

Taylor showed up as Rehorn's news conference was ending, and replied to the senator's accusations.

Rehorn said he wanted to point out Taylor's "deceptive lobbying tactics and blatent attempts to mislead the Kansas Legislature and the people of Kansas."

"Though perhaps well intended, Rev. Taylor's tactics are unscrupulous. In his zeal, he takes information out of context. He draws conclusions without evidence," Rehorn told reporters.

In response, Taylor said, "I can back up everything I say, or I wouldn't be here. I've never taken anything out of context.

"Sen. Rehorn has a problem. The Good Book says, 'Love your neighbor as you love yourself.' Sen. Rehorn can't stand himself, so he hates other people."

It was the second time within two weeks Taylor and a state senator have become embroiled in verbal controversy.

Sen. Frank Gaines (D-Augusta), in a recent interview, accused Taylor of employing mental manipulation on his dry supporters, likening his tactics to those of the late Rev. Jim Jones of the Peoples Temple.

Taylor demanded that Gaines apologize to what he said are hundreds of thousands of "concerned Kansans" who support his work to limit availability of liquor in the state.

Gaines has not publicly apologized.

Efforts are airborne to free inmate returned to prison

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. (AP)—Convicted murderer John Joseph Camillo says nobody had ever done anything to help him before.

Now he has the entire Missouri town of Granger trying to free him from the state's maximum-security penitentiary.

"I didn't know these people were going to help me," Camillo said, referring to the friends he made at Granger where he settled after escaping from a prison work farm.

Outside, a single-engine airplane circled the state Capitol, trailing the message, "Gov. Teasdale, please free Joe, Granger, Mo."

"It's given me back my hope," he said Tuesday in an exclusive prison interview with The Associated Press.

The airborne plea was the latest effort by the town of 105 to free the man who showed up in Granger last October and lived and worked there until his arrest Jan. 6. It was only then that his friends and neighbors learned he had escaped from a prison farm where he was serving a life sentence for a 1966 murder and armed robbery.

PRESIDENT CARTER, Gov. Joseph Teasdale and state parole officials have received letters from Granger families and a petition bearing 200 signatures, all seeking Camillo's release.

The governor was in Washington and missed the aerial plea but his office said the request for Camillo's pardon is awaiting review by Teasdale, and a parole hearing is scheduled for October.

"The officials kept telling me I couldn't make it outside, they didn't want me out there," the 35-year-old convict said. "Now I've got something to fight with, and I can go to the Parole Board and say, 'Somebody wants to help me.'"

AS PRESTON, Camillo took a job at the sawmill run by Granger Mayor Thomas Shannan, helped with the school bus route, coached the grade school basketball team and was "doing our town a lot of good," according to one resident.

His arrest shocked the town.

"We were surprised, but it didn't make any difference," said Kathy Jenkins, a town leader of the drive for Camillo's release.

"He's a good man, and he proved that to us. Everybody makes mistakes, and you can either hold them down or help them up," she said.

Shutter bugs get ready

Shutter bugs may now get their cameras into focus and turn their talents into profit.

Students and non-students have the opportunity to enter their photographs in the Fourth Annual Kaleidoscope Photography Contest.

"In the past, the contest was divided into only two categories: black and white, and color. Students began to feel that professionals entering the contest had an unfair advantage," Dave Colburn, Kaleidoscope coordinator, said.

Colburn said this year the contest has been divided into three categories: professionals and semi-professionals black and white, and color; and amateur color, and amateur black and white.

Judging will be Sunday, and the photographs will be displayed in the Union Courtyard, March 5 through March 9. Awards of $25, $15 and $10 will be given for first, second and third place in each category.

"I feel it has provided the photographers around the community with a chance to display their work and make some money at the same time," Colburn said.

Entries are due by 5 p.m., Thursday in the Activities Center of the Union. All entries must be matted or framed and be a minimum of 5-by-7 inches. A $1 entry will be charged for each photograph.

Publications board sets policy for Collegian, Royal Purple

By BILL LIPPOLD
Collegian Reporter

To most K-State students, the Board of Student Publications is a ghost-like agency, never seen and rarely heard except by those who work for the Collegian and the Royal Purple.

The board is not a ghost, and its work can be seen by any student who reads these publications.

Student Publications is incorporated as a local agency, said Bill Brown, director of Student Publications and ex-officio member of the board.

"The board's basic functions are to set policy and hire editors and advertising managers for student publcations (Collegian and Royal Purple) and to approve all major expenditures of these publications," Brown said.

The board, established in 1951, is not part of any department nor is it considered to be a part of the University, Brown said.

"I'm employed by Student Publications, not the University," Brown said.

THE BOARD consists of three students and three faculty members. A fourth student will be appointed by Student Body President-elect Greg Musil and approved by Student Senate.

Musil said he would probably select a former member of the board.

"I'll consult the Collegian and the Royal Purple before I make a decision," he said. Musil said he was unsure of when the decision will be made.

Cindy Friesen, senior in journalism and mass communications, John Dodderidge, junior in journalism and mass communications, and Roger Seymour, sophomore in construction science, are the student members of the board.

The three were elected in February, but Friesen has served on the board since being appointed last semester to fill a vacancy created by resignaton.

"The board is a publisher and not an editor," Freisen said. "It does exercise some editorial ability because Mr. Brown and the editor work together so closely."

"I ran for the board because I felt the Collegian was not printing enough campus news," Seymour said. "I'd like to see more."

Seymour said too much news is taken directly from The Associated Press wire service. More campus activities should be publicized, he said.

"The board is more than picking editors and advertising managers," Dodderidge said. "It gives us a chance to interact with faculty members in decision-making processes."

Any full-time undergraduate student can be a member of the board.

FACULTY BOARD members are Chairman Walter Bunge, head of the Department of Journalism and Mass Communications; Jack Carpenter, associate dean of the College of Arts and Sciennces; and Ifan Payne, head of the Department of Pre-design Professions.

Full-time students pay $1.75 per semester for the Collegian and $1.00 per semester for the Royal Purple as part of student activity fees.

"This covers only 30 percent of student publications' budget," Brown said.

"The rest is paid for by advertising in the Collegian."

"It costs student publications $1,200 a day to put out an issue of the Collegian," Brown said, "and that's a lot of money."

Gripes? It's CRB to the rescue

By MIKE CORN
Collegian Reporter

At odds with your landlord, automobile mechanic or an unscrupulous business? If so, stop by the Consumer Relations Board (CRB)—they might be able to help.

CRB is an organization, located in the Student Governing Association (SGA) offices in the K-State Union lower level; its purpose is to assist and protect K-State students in consumer and business affairs.

"Problems between landlords and tenants are number one in the complaints that we receive from people who walk in or call," Melanie Stockdell, CRB director, said.

Melanie Stockdell

Problems with auto mechanics are the second highest complaints.

"Projecting on the basis of the complaints we have received during the first two months of this year, business should just about double over last year," Stockdell, graduate in consumer economics, said.

There have been 136 complaints received by the office since the beginning of the semester. Of those there have been nine formal complaint cases filed through CRB, she said.

A FORMAL complaint is made by the student who completes a verified complaint form. The form is the same used by the Kansas attorney general's office.

Students are expected to try to make a settlement with the business on their own. If this is not possible, the CRB may intervene and send a letter to the business, along with a copy of the verified complaint form.

The CRB attempts to get a voluntary settlement between the student and the business, Stockdell said.

"We don't defend anybody—we're not lawyers," she said. "When we can't get a settlement we suggest they go to small claims court.

"When they go to small claims court we will advise them on the legality of things and will assist them on how to do it."

The board, created in 1971 by the Student Senate, has recovered about $250,000 that can be accounted for, Stockdell said.

The board's largest settlement was for the purchase price of an automobile, which Stockdell said was between $3,000 and $4,000.

The smallest amount recovered was 20 cents for a package of sunflower seeds.

"The sunflower seeds were contaminated," Stockdell said.

IN THE EVENT the complaint is not settled, CRB may contact agencies for assistance. Some agencies include: the Riley County attorney, Kansas attorney general's office or the Federal Trade Commission.

Stockdell said the board also works closely with the Manhattan Chamber of Commerce.

"Since Aug. 10, 1978, there has only been one out of 128 cases that I have not been able to resolve. That case was closed because we were unable to satisfy the complaintant," Stockdell said.

Currently, there are about 15 persons on the CRB. Many of them came out of the Consumer Relation Practicum class in the Department of Family Economics.

"We do have some recruitments from other departments in the College of Home Economics, but we try to recruit some from all departments," the director said.

"The CRB at K-State was the second consumer group in the nation to be formed after Ralph Nader's group. We have been the model of many other consumer groups," she said.

STOCKDELL SAID the board tries to complete 20 to 25 research topics each semester. Those this semester will include: research on drugs, comparative pricing of lawyers and a study on checking accounts.

"What we will be doing is price survey on drugs and a comparison of the price of the generic drug," she said. A generic drug is a drug not marketed by a large pharmaceutical firm and is normally cheaper, but of the same quality as a brand named product.

"A lot of the problems students have are with checking accounts. So we are going to do a comparative study on the prices and services local banks offer for those prices," Stockdell said.

The director said one problem they have is many businesses don't always realize that working with the consumer is good for business.

"We are not trying to get to the business, but we are trying to get them to be above board in their dealings," she said.

"The best thing the business can do is to be nice, even if they have to take a loss—they can write it off—but they need to keep good relations," Stockdell said.

She said the board was also in operation to help some businesses with problems relating to consumer affairs.

The problems CRB deal with will never go away completely, Stockdell said, but the more students know of CRB services, the easier the problems will be to combat.

Along with assisting students in reaching settlements and helping prevent consumer fraud, there are many pamphlets in the office related to consumer products which are available to students. Many of the pamphlets are free, and some can be checked out for reference.

Stockdell said one important item they have in the office is a copy of the landlord-tenant act. They also have sample rental agreements which include many of the provisions in the landlord-tenant act.

The director is a paid position.

Stockdell said at the beginning of the semester, when students are taking training on how to handle the complaints, she averages about 50 hours a week. After training, time spent on the board drops to about 28 hours a week.

"The students pay for us to be here. We spend 11 cents out of the $24.25 activity fee collected with tuition," Stockdell said. "We're worth it. They are paying for us and they just as well use the service."

During consultation with members of the board, if a legal question is brought up the student attorney may be consulted for a legal opinion.

"The only way we can find out what is going on is from the student. We try to get as much infomation as we can when a complaint is received by the board."

Flashback: K-State enrollment equals 1977 spring registration

It seems as unlikely as getting through registration in 10 minutes, but K-State enrolled exactly the same number of students this spring as it did two years ago.

With 17,252 students, enrollment is down 380 from last spring when 17,632 students enrolled, Jerry Dallam, associate director of records, said.

Even though total head count is down, full-time equivalent student enrollment (15,792) is up 60 from last year, according to Ellsworth Gerritz, dean of admissions and records.

Full-time equivalent enrollment figures are calculated by adding the total number of undergraduate credit hours divided by 15, the number of graduate credits divided by nine and the number of veterinary medicine credits divided by 12.

Gerritz said enrollment was lower than expected.

"Gains (in enrollment) will probably be dependent on how resourceful we are in offering programs and courses that are attractive to students outside of the typical age group," he said.

Regents in for change; terms extended one month

TOPEKA (AP)—A bill requiring representation for each of the higher education institutions on the state Board of Regents was killed Tuesday by the House Governmental Organization Committee, branded by the chairman as "Absolutely a very poor bill."

At the same time, the panel endorsed a bill changing the expiration of regents' terms from Dec. 31 to Jan. 31. It is aimed at avoiding the controversy which erupted in January when outgoing Gov. Robert Bennett reappointed two regents and new Gov. John Carlin challenged them.

Rep. James Guffey (D-Chanute) defended the bill which would require members of the Board of Regents to be graduates or former students of each of the eight institutions—K-State, Kansas University, Wichita State, Emporia State, Pittsburg State, Fort Hays State, the KU Medical Center and Kansas Technical Institute at Salina.

Guffey, among seven sponsors of the bill, said the board traditionally has been made up predominately of University of Kansas graduates, which leaves other institutions feeling they may not get totally equal treatment.

Efforts to table and amend the bill changing the expiration date of regents' terms both failed.

A world revisited, ye ol' medieval time

By RAYMOND QUINTON
Collegian Reporter

Two men dressed in full armor stand facing each other. One carries a deadly bastard sword with shield and the other carries a simple mace with shield.

Eyeing each other carefully, they look for a possible weakness. In a sudden burst of fury, they lunge at one another. Their weapons biting through the air, crashing against the cold steel of the opponents' vestments.

A blow of the sword hits home. The warrior, seeing his opponent can no longer use his right arm, moves in for the kill. First one arm is slashed, then the other, then both legs. Finally, the wounded warrior falls dead, making a sickening thud followed by the rattle of clad armor.

If this had been a real fight, it would have been a messy situation. In this case, it was one of the many harmless bouts during the Sire of the Spinning Winds (SSW) annual "Feast of the Winter Dragon."

The fighting is part of SSW's traditional medieval winter festival which began two years ago at K-State.

SSW STARTED in 1977 as part of an international organization called The Society for Creative Anacronism (SCA). SCA is a non-profit educational corporation whose members recreate the customs, clothing, names and battle tactics of people who lived during the 1500s.

In the United States, SCA is divided into six separate kingdoms. Each kingdom is split into regions with each region divided into individual societies such as SSW.

"In the societies, each individual is given a 'persona' which is a society personality," Samuel Mize, sophomore in computer science, said. "There's no set regulation on personas but if a person wants to he can really get involved and even use the formal medieval English."

PHIL REED, (Clarance Ravenstar), senior in computer science, said why the colorful display of weaponry was used during the festival.

"The kingdom of Atenveldt delivered unto us a gross and offensive insult. We refused to acknowledge their insult but they persisted so now we are getting ready for the 'big war' with them in April," he said.

Weapons used during the wars are not real but simply reproductions made of soft light materials.

Although the weapons are fake, the whole idea of the tournament is to allow prospective warriors to show that they know how to use the weapon.

"Fighters must show they are competent enough to use the weapons of their choice so that they won't hurt their opponent," Reed said. "Also they must show that they know when they have been wounded so that they can die properly."

Reed said the fighting during the festival is safer than college football, although some people do get hurt.

ONE MIGHT wonder what satisfaction can be derived by dressing in medieval clothing and acting like the knights, squires, kings and damsels in distress of the 1500s.

Mize, (Lord Leric Spectighe) described his concept of the society: "We're just a bunch of people who enjoy the middle ages and playing different roles. You might call it selectively recreating the past."

Beverly Matherne, associate professor of English, and faculty adviser for the society, considered the groups' activities to be a masquerade.

"I love the color and excitement, plus the way people express themselves in costume. It's a kind of masquerading and exposes many dramatic possibilities of assuming a role for a day," she said.

After the fighting is over and the best warriors are chosen to represent the group in battle, later that evening, the feast begins.

Mize considers it to be a typical feast of medieval times. Consisting of a large roast "beast" the main course is followed by live entertainment, then on into the next course. This procedure is repeated throughout the feast until all are "packed tightly" with food.

All that is needed to join the festivities is a healthy appetite, a noble cause, and the price of admittance into the society.

"One of the most beautiful parts of the society is it's a close society and a relate-together group," Mize said. "We are a polite society even though there have been problems with people wondering about our purpose."

Allison Tomkins, (Lady Arixa of the Fountains) of Kansas City, said she got involved with the society and stated what she viewed as the main problem of the "mundanes" (people not of the society).

"I first got involved in a scholarly way to explore history. Gradually it usurped more of my life and now the majority of my social life is spent as Lady Arexa," she said.

"There is a certain amount of schizophrenia involved. Where else in the world can a women don armor and learn sword and shield techniques."

Tomkins said that people not of the society miss out on the chance to explore artistic disciplines not commonly available in the mundane world.

"To some mundanes, we're just lunatic fringe, and they hope that if they close their eyes, we'll just go away," she said. For others, the feeling upon first meeting us is of coming home."

Mize said the group consists of college students, high school kids, non-college people and what he considers a cross section of people not limited to one type.

Whether it's the food, fighting or what Reed called "the grown-up way to play dress up," which attracts people to the society, Mize said there is one thing for certain:

"You know you are in the SCA when you find yourself calling directory assistance and suddenly realize there is no listing for anyone named "Thymex the Watchful."

'A Night of Opera and Dance;' music, dance, drama combined

By ROBIN PEPPERS
Collegian Reporter

"Have you seen our poster? Come and look at our poster." The excitement of the final days before opening nignt widened the eyes of director Lynn Shelton, assistant professor of speech.

The poster is bold—white on black. It reads, "A Night of Opera and Dance."

"It has to do with the excitement of something that is alive. In opera, you're utilizing just about every performing art there is," Shelton said. Slowly, pondering every word, she added, "Movement, music and drama work together, and they create something larger, and this can create excitement."

The opera is "The Old Maid and Thief" by Gian-Carlo Menotti.

The story revolves around a spinster, Miss Todd, who lives with her younger housekeeper, Laetitia. Into their home comes Bob, a wanderer, who both women find infatuating.

In a casual conversation with the town gossip, the women learn of a thief on the loose and they come to the quick conclusion it must be Bob. Together, they set out to impress him by committing a few illegal capers of their own.

THE DANCE portion of the program will be co-directed by Ronnie Mahler, assistant professor of health, physical education and recreation (HPER) and Susan Warden, instructor of HPER.

There will be six sections, three of ballet and three of modern dance.

In this production, Mahler and Warden have joined a wide range of dancing, from folk to romantic to classical.

The dance workshop is designed not only for the accomplished dancer, but also for the beginner, Mahler said.

"We really believe that dancing is not for the elite," Mahler said.

The idea of combining opera and dance occurred two years ago. Each year the department tries to balance opera and musical performances, offering a small musical and a large opera one year, and the next year offering a small opera and a large musical.

During these two years the dance program at K-State has been growing. The idea evolved of having a one act opera with an hour of dance, offering "the best of both worlds," Shelton said.

THE OPERA was chosen for production elements. It is simple with a small cast, designed to travel and adaptable to any stage. For the first time in K-State theater, the opera will be touring throughout the area, from March 19-23.

The Hansen Foundation in Logan, offers a grant for different productions to tour in smaller communities which otherwise wouldn't have exposure to theater. One other Menotti opera, "The Telephone," also will tour.

Also there will be two performances for youth in cooperation with the Manhattan Arts Council and School District 383.

"We're offering the community a variety of works. Also, the students are working with a variety of styles," Shelton said.

Opera, as well as other types of musical theater, is often criticized for being elite and unrealistic, "but the opposite of real is not phony, it's beyond real," Shelton said.

"An Evening of Opera and Dance" will be performed at 8 p.m., Thursday, Friday and Saturday in McCain Auditorium.

Social problem still exists in suburbia

High school violence declining in some cities

NEW YORK (AP)—The decade-long epidemic of vandalism and violence that has infected many school systems appears to be easing in some of the nation's biggest cities.

However, federal studies have shown that attacks against teachers and students and malicious damage to school property have spread and worsened in suburban and rural schools.

No one contends that school crime in big cities is no longer a serious social problem in urban America.

But in some large school systems, an Associated Press survey found that the number of reported crimes has been leveling off or declining in the past several years.

IN BOSTON, where massive violence marked a 1974 school desegregation order, school officials report a steady decrease in school crime since then.

—In Detroit, Chief of Security Frank Blount reports a "significant drop in incidents of school violence," and credits the improvement to a better attitude among students and improved security measures.

—In Chicago, Board of Education figures show a steady decline in the number of assaults against teachers over the past four years. In the 1978 school year there were 1,042 such assaults, compared with 1,628 in 1975. In the first three months of the current year, there have been 240 assaults reported.

—In Miami, a school spokesman, Georgia Slack, reports that "vandalism is up but assaults are down." Assaults against teachers in the first six months of the current year totaled 165, compared with 180 the comparable period last year. Similarly, there were 455 assaults against students so far this year, down from 462 a year ago.

—In Kansas City, administrators had no figures on personal attacks against students or teachers, but said vandalism has decreased each year since 1968. A decade ago, vandalism cost the school system $470,000, while last year the figure was $176,000.

NOT ALL big cities have that kind of good news to report. In particular, New York and Los Angeles report that gang activity has worsened the siege atmosphere in school corridors.

In Los Angeles, assaults totaled 894 in the 1978 school year, up 6.68 percent from 838 a year earlier. And a court order ending segregation in the city's schools this past fall has contributed to a further increase in violence, according to Richard Green, chief of security of the Los Angeles Unified School District.

And in New York City, reported crimes rose by 16.3 percent in the first five months of the current school year compared with the same period last year. Robbery and weapons possession was up 60 percent.

Some contend that statistics in school violence are self-serving and unreliable.

Harriet O'Donnell, president of the Chicago region PTA, for instance, agrees that violence in that city's schools is down, but doubts the accuracy of the city's assault figures.

"Students and faculty are discouraged from reporting violence. School administrators are concerned with their statistical image," she said.

Nonetheless, recent reports from these large city school systems are consistent with a federal study of school violence a year ago which concluded that school crime has been leveling off since the mid-1970s, and is now showing "some improvement in urban areas." But suburban school crime, especially vandalism, continues to rise.

The federal study, "Violent Schools—Safe Schools" by the National Institute of Education, found that cities have had more time and experience than the suburbs to marshal their defenses against school violence and vandalism.

Instant spuds: Clones dominate potato research; new techniques speed improvements

Potato plants cloned at K-State are improving the yield and increasing disease resistance of the world's fourth largest food crop.

The project is under the direction of James Shepard, head of the department of plant pathology, along with three post-doctoral research associates.

Shepard said his technique enables him to identify disease-resistant plants in less than two years, instead of the 10 or more required in conventional crop breeding.

By treating leaf tissue from "donor" plants with an enzyme which removes the cell wall, individual protoplasts (plant cells without cell walls) are formed. These protoplasts are grown in cultures to whole plants or clones, which have a slightly different genetic makeup, said Dennis Bidney, post-doctoral research associate.

Shepard has been working on the cloning technique since 1973. Last summer, he grew 300 clones in Idaho, some of which yielded twice as much produce as uncloned potatoes of the same type.

IN OCTOBER, Shepard helped identify clones showing resistance to early blight, a potato disease. He now has 69 clones growing in field trials in Florida.

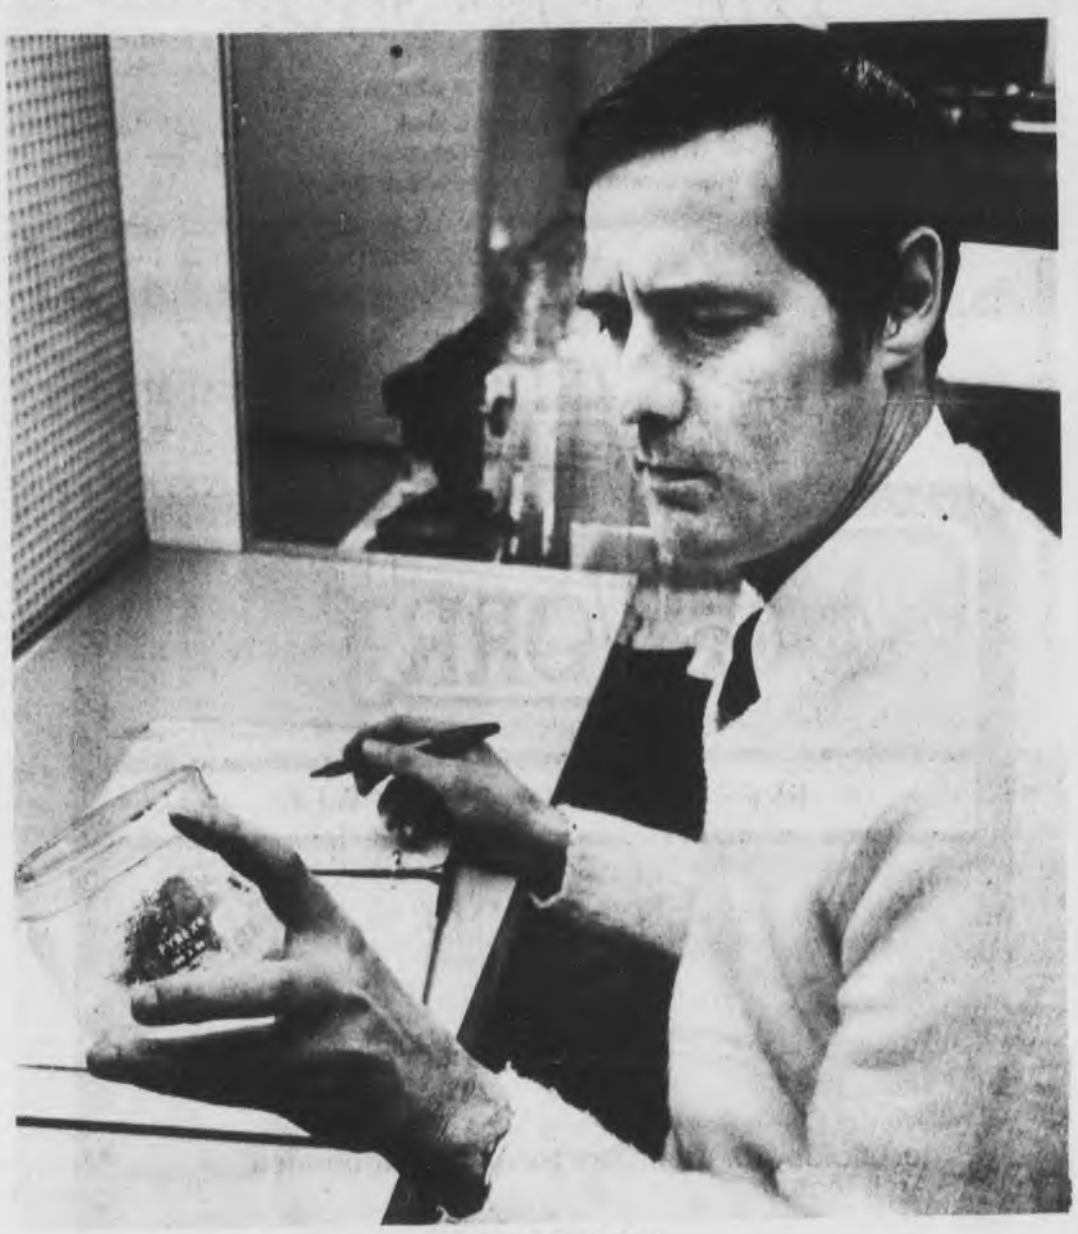
"Next week, we'll go to Florida to harvest those test plots and collect data," Bidney said.

Shepard's latest development is eight new clones having "outstanding" resistance to late blight, one of the more serious potato diseases. These will be grown and evaluated with about 2,000 other clones next summer in North Dakota.

Bidney said Russet Burbank potatoes, the type being used in this research, normally don't reproduce by forming seeds, but grow from tubers of the parent plant (vegetative propagation).

"Only on rare occasions will it (the Russet Burbank) set seed, so you can't breed in characteristics like with hybrid corn or other grains," he said.

BIDNEY SAID the cloning technique should work on other plants that propagate vegetatively, like sweet potatoes, yams, cassavas and fruits.



Elias Shahin, a post-doctoral research assistant, has been screening clones already on hand for resistance to late blight.

To test for a particular disease, Shahin innoculates a cutting from one of the clones. He then rates the cuttings to see how far the disease develops, Bidney said.

"He's obtained several clones which have resistant traits to late blight," he said.

Of Shepard's technique, Bidney said, "there's a lot of hope for this technology. There's been a tremendous amount written about its potential, but this is the first time it's been demonstrated for a major food crop.

"The kind of improvements we're seeing with this technique cannot be obtained any other way," he said.

Utility companies may have to ask

Bill calls for stricter line regulations

By MIKE CORN
Collegian Reporter

TOPEKA—The construction of high-voltage power lines acoss the Kansas prairie may soon come under stricter government regulation.

A bill passed by a committee of the Kansas House of Representatives Tuesday would require utility companies to notify landowners and hold public meetings before they could build large electric transmission lines.

The bill, passed by the House Energy and Natural Resources Committee, will now be sent to the full Kansas House.

Attention was drawn to the issue last fall when the National Audubon Society asked the Kansas Power and Light Co. not to build a massive powerline from the Jeffrey Energy Center (near St. Marys) to Council Grove.

THE AUDUBON Society opposes the power line because it would probably run through an area which has been proposed as a site for a Tallgrass Prairie National Park, according to Ron Klataske, Audubon's regional representative.

"The line should not go through the proposed route even if it is not going to be a national park. The area is highly scenic and power lines running through the area would break up the natural setting," Klataske said.

Farmers and other landowners in the area should have something to say about the location of power lines, he said.

"The bill will affect the larger transmission lines that carry bulk power," said Rep. Robert Miller (R-Wellington), chairman of the house committee and author of the bill.

THE BILL would only affect future construction of transmission lines carrying more than 230 kilovolts and running more than five miles.

Miller said the bill was changed because of complaints from utility companies. The original bill would have required utility companies to notify landowners and hold public meetings concerning the construction of power lines carrying more than 69 kilovolts, regardless of the lines' length.

"We tried to take care of some of their objections," Miller said. "The five-mile limitation was put in so as not to hinder the companies when they had to move lines for highway relocation."

During hearings on the bill, landowners favoring the legislation said they should have a say in placement of power lines.

According to the bill, public hearings would be required not less than 60 days from when applications for construction were filed with Kansas Corporation Commission (KCC).

"The public hearings would last 30 days unless the utility companies ask to extend the time," Miller said. The KCC would rule on the construction proposals 30 days after the hearings.

The bill will come before the House sometime next week, Miller said.

Ag conferences next week will bring Carlin to campus

Farmers, ranchers and agri-businessmen will be at K-State next week attending four agricultural conferences.

The 34th annual Formula Feed Conference is today and Thursday in the K-State Union, Charles Norton, animal sciences and industry professor, said. Feed processors and manufacturers and livestock producers will attend.

New feed additives, grain dust utilization, federal regulations and fiber in livestock rations are a few of the topics to be discussed, Norton said.

Gov. John Carlin will speak at the 66th annual Cattlemen's Day at 1 p.m. Friday in the Weber Arena. Panels of K-State faculty and agri-businessmen will discuss cow-calf and feedlot operations. The day will end for the expected 1,000 Kansas cattlemen with a tour of the K-State Beef Teaching and Research Center, Dave Ames, associate professor of animal science, said.

Monday is "Sheep Day" with the "Miss Bo Peep" contest to select a high school girl to represent the Kansas sheep industry and a slide show about the state's feeder lamb award winner.

There will also be discussions about nutritional management, buying ewes and sheep health problems.

Livestock entomologists will attend the national Workshop on Livestock Pest Management March 5 to 7. Richard Sauer, head of the Department of Entomology, said. The development of insect population models for livestock and the role of private consultants will be discussed.

'Old people are fascinating;' younger not always better

By KRISTI WALTER
Collegian Reporter

If you're afraid you'll go senile when you grow older, you're probably wrong to fear getting old.

"Old people are similar to young people in most aspects. They have just lived a little longer," said Warner Schaie, director of the Andrus Gerontology Center at the University of Southern California. Schaie spoke to about 75 people Monday in the K-State Union on "Intellectual Competence in the Elderly."

"Old people are fascinating," Schaie said. "I became interested in gerontology (the study of aging and the problems of aged people) because I wanted to understand my own aging."

Schaie has done research comparing people of all ages in their ability to recognize and use words, recognize numbers, organize spatial relations and understand behavior.

During his research, Schaie found a discrepancy in the stereotypes people have of the elderly.

SOME PEOPLE think that to be wise a person must be experienced and thus the elderly are wiser and more competent, Schaie said.

But other people believe that a person reaches a peak of performance in the late teens and then goes downhill.

"And they think the only thing old people have is outdated information and that they are senile and incompetent," he said. It is hardly possible for a person to be senile and wise, obsolete and expeienced at the same time, Schaie said.

"Some people improve with age like wine and some spoil with age," Schaie said.

"Abilities don't remain constant as we change over a life span. As we get older, we get slower," he said.

Several things have to be taken into consideration when comparing the young and old, Schaie said.

Their education is different, and unlike the 70-year-old, the 20-year-old probably hasn't experienced any childhood diseases.

"We can say then that we are a little smarter than our parents and our childen will be a little smarter than we are."

At age 80, most people have the same reasoning ability as they had at age 25, he said. But the older person is slower and his attention span isn't as long.

FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD

As Bathsheba Everdene, Academy Award-winner Julie Christie (Demon Seed) wends her way through a maze of unhappy romantic entanglements in this screen version of Thomas Hardy's novel. Set in the English countryside of the 1870's Far From the Madding Crowd follows Bathsheba as she inherits a lucrative farm from a wealthy uncle and careens from lover to lover. A capricious and foolish woman, Bathsheba errs in her marriage to Frank Troy (Terence Stamp) who gambles away her inheritance. When Troy's earlier paramour dies in illegitimate childbirth, Troy walks into the sea—only to reappear unexpectedly and disrupt Bathsheba's imminent marriage to yet another man. The new beau, William Boldwood (Peter Finch, Oscar-winner for Network) murders Troy and is sent to prison. Left alone, Bathsheba turns to Gabriel Oak (Alan Bates) for solace in his quiet strength. Director John Schlesinger (Day of the Locust) captures the brooding Weatherbury landscape as the perfect backdrop for Christie's tempestuous loves.

"Simple, beautiful, endlessly descriptive ... Julie Christie, Terence Stamp, Alan Bates, and Peter Finch are brilliant performers."

Blackman fires 'Cats to Kemper

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

The all-but-deceased K-State Wildcats came back to life last night. Rolando Blackman, cast in a leadership role all season, resurrected the 'Cats by hitting two free throws with five seconds left to lift his team to a 61-60 double overtime victory over Nebraska.

The win advances the 'Cats to the semifinals of the Big 8 post-season tournament Friday night in Kansas City's Kemper Arena. K-State will play regular season champion Oklahoma, which beat Colorado 77-57.

Thanks to Blackman's free throws, the 'Cats survived a hectic battle in which neither team led by more than two points for the last 15 minutes.

"After two ball games we'd played with a lot of hesitancy, we did a good job of coming back and playing hard," Coach Jack Hartman said of his team.

"We looked more like ourselves. We were aggressive—always looking for the bucket," Hartman said.

BLACKMAN, who had been denied the hero role in earlier wins over Iowa State and KU, took charge last night. His 17-foot turnaround jumper over Nebraska's Brian Banks sent the game into its first overtime.

His tough man-to-man defense swarmed Banks on the other end of the floor and forced him to miss an 18-footer which would have given the 'Huskers the win.

After Mike Naderer hit a 12-footer to give Nebraska a one-point lead with 12 seconds left in the second overtime, Blackman quickly took the inbounds pass, drove the length of the court and was fouled by Banks, a call not everyone liked.

"The officials certainly wanted to get home as soon as possible," Nebraska Coach Joe Cipriano said.

But Blackman, who said it was "a good call," stepped to the line and hit two free throws which gave K-State the win and their third straight trip to Kansas City.

DEFENSE was again the key.

"Wasn't that defense something?" Hartman said. "I thought we did an outstanding job of denying them some things early."

Hartman also thought the game should be a confidence-builder for the young 'Cats.

"They'll know they won a game against a team playing extremely hard," he said.

Blackman, who had 16 points, was joined by Tyrone Adams as high point man for K-State.

Nebraska's weapons included the inside play of Andre Smith and Carl McPipe, who had 18 and 10 points, respectively. Naderer had 12 points from long range.

Elsewhere in first-round tourney play, Kansas whipped Iowa State 91-70 and Missouri routed Oklahoma State 92-70.

Extra points

I hate to gloat, but let's face it—K-State pulled off an incredible 92-91 win over KU Monday night. I might casually mention that KU hasn't beaten K-State in football or basketball (men's or women's) this year.

I loved the way the women's team beat the 'Hawks Monday night. Remember how Paul Mokeski missed a free throw which would have won the game for KU Feb. 17? Well, Adrian Mitchell, KU's star who scored her 2,000th career point Monday night, stepped to the line with a chance to win the game with one second left. Clang, the first one bounced off the rim. No sweat, the senior will hit the second one. Clang.

Kim Price, who fouled Mitchell to prevent a dead layup which would have put KU ahead 75-73 with about two seconds left, became another K-State freshman (a la Nealy) who was instrumental in a K-State victory over KU.

COACH JUDY AKERS said it was "pure determination" that gave the Wildcats their win over an "awesome" KU team.

Awesome is right. The Lady Jayhawks have been nationally ranked all year, and besides Mitchell, they have Lynette Woodard, a cinch all-American.

The K-State team has a lot of talent, but the Wildcats really can't jump or run with some of KU's great players. Somehow though, they get the job done through determination and good coaching.

But, not being one to gloat, I won't mention all the cries of "wait until basketball" I heard when K-State beat the Jayhawks in football.

I can hear it now. Thousands of Snob Hillers yelling "wait until golf!"

Royals expect to get relief from right-hander Rodriguez

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP)—Relief pitcher Ed Rodriguez wasted little time reporting to the Kansas City Royals Tuesday morning.

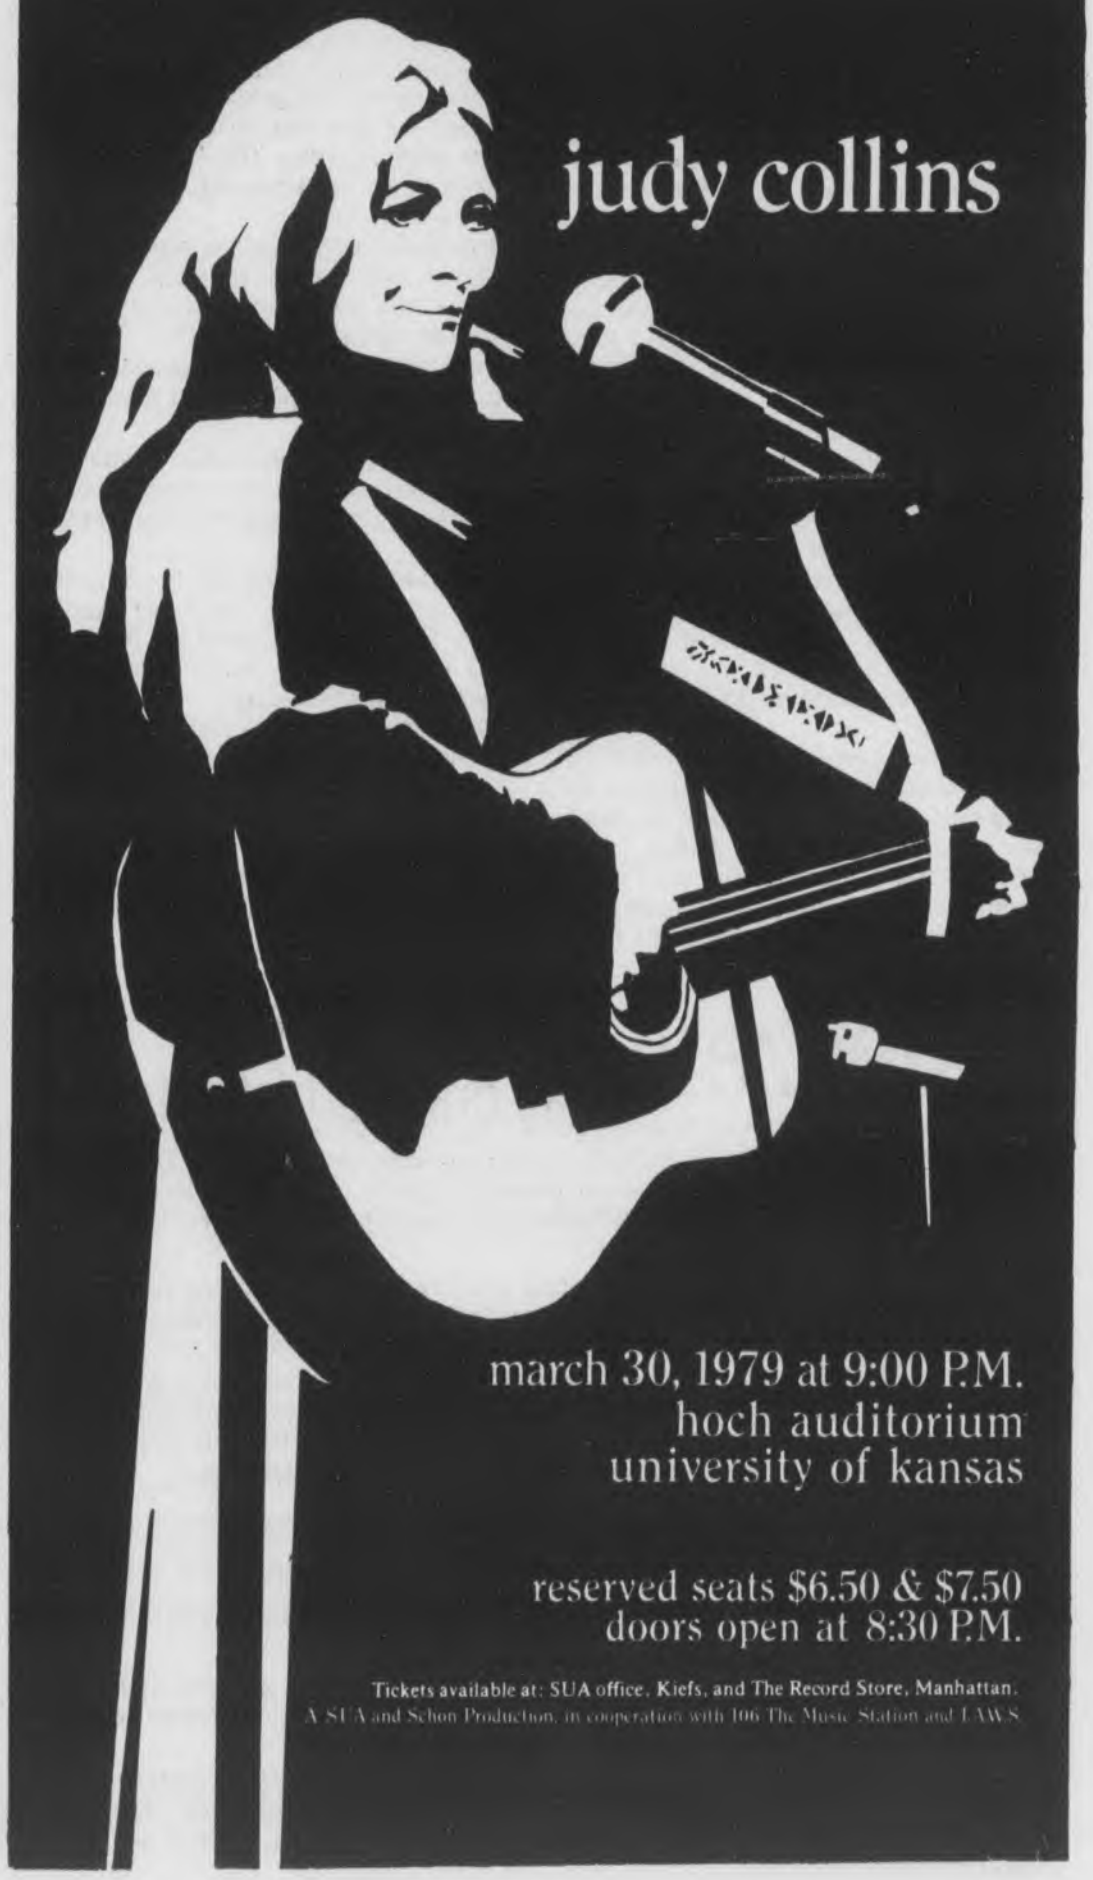
After working out with the Milwaukee Brewers Monday in Sun City, Ariz., he received the news of his trade to the Royals. He flew to Fort Myers, arriving just after midnight.

"No, I don't feel tired," Rodriguez said. "I came to work."

Kansas City is counting on the 27-year-old for short relief

"He's got a good arm," Royals' manager Whitey Herzog pointed out. "And he adds to our bullpen strength."

Infielders Dave Cripe and Jerry Terrell also joined the workouts at Terry Park Tuesday, two days before the remainder of the squad is scheduled to report.



There now are 41 players in camp. Only outfielders Amos Otis and Al Cowens and infielders Pete LaCock, Freddie Patek and German Barrancaare missing.

83 and rowing strong

Former Olympic coach to command crew team

By NANCY ZOGELMAN

Row, row, row your boat....

That's exactly what the K-State crew teams wish they were doing. But with 18 inches of ice on Tuttle Creek Reservoir, the teams have had to find alternative ways to get in shape for the new crew season.

The men's team, now without a coach, is waiting arrival of Walter Hoover who is now coaching at the Minneapolis (Minn.) Boat Club. He will begin coaching at K-State April 1.

Hoover, 83, started rowing in 1913. He was on the U.S. Olympic team in 1928 and coached Olympic teams in 1952 and '56.

In 1956, his Olympic rowing team won two gold, two silver and one bronze medal. Hoover was nominated to the Rowing Hall of Fame in Philadelphia this year.

Because crew isn't funded by the University, the new coach will be paid by donations, Kevin Hankins, the men's team captain, said.

Until Hoover arrives, the team will run five miles a day, lift weights and work in the rowing tank under the direction of Hankins, junior in animal science and industry.

RECRUITING for both the men's and women's teams will begin Wednesday and Thursday in the Union. A boat will be on display for rowing demonstrations.

"We would like to draw up to 70 new men for the team," Hankins said.

"What we are looking for are the tall rangy guys who are about 6-5," he said. Hankins said most rowing power comes from the legs.

Both teams will travel to Austin, Texas, during spring break to train in warm weather. The teams will have two practices a day and run while in Austin.

When Hoover arrives, Hankins said the new coach is expected to start fund-raising programs.

"Hopefully, we can buy some new equipment. Our boats are ten years old and are too heavy for the women," Hankins said.

THE 63-FOOT BOATS used by the K-State teams are made of varnished Alaskan cedar. Hankins said many of the newer boats used by other teams are made of "fiberglass-like material."

"The new boats can take off as much as 20 seconds in a 2000 meter race," he said.

The men's team will shoot for the National Championship in Syracuse, N.Y., in June.

"We hope to make it to Syracuse and also beat Nebraska and the three best teams in the state: Wichita, KU, and Washburn," Hankins said.

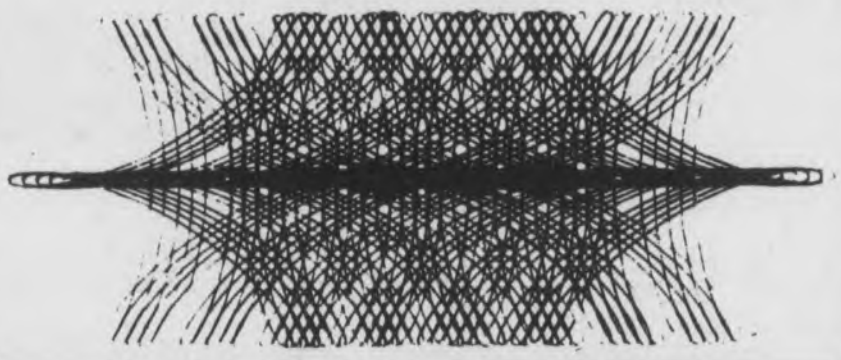
Squeeze: Byers says Title IX may drain athletic funds

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—If equal per-capita expenditures under Title IX legislation are required without exempting revenue-producing sports football and basketball, the future of both men's and women's athletics will be seriously jeopardized, Walter Byers said Tuesday.

"You can't solve a problem by mandating equality and then throwing money at the problem," the executive director of the National Collegiate Athletic Association said at the conclusion of an NCAA-sponsored college football seminar.

Title IX legislation barring discrimination against women in athletics is to go into effect Sept. 1. The Department of Health, Education and Welfare has insisted on equal per-capita expenditures for men and women. In other words, if a school has 100 male athletes with a budget of $2 million, it would have to spend $1 million for 50 female athletes.

IF FOOTBALL is not exempt from equal per-capita expenditures, Byers said three things will happen.



"No. 1, they are going to have to reduce costs and have lesser programs.

"No. 2, this will bring into play a spirited discussion on campuses as to the value of athletics. Athletic programs will be trying to take money from the faculty."

Thirdly, something Byers said he would "personally abhor," a forced reduction in scholarships to "an unreasonable number such as 30" would cause college football to "revert to the pre-World War II jungle of outside financing."

"The government is saying whatever funds you devote to men's athletics must be equaled for women's athletics. So the big boosters and alumni are just going to privately finance players. And this would destroy what we've tried so hard to achieve, institutional control over the program."

Owensby sparks up 'Days of Heaven'

By ED REESE
Collegian Reporter

The work of Clenton Owensby, associate professor in agronomy at K-State gave spark to the movie "Days of Heaven."

The movie, which starts in Manhattan in March, encountered a problem when the special effects people couldn't start an adequate fire for a major scene.

The producer began looking for someone who could and decided on Owensby.

"It turned out that Schneider (Harold Schneider the movie's producer) recalled fire scenes from a 1976 CBS centennial special on Kansas, 'The 34th Star.' He contacted CBS, and eventually reached me," Owensby said. Owensby had set fires for the special.

Owensby was told a first-class airline seat had already been reserved for the following morning.

HE FLEW TO Lethridge, Alberta, Canada arriving at the movie's set 23 hours after the initial phone call.

The type of fire the director wanted was impossible because of the weather, Owensby said, but the weather improved the following night.

"The fire spread down a hill 15 to 20 miles per hour and flames reached 30 feet high in places," he said.

Wearing a floppy hat and a sheepskin coat, Owensby set the fire with a drip torch. Several times he had to set fires behind actors, he said, and was in several of the film clips taken of the scene.

Owensby said he doesn't know which scenes were edited, but if he sees the floppy hat and the sheepskin coat he will know it is him.

In the movie, which is about a group of wheat farmers trying to combat a grasshopper plague, a variety of special effects were used, he said.

One special effect included dropping peanut shells from a net suspended by a helicopter to simulate a swarm of grasshoppers approaching the wheat fields, he said.

The fire scene was shot in Canada because of the vast area, Owensby said.

Carter 'not ready' in Nooner show

By CAROL WRIGHT
Collegian Reviewer

Restless conversation, the shuddering of paper and muffled coughs filtered through the Catskeller Tuesday afternoon.

When the lights dimmed, there was a blending of soft voices. The announcer walked on stage, and introduced the President of the United States.

Collegian Review

Smiling his "infamous" smile, and carrying a Coke, Carter turned to the announcer and said light-heartedly, "Hi, would you hold this for me? You can have a sip if you want. Thank-yo-oou."

Thus commenced the first wisecrack of "The Not Ready for K-State Players," who presented a looney, hour-long performance sponsed by the Union Program Council (UPC).

A festivity of antics, jokes and sarcasisms flooded a packed house. Most of the audience was quite enthralled with the K-State Player's acting and actions, as some students exploded into rounds of clapping and table-hitting ensembles.

All the performers had great lines, but some shining ones which stood out came from Dave Greusel, 5th year student in architecture, portraying Carter's bumbling nature at a press conference: "Did I understand the shah has fallen? Well, ha, that's news to me!"

Greusel also did a good characterization of a sniffling, snorting pompous critic in "Pits for Performances," a satirical Russian opera: "Really rotten, I must say. I could eat cow chip tacos for a week."

The robust and rowdy, "Star Trek—the Musical" was the highlight of the hour. Everyone in this piece gave a commendable performance.

Especially enlightening was Raymond Quinton, sophomore in journalism, who impersonated "Scotty," and sang with a solid, fluid flair.

John Rahe, graduate student in theater, who played "Captain Kirk," had some pretty biting remarks about "Mr. Spock," saying "You have all the zest of an algebra lecture."

This particular segment flowed well. The puns on some Broadway musical scores were zapped up a bit to resemble a type of '60 music quality and a gospel-type setting. The actors danced in circles, snapped their fingers, fell to the floor and waved their hands in the air. Some audience enthusiasts clapped along on the chorus parts.

Other than an occassional projection problem (and disturbances from the audience), "The Not Ready for K-State Players" were a success.

Officials take sides on standardized tax for private vehicles

TOPEKA (AP)—Kansas county officials and a spokesman for the League of Women Voters of Kansas lined up Tuesday in support of a different method of taxing most privately-owned vehicles, but a lobbyist for the Kansas Campers Association registered opposition.

Under the proposed bill, vehicles in a given class would bear the same amount of tax anywhere in the state, and this tax would be collected at the time the vehicle is registered.

Under existing law, the tax on identical vehicles may vary greatly within a county, or from county to county, depending on the tax rate in the city or township, and is not collected at the time of registration.

The bill is designed to raise about the same amount of money statewide as under the existing plan, but individual owners might pay more or less tax than they do now on a given vehicle.

"We have to accept some shifts if we are going to improve the system," said Marian Warriner, speaking for the League of Women Voters.

She said the organization is supporting the change because it would increase efficiency and reduce administrative costs of county government through elimination of delinquent taxes, the need for collection measures and the adjustments in allocation and bookkeeping.

She said the proposed method would be more equitable because those citizens who do pay their taxes would not longer have to pick up the tab for those who don't.

George Schnellbacher, appraiser for Shawnee County, estimated it would net the county more than $1 million a year in cost savings and the elimination of uncollected taxes. He said the county loses more than $375,000 a year in uncollected vehicle taxes.

House pokes hole in booze barrel

TOPEKA (AP)—Proponents of a constitutional amendment to loosen the state's prohibition against liquor by the drink apparently never had a chance Wednesday, falling eight votes shy of the required 27-vote margin for passage in the upper chamber.

Not only did proponents lose the battle, they got they're signals crossed as to what the language in the proposed constitutional amendment would state, forcing at least one vocal supporter to change his mind at the last minute and vote against the proposition.

The Senate was considering a concurrent resolution that would have placed on the 1980 election ballot a proposed constitutional amendment permitting liquor by the drink in public restaurants on a county-option basis.

The protracted debate so frustrated Senate Majority Leader Norman Gaar, who controls the timing of issues debated on the Senate floor, that he vowed the measure would not return this session unless supporters can guarantee him the required 27 votes—a prospect he said was doubtful.

GAAR, a supporter of liquor by the drink, said he would not waste any more of the Senate's time on proposed constitutional amendments to change the liquor prohibition.

At one point during the vote, supporters had 20 votes in favor of the resolution, but Sen. Don Allegrucci (D-Pittsburg) said he would change his vote and "join the rest of the hypocrites."

The unique finale to the nearly two hours of debate on liquor by the drink came when Sen. Frank Gaines (D-Augusta) who had strongly urged passage of a constitutional amendment proposition during the debate, voted against the resolution.

Gaines said it was his understanding the resolution would be altered during the debate to include specific language defining what was a restaurant. He said without the definition, a very loose definition could be approved by some future Legislature that, in effect, would ceate open saloons.

THE LANGUAGE was not added to the resolution, and so, Gaines rose from his chair midway through the final vote to say he would vote against the measure despite his earlier comments on the floor.

The final vote on the resolution was 19-21, far short of the two-thirds majority needed on resolutions proposing amendments to the state Constitution.

As it came from committee, the resolution would have permitted county-option liquor by the drink, but supporters learned well before the scheduled debate there were not enough votes to pass it—requiring some form of compromise.

The compromise was to have a floor amendment offered during debate limiting the resolution to public restaurants only.

It appeared obvious at the beginning of the debate that Sens. Tom Rehorn (D-Kansas City) Edward Reilly Jr. (R-Leavenworth) and Gaines were leading the effort to get the compromise through the Senate.

Rehorn and Gaines both spoke of the need to change the current system of liquor distribution in Kansas and urged passage of a constitutional amendment to accomplish this.

REILLY OFFERED the floor amendment limiting the resolution to public restaurants about an hour after the debate began, which was approved, but he did not offer a definition of what would constitute a public restaurant.

Gaines said later Reilly did not follow through with the agreement he thought he had with Rehorn and Reilly, so he had to vote against the resolution.

"That's wrong," Reilly declared, denying he agreed to include a definition of "public restaurant" in his floor amendment.

"Sen. Gaines is making a statement that is inaccurate," Reilly continued. "He is obviously covering his tracks."

Gaines said without the definition in the Constitution, there was too great a risk that broad statutory language would be approved making for wide open distribution of liquor, which he opposes.

Court hears prosecutor's case; date set for bank robbery trial

By CHRIS TOOHEY
Collegian Reporter

State exhibit number one: three packs of $20 bills totaling $500; state exhibit number two: a dirty pillow case—the alleged sack containing the stolen money; state exhibit number three: a dark brown leather coat, the article of clothing the bank robbery suspect wore; state exhibit number four: a weapon, .357 magnum revolver.

The preliminary hearing for the suspects, James Mitchell, 24, of Junction City, and Robert Night, 26, of Omaha, Neb., accused of the Jan. 18 robbery of Citizens State Bank in the Village Plaza shopping center, was Wednesday in Riley County District Court.

The first witness called by county attorney and prosecutor Dennis Sauter was Helen Lee Mitchell, manager of Hansen's Nutrition Center located near the bank.

"After a customer noticed a car circling the parking lot, he called my attention to it," Mitchell said. The car was a 1960 dark blue Cadillac, she said.

"I noticed two, black men in the car going slowly, not over 15 miles per hour," Mitchell said.

THE CAR circled the lot three times, she said, and then drove toward the First National Bank.

The second witness called by Sauter was Willa Mae Hewitt, a teller at Citizens State Bank.

"At the time suspect Night entered the bank, I was counting money," Hewitt said. "I turned to help what I thought was a customer and was stuck-up with a gun."

"He tossed a white cloth bag and asked me to empty my drawer," she said. "He kept telling me to hurry up."

"I filled the bag with the money from my drawer and the drive-up window and also from the other tellers' drawer," Hewitt said.

"After he (the suspect) left, I pushed the alarm under the counter which centers into the police station," she said. "I also pushed the hotline to the main bank to let them know we were robbed."

While on the witness stand, Hewitt identified Night as the man who held the gun during the robbery. Christy Shultz, another teller at the Citizens State Bank, also identified Night as the man who held up the bank on Jan. 18.

PATROLMAN Don Harbour of the Riley County Police Department (RCPD) was at 17th and Yuma Streets, when he got a call of a possible bank robbery.

"I immediately took a road block position and went to the west end of K-18 by the Stagg Hill Road exit," Harbour said. "Approximately nine minutes after I received the call to watch for a 1960 dark blue Cadillac, the Cadillac came off Stagg Hill Road and headed west."

Harbour said he pursued the vehicle which was about 25 yards ahead of him. At that time, Officer Stanley Conkwright of the RCPD who was patroling the Ogden area, headed east on K-18, Harbour said.

"The suspects' vehicle was doing about 70 miles per hour, and at that time, I turned on my lights and siren," Harbour said.

The suspects' vehicle passed the roadblock which had been set up by Conkwright, and headed head west at an estimated speed of 95 m.p.h., he said.

Harbour said he maintained pursuit over the top of the hill by the Red Horse Inn, when the suspects took the bypass (over K-18 outside of Ogden).

The suspects driving going over the bridge and slightly off the ice worn path, when they hit ice and lost control of the vehicle at the edge of the bridge, Harbour said. The car's left side hit the bridge, forcing the vehicle to stop 25 to 30 feet before the end of the bridge, he said.

"I stopped 10 yards behind," Harbour said. "The driver was coming out of the vehicle when I reached a stationary position.

"The suspect then went over the trunk of his vehicle and continued running after I yelled 'halt,'" he said.

At that time, the passenger moved to the driver's side and Officer Raymond Foster of the RCPD took chase, after the suspect who was 75 to 80 yards ahead of him, Harbour said.

"I fired a shot 10 feet above his head and he (the suspect) fell spread eagled onto the

New stations proposed at television forum

A forum designed to enlighten citizens about the fate of public television in Kansas enlightened only 20 persons Tuesday night at the Manhattan Public Library.

The forum, sponsored by University For Man and the K-State journalism department, was staged to increase awareness about public television and its funding.

Executive director of the Kansas Public Television Board (KPTB) Jack Lemen, presented a KPTB proposal which includes a five-year plan to develop three stations to serve Hays, Garden City, Chanute and surrounding communities.

KPTB was developed through legislative and executive action in April 1977. The purpose of KPTB is to make non-commercial public television service available to Kansans, Lemen said.

Speaking of the proposed sites for public television stations, Lemen said, "We feel that these areas lacking public television should have a say in what goes on television. We've done a great deal of traveling around the state and feel there is a very good capability for the expansion."

Lemen said also there is a possibility of relaying information between the new stations and existing stations in Topeka, Wichita and Kansas City.

"We plan to transmit via microwave interconnection system," he said.

The proposed plan, which would cost more than $9 million, hasn't been approved by the Legislature.

"The reason we haven't been able to appropriate the $9 million," said Rep. Mike Hayden, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee, "is because there hasn't been any human cry for the need. You can't make decisions that the majority is not in favor of."

With taxpayers taking a closer look at government expenditures, Hayden said, the majority is going to have the say.

"It's not going to be easy to appropriate that kind of money unless the public can sell the plan to others," he said.

snow," Harbour said.

At that time, Foster brought him (Mitchell) back to the car where Conkwright ordered the second suspect (Night) out of the Cadillac, Harbour said. Night was searched and handcuffed and put in the police car, and the suspects' vehicle was checked, he said.

The sack of money with the gun laying on top were removed from the vehicle, Harbour said.

It was determined by Conkwright and Investigator Vernon Brown of the RCPD that $19,290 had been taken from the bank.

Judge Leroy Graham concluded there was overwhelming evidence presented that Night was involved in the armed robbery of the Citizens State Bank, and sufficient and probable cause that Mitchell was involved as an accomplice in driving the vehicle.

Defense attorneys Morrison and Arthur were denied the motion to lower bail to $20,000.

Night and Mitchell will be bound over to stand trial on March 12. They are confined in Riley County Jail in lieu of bond.

Death penalty bill amended, expanded

TOPEKA—A House death penalty bill was amended Wednesday by a Senate committee to include a controversial provision greatly expanding application of the measure, then it was endorsed by the panel and sent to the Senate for future debate.

The Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee approved without opposition a motion to change the House bill to provide for sentences of death for persons convicted of felony murder, as well as in cases of premeditated murder.

Felony murder involves any killing occurring during the commission of major crime. Inclusion of felony murder has sparked considerable opposition in the full Senate when capital punishment has been debated.

The measure also includes a provision to permit defendants unable to afford a lawyer to select the attorney of his or her choice from anywhere in the state.

The move to include felony murder was sponsored by Sen. Ron Hein (R-Topeka) and, in effect, broadens application of the death penalty bill by reducing the responsibility of prosecutors to prove premeditation.

Hein told the committee that in 95 to 99 percent of homicide cases, premeditation is not proved and under these instances the death penalty could not have been applied under the House bill.

The bill would call for execution by lethal injection for those sentenced to death.

Strategic battle looms for China, Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand—Vietnam claimed Wednesday to have put 1,600 Chinese troops out of action in a northwestern province where analysts believe the armies are jockeying for position prior to one of the most decisive battles of the 11-day-old border war.

China said today it would pull out of Vietnam if Hanoi would withdraw its forces from Cambodia, which it invaded in December.

The Voice of Vietnam said its troops wiped out a Chinese regiment and two battalions in the hilly province of Lang Son on Tuesday, but did not give the exact location of the fighting.

A Chinese spokesman, who asked to remain anonymous, dismissed the Vietnamese claims on Chinese casualties and declined to reveal the actual number of casualties.

U.S. back Egypt, pressures Israel

WASHINGTON—The United States, in its drive to break the deadlock in Mideast peace treaty negotiations, is supporting key Egyptian demands in the dispute with Israel, diplomatic sources said Wednesday.

Specifically, the sources said, the Carter administration agrees with Egypt that a one-year timetable be set for establishing Palestinian civil autonomy in Israeli-held territories.

Under the U.S. proposals, Egyptian President Anwar Sadat and Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin would agree to the timetable in an exchange of letters that would be part of the treaty package.

The sources, insisting on anonymity, said the Carter administration also supports the Egyptian position that the treaty with Israel should not have priority over Egypt's military ties with other Arab countries.

'Friendly forces' reclaim U.S. station

TEHRAN, Iran—Guerrillas invaded a U.S. intelligence-gathering station near Iran's border with the Soviet Union on Wednesday, but American officials said it was retaken by "friendly forces" and none of the technicians was harmed.

The station at Kabkan northeastern Iran near the border is the last of two secret U.S. installations used to monitor Soviet missile tests. The other was closed some time ago during the political chaos surrounding the overthrow of the shah, who went into exile last month.

U.S. officials in Washington said there was no compromise of secret equipment, documents or materials in the station, but indicated American technicians may have blown up the secret monitoring equipment before leaving. The officials said the technicians, totaling about 20, were flown to Tehran.

The American officials in Washington said their information did not indicate whether the guerrillas were right-wing or left-wing. They did not say what they meant by the station being back in friendly hands.

Opinions

Justice includes mercy

The word "courts" conjures up images of black-robed judges sitting at throne-like benches, delivering unemotional verdicts based on facts and the law.

There is a space in that picture that is often left blank—a place for mercy.

A judge in Michigan filled that blank recently when he released, on probation, a man convicted of killing another.

Francisco Rodriguez shot and killed Preston Smith during an argument in a small Michigan town. The 74-year-old man was tried and convicted of voluntary manslaughter and went to jail for nine months. He is out now, on a five year probation.

When Rodriguez was sentenced, many of his neighbors signed a petition asking the judge to consider the mitigating circumstances. The circumstances were; Smith had abused and sponged off Rodriguez for years and, on the day he died, was trying to kick Rodriguez out of his own home.

Jackson County Circuit Judge Gordon Britten decided there was no justice in keeping Rodriguez in jail, and released him.

Britten could have gone strictly by rules and facts and placed an old man, a man who refused to say a bad word about the man he shot, in jail.

Judge Britten could have done that, but he didn't.

In a country where some spend years in jail for possesion of marijuana because a judge went by the "facts" and "rules," it is nice to see that some judges have removed Liberty's blindfold to look at the people involved.

Justice without mercy isn't justice.

Lafene dispenses concern

Editor,

Since there have been two front-page stories in recent months concerning the ease with which students can obtain tranquilizers and psychoactive drugs from Lafene Student Health Center, we have felt that some reply is necessary. Our primary concern has been that trust and utilization of services by those in need might be adversely affected.

Both articles have been topics for formal staff meetings and many smaller informal discussions. However, a more detailed assessment of actual practices is provided by a study of all 4,397 prescriptions for October, 1978.

Several drugs have been of particular concern: Valium, Librium, and Dalmane. The total number of prescriptions of these substances for October was 97, or 2.2 percent. From nationwide studies known to us, this is a relatively low percentage.

By drug, the results were, respectively, Valium, 1.6 percent; Librium, 0.3 percent; Dalmane, 0.3 percent. With respect to the amounts prescribed, almost all prescriptions were limited to a 7-10 day period with normal dosage.

We have rarely had occasion to treat adverse reactions or overdoses of these substances, and we are quite concerned about these issues as well as dependency associated with prolonged use of these and other psychoactive drugs. Students using ps ychoactive drugs are commonly referred to the Mental Health Section if they are not already using these services.

On the positive side, psychoactive drugs have been helpful in reducing depression, anxiety, and confusion to a degree which enables many students to function productively. We would be pleased to deal with other questions you have about our treatment in general and chemotherapy, particularly.

'United we stand, divided we fall'

Editor,

There are many citizens in America today who believe that unless somebody drops a bomb in our backyard or guns down brother Billy we should not give a red cent about what goes on in the other countries around the world. This train of thought leaves me numb and chilled to the bone.

Granted, the United States is incapable of policing the world. Our defense systems are certainly nothing to brag about, to the dismay of many, and contrary to what many Americans think. America has been slowly but surely leaving their once grateful and contributing allies in the lurch. How many more will we dump or tell to go to hell before we find out how much we honestly need their assistance and support?

Mike Ream stated in his article, "Fight for U.S.—if necessary," that we need a common goal similar to those goals we used to have with other nations and ourselves during the two world wars. We still have that same goal, although America is the one who has forgotten it this time.

Our goals have not changed, just our priorities. We no longer fight for each other side by side, but fight against oursevles for our own selfish reasons. In the same way, we are not helping our small farmers survive; it costs too much money, let somebody else do it.

We still have the same goals; only our pride and selfishness have been confused and turned around. But maybe we won't have any more allies to disappoint soon. Maybe they will realize the situation and leave us before we leave them.

"What good are love of country and the zealous support of it's authority and interests if you are dead and unable to enjoy them," Mr. Liebeno? That's a rather selfish question, isn't it? Would you be enjoying those very things yourself right now if other people before your time hadn't died to protect them?

We should not only live for ourselves, but also plan to preseve such things for future Americans to enjoy.

I know all about you

I am an RP person.

Now what, you ask, is that?

Actually, RP has different meanings for different people. A select few think it stands for "Rancid Purple," some think it means "Royal Pain."

If the truth be known, RP simply means Royal Purple. You know, the "other half" of Student Publications?

Okay, maybe you don't know. The Royal Purple is the name of K-State's yearbook. And as an RP person, I am obligated to see that your names and faces are recorded in the University's history. This is not always apleasant task. On the other hand, it's never dull.

Remember when 7,000 of you took mug shots last fall? I do. Since that time, I've learned intimate secrets about your personal life you wouldn't dream of.

YEAH, I know you. You're on every other page in the organization section. You belong to Spurs, Omicron Nu and are a little sister to a fraternity.

You live in a sorority and for your mug shot, you wore the same sweater as everyone in your house.

Your name and page numbers take up three lines in the index. Yeah, I've got your number.

Literally. Remember those little cards you filled out while waiting in line for your picture? Well, we, the RP people, have them now. You'll be in our file forever—name, rank and social security number.

If I've learned anything as an RP person, it's that K-State should require a course on how to fill out forms. Some of the information students put on those little cards is appalling.

Case in point. On the line reading "permanent address," approximately 63.5 percent of the students put "Route 1." Period. No hometown. Zilch. Can you possibly comprehend how many Route 1's there are in Kansas alone?

I HAVE TO make a public apology here. For those of you who hail from Home, Ks., I request your forgiveness. It's just that when you get a card that's been filled in as "Home" on the permanent address line, you get skeptical. I mean, everyone comes to K-State from "home," right? Wrong. Folks, there is a Home, I looked it up on a map.

But we RP people can only be fooled so far. This is to the guy who claimed his hometown was Buzzard's Breath, Wyo.: God will get you for that. We found out you're from Lenexa.

You wouldn't believe how many students misspell their names. I guess I thought that was a prerequisite to entering K-State. Maybe I'm wrong.

Anyway, enough said about that.

The most interesting—and frustrating—part of my job as an RP person is getting to look at those lovely pictures. Most of you take outstanding pictures—honestly.

But then there are some of you...Look, it's none of my business, but I wonder how you'll feel in 20 years when your kid says, "Dad, why are you only wearing a bathrobe and bowtie?" I hope you can live with that.

BEING AN RP person isn't bad. Not at all. I've met a lot of people while working for the yearbook. Well, maybe "met" isn't exactly the proper word. Let's just say I've become familiar with hundreds of faces and names.

So, if I smile at you someday on campus, don't lose sleep trying to remember me. ("Maybe she was in my English Composition class my freshman year.")

Chances are, you've never even seen me before.

But I've seen you. In my RP file.

Amin wants peace after four months of fighting

NAIROBI, Kenya (AP)—Ugandan President Idi Amin, apparently desperate, sought peace Wednesday amid reports of repeated victories by Tanzanian troops in the 4-month-old war.

In a Uganda Radio broadcast monitored in Nairobi, Amin asked Kenya, Zaire, Sudan, Rwanda and Burundi to try to persuade Tanzanian President Julius Nyerere to accept Organization of African Unity (OAU) peace efforts.

In his capital of Dar Es Salaam, Nyerere said the war "could end tomorrow" if Uganda and the OAU would agree to meet four of his conditions.

Nyrere said in a broadcast that the fighting could be stopped if the OAU agreed to condemn Amin for invading Tanzania, if Amin would agree to renounce his claim over a section of Tanzania, pledge never to invade Tanzania again and agree to pay compensation for damage done during the October invasion.

THE UGANDAN broadcast appeared to knock down rumors that Amin and his family had fled Uganda, but it underlined Amin's plight.

Uganda began the war four months ago by seizing a part of northwestern Tanzania, which Amin claimed was part of his Oregon-sized central African nation.

The Tanzanians have been reported fighting in Uganda for several weeks, but have officially encouraged the image that they are supplying a supporting role to exiled Ugandans who have returned to oust Amin.

AMIN AND NYRERE have traded insults ever since Amin overthrew former Ugandan President Milton Obote, a personal friend of Nyerere, on Jan. 25, 1971, and established himself as president-for-life.

Western diplomats reached by telephone in Kampala said Tanzanian army regulars, accompanied by some anti-Amin Ugandan exiles, were on the doorstep of Mbarara and Masaka, two garrison towns in southern Uganda.

They said the Tanzanian advance had halted but that there appeared little that the tired Ugandan units could do to keep the invaders from moving on the capital of Kamapala, 130 miles north of the border.

Women find comfort in La Femme Clinic

By LISA BEAM
Collegian Reporter

Women who aren't comfortable discussing their health problems with the physicians at Lafene Student Health Center now have an alternative—La Femme Clinic.

La Femme is a human sexuality clinic that was started last September as a service to students. Located in Lafene, the clinic maintains the same hours as the health center.

"The clinic was set up to better meet the needs of the women students on campus involving health and human sexuality," Phyllis Laflin, director of La Femme Clinic, said. "It is primarily designed for women, but I do talk with men," she said.

"A main concern of ours is to increase people's knowledge of contraceptives. We talk about all methods of birth control," Laflin said.

THE CLINIC'S services also include: premarital counseling, pregnancy testing, pelvic and breast exams and information on sexually transmitted diseases. Laflin said 40 percent of their time is spent in the gynecological area with the physicians doing the actual exams.

"What I'm hearing the women saying is that it is more comfortable to talk to a woman about women's health concerns. Since we presently don't have a woman gynecologist I am here to try to fill this gap," Laflin said.

"We do lots of rapping on general topics, and for those people with specific problems, we address ourselves to those problems," Laflin said.

She said the clinic has been well accepted, but that she still feels many people don't know about it.

"Most people have heard of it through word of mouth or by referrals from Holtz Hall or the physicians here," Laflin said.

The clinic uses the same physicians and lab facilities as Lafene does, but the format for patient education is different than that of the physicians, Laflin said.

"I try to be totally non-judgmental when talking with these women," she said.

"I'm beginning to believe that the general public is realizing more and more the need for this type of clinic. Women are also more likely to speak up on the way they feel about these topics," Laflin said.

MIDTERMS ARE just around the corner (how's that for starting on a cheerful note?), and finals are following close behind. Before long, it'll be time for those of us lucky enough to be returning to pre-enroll for next fall.

Those who will be coming back to dear ol' K-State are trying to find places to live. Students who plan to be apartment-dwellers next year should start looking for apartments soon (if they haven't already), because they fill up fast.

The Housing Office, in Pittman Building on the north end of campus, keeps current listings of apartments, trailer houses and houses. Listings of students looking for roommates are also available there. Another good way to know what apartments will be available for next year is to read the Collegian's classified ads and keep in touch with friends who might know about possible vacancies.

Apartments should never be rented sight unseen. In other words, the renter should know what he is getting into before he buys. Some things to consider before renting an apartment are the quality and construction of the building, the security of the apartment against theft and the reputation of the landlord and manager concerning maintenance.

A COUPLE of good sources of information are current and former tenants and the Consumer Relations Board in the K-State Union.

The most important factors in evaluating an apartment are its physical condition and the amount of rent and other conditions in the lease.

For instance, how long is the lease agreement? Some landlords want to lease for a full year even though the tenant may not be around in the summer. This leaves the responsibility to sublease on the tenant.

Students who plan to share an apartment or house with one or more other persons take on certain legal responsibilities. If each roommate is a party to the rental agreement with the landlord, they are legally obligated, individually and as a group, to abide by the terms of the lease. Therefore, if one roommate moves out, the remaining roommates are still liable for the entire rent.

Roommates also have legal responsibilties to each other.

When they share an apartment, roommates usually agree to share the rent and have equal rights to use of the apartment. In such an agreement, a roommate who is left paying the entire rent has the right to sue the other roommate or roommates for reimbursement. It is a good idea to agree upon the sharing of other costs, such as utilities, preferably in writing.

To get a better idea of a tenant's right and responsibilities, look up a copy of the Tenant's Handbook in the SGA office in the Union.

HERE'S A bit of trivia to add to your list of "Fun Facts to Know and Tell":

The world's largest corporation is AT&T, and rumor has it that they have overcharged "users" to the sweet tune of $3 billion. In one action the General Services Administration (GSA) asked for a formal investigation of "excessive" profits which could total $600 million on interstate services or long distance calls. To the federal government alone, overcharges have run between $3 and $10 million a year, according to the GSA. Let's hear it for the American way!

Speaking of the American way, the Volvo of America Corporation is recalling about 57,000 of their 1975 and 1976 cars in the 240 and 260 series. The recall is because of a defect in the fuel tank which can cause gasoline to surge out when the cap is removed.

More car news:

Renault USA Inc. has agreed to correct an error in its warranty under a consent order of the Federal Trade Commission. The company is now responsible for notifying people who bought cars after July 3, 1975 that warranties on drive trains will be extended from 12 months or 12,000 miles to as much as four years, depending on state laws.

Meanwhile, General Motors has announced it will follow the lead of Ford and American Motors and offer insurance policies against the cost of repairs beyond the warranty period of GM cars. The policies will cost $153 to $295 with a $25 deductible for 36 months or 36,000 miles.

COMPLAINTS ABOUT interference, mostly from CB transmitters, with home radio, stereo and television sets has become so frequent at the Federal Communications Commission (FCC) that it has launched a formal inquiry.

Since the big boom in CB sales began about four years ago, an average of 800,000 people a year have complained to the FCC about such interference. The most common problem is voices of CB operators who don't realize their conversations are bothering people living or working nearby.

Many of the problems involve deficiencies in the design or installation of receiving equipment even when it meets all FCC technical regulations.

To help curb the interference, the Commission has ordered improvements in transmitting equipment. For example, rules now prohibit the sale of certain amplifiers to boost output of CB sets. However, complaints have continued in spite of these FCC efforts.

SO NOW the agency has issued a call for public comment and suggestions for solving the problems.

Further information about the inquiry is available from the FCC consumer Assistance Office, Washington, D.C. 20554. Deadline for comments is May 1.

Ahh—the simple life; heating with wood

When Gary Race leaves campus at the end of the day and travels home, he steps across the years, back to the world of the early 1900's.

The home Race goes to is a farm house 15 miles south of Manhattan.

"We like the privacy. It's one of the most beautiful places in the country," he said.

Race, who is a graduate student in family and child development, lives in the house with his wife, Dianne, and 5-year-old son.

"I'm not just a student. There is a diversity in my life. I see other people around me, and they live so fast. They are reliant on other people. I don't like being dependent in an economic or mechanical way."

Focus

"I don't like being a student all the time. When I go home at night, I go HOME," Race said.

His home is surrounded by 220 acres of tree-covered land and heated by a home-warmer stove comparable to the old-fashioned pot belly stoves used at the turn of the century.

"It's more personal to put wood in a stove than to turn on a thermostat," Race said. "I put an effort into heating my home. I cut wood, stake it, split it, burn it, and I clean out the stove. I guess it's a more active way to keep warm."

"At first it started out as just a romantic idea, but it works," he said. "It is efficient and economical. The old house was designed to be heated by a stove. Besides, my labor is free."

"If we were to use propane gas to heat it, it would cost us around $150 a month," Dianne Race said. "The stove we have now costs us $500 and we consider it to be an investment.

RACE STARTED heating his home with a stove in 1972 when a friend gave him a pot-bellied stove to use because his propane heater didn't work.

"We just fell in love with it," Dianne said.

Race has also used a wood-burning stove to build a sauna in his front yard. The stove is covered with lime rocks with wire wrapping to hold it together.

"Some friends and I got the idea and we built the sauna in one afternoon," Race said. "We use it at all times of the year."

"I love to use it in the warm weather," Dianne said. "I stay inside until my body can't stand it and then I cool down by washing off with the hose," she said.

"I think it is exhilarating using it in the cold," Race said. "I have stepped directly from the sauna into the snow," he said. "It hurts."

"I think I identify with my grandparents," Race said. "I like that type of lifestyle. I see wood-burning as a big responsibility just as they did."

"Nature is a big responsibility. It is a delicate system and I treat it with respect. It makes me view life with respect."

'I cut wood, stake it, split it, burn it, and I clean out the stove. I guess it's a more active way to keep warm.'

LEFT...Gary Race cuts wood from the land on which he lives for his wood-burning stove. BELOW...Race pokes at hot coals in the stove.

On a cold winter night, Race cools off after a dry-heat sauna which uses a potbelly stove.

Back in school after age 50; students cope with college

Gray hair, lined faces and years of experience don't usually come to mind when you think of college students, but the description fits many who have found their way to the K-State campus.

Attending college has been a long-time goal for three students over the age of 50.

"I had a goal when I was a kid that couldn't be realized because of the Depression," Bill McAndrew, graduate in horticulture, said. He worked to support his family and then joined the Navy during World War II, he said.

"I got out of the Navy and didn't have the socialization and comraderie I had in the military, so I re-enlisted in the Army," he said. McAndrew was a combat soldier in WWII, Korea and Vietnam. After 28 years of service, he retired from the military.

McAndrew had taken college courses in the Army to prepare himself for his goal, he said.

"It was a chance for me to achieve the goal I couldn't (achieve) before," McAndrew said. His military experience in working with people will probably be beneficial in pursuing a career in horticulture therapy, he said.

"I can indentify with groups because of my maturity. I've always had a positive approach towards work and still have something I can contribute, especially in geriatrics," McAndrew said.

"I have a strong negative attitude towards mandatory retirement. It should be up to the individual," he said.

Before coming to K-State, McAndrew put two of his children through the University and another is currently enrolled.

"I believe the University, faculty and staff have a very positive feeling for older people. They cooperate and help a lot," he said. Support from his family and professors has also been important, McAndrew said.

"My health is good, and I don't have any financal worries. I just know I'm going to make it," he said.

DEE LOCKER, special student said she came to K-State for fun and personal improvement.

"I had an excess of time and was 'crafted out,'" she said.

Before coming to K-State, Locker worked for the telephone company.

"I had to move to Manhattan or learn to get by without eating," she said. Her husband was transferred to Manhattan with the McCall Pattern Company.

Locker said she feels no age discrimination or pressure.

"I find the kids, or maybe I should say the young adults, to be tremendously helpful and understanding," Locker said.

She said the professors are anxious to help, but their assistance must be requested.

"It helps to have a very supportive husband. I couldn't do it without home support," she said.

Helen Rothschild, senior in horticulture therapy, sad she came to K-State because learning was her idea of something enjoyable.

"It's a real pleasure to be in a learning situation," Rothschild said.

"I chose K-State because it was the originator of the horticulture therapy program," she said.

Rothschild said the biggest problems she had coming back to school were hassles with the computer and finding a place to park.

Musil, Macha begin terms

Greg Musil and Rich Macha will officially assume their positions of student body president and Student Senate chairman tonight as they are scheduled to be sworn into by the Tribunal chancellor.

Swearing-in ceremonies are also scheduled for Dee James as Student Senate vice chairman and Roger Lind as Student Senate's representative to Faculty Senate.

Tonight also marks the beginning of senate's allocations process. Twelve groups which are seeking Students Governing Association (SGA) funding are scheduled to give individual presentations to senate.

These reports will be informational, describing and explaining the groups, Patrick Miller, Finance Committee chairman, said.

Bills asking senate to allocate $3,000 to hold the 1980 Big 8 Conference on Black Student Government and to approve final allocations for summer school will be considered by senate.

Approval of a new assistant student coordinator for University For Man and approval of a proposal for enactment of admission charges for Sunset Zoo are also on senate's agenda.

A resolution to establish an open meeting period during senate meetings when anyone could speak will be heard by senate, also. Senate will meet at 6 p.m. in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

Bird soars to All-America honors

NEW YORK (AP)—Indiana State's Larry Bird and UCLA's David Greenwood, two of the country's golden frontcourt players, have been named to the 1978-79 Associated Press All-America college basketball team for the second straight year.

The AP's elite group also included Arkansas' Sidney Moncrief and Michigan State's Earvin Johnson, two players from last season's third team All-America, at guard, and Bill Cartwright, the forceful center of the San Francisco Dons.

Sports

The AP second team included Duke's Mike Gminski at center, Reggie King of Alabama and Calvin Natt of Northeast Louisiana at forwards and Baylor's Vinnie Johnson and Iowa's Ronnie Lester at the guard positions.

The third team consisted of Purdue's Joe Barry Carroll at center, Greg Kelser of Michigan State and Notre Dame's Kelly Tripucka at the forwards and Sly Williams of Rhode Island and Roy Hamilton of UCLA at guards.

THE TEAM was selected by a national panel of sports writers.

The 6-foot-9, 220-pound Bird led Indiana State from relative obscurity to the No. 1 ranking in the country this season. The Sycamores finished the regular season with a 26-0 record and the Missouri Valley Conference championship.

Bird, who can muscle inside or shoot jumpers from outside with equal ability, averaged about 29 points and 15 rebounds a game.

The Celtics were so impressed they made Bird their No. 1 pick last year in the NBA draft and have until June 25 to sign him before he goes back into this year's draft.

The 6-foot-9 Greenwood averaged 19 points and 11 rebounds a game to pace UCLA. He is a super jumper, has good medium-range shooting ability and rebounds with the best.

Moncrief, the last of the famed Arkansas "triplets" after the graduation last season of Ron Brewer and Marvin Delph, made the switch from forward to guard this year with success. He averaged 22 points a game and managed almost 10 rebounds a game from the guard position.

JOHNSON, a spectacular 6-8 sophomore, runs the Michigan State offense and averaged nearly 16 points and seven rebounds a game.

The 7-1 Cartwright had his best season for the Dons—averaging 24 points and 16 rebounds. His number has been retired by the school, putting him in select company with Bill Russell and K.C. Jones

Brett to undergo surgery on thumb

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Kansas City Royals third baseman George Brett will undergo surgery on his right thumb Friday. Club officials hope he will be back in action in three weeks, they said.

The Royals open their season against Toronto April 5.

Dr. William Benson, a Kansas City orthopedic surgeon, said he intends to remove a bone chip which is pressing on a tendon in Brett's right thumb. The pressure has caused Brett pain in batting practice during spring training at Fort Myers, Fla., and he returned to Kansas City Sunday to have the thumb examined.

Benson tried injections and therapy, then decided Wednesday that surgery was necessary.

Brett is scheduled to stay in Kansas City for several days after surgery before returning to training camp for conditioning.

K-State to be bowled over by 100 students in tourney

K-State is being invaded this weekend.

Not by Martians, but by 100 bowlers who will attack the K-State Union bowling lanes for the annual Midstates Bowling Tournament.

College bowlers from Kansas, Oklahoma, Nebraska and Missouri will play 18 games each starting at 10 this morning. The meet should be finished by 10 p.m. Saturday.

Terri Eddy, recreation manager, said the K-State team should place well in the tournament.

"We shouldn't do too bad. Our bowlers will be at home and should know the lanes better," Eddy said.

EACH SCHOOL will have five-member men's and women's teams. All bowlers must be full time students.

Eddy said collegiate bowling is different than professional bowling because the bowlers and the crowd show support for their teammates.

"It's all noise. People are clapping and yelling. You never hear silence at a collegiate bowling meet," Eddy said.

This meet is large enough that the winners may qualify for sectionals, which are one step below the nationals.

Eddy said this meet is one of the larger meets in which the K-State team has participated. It traveled to Las Vegas last Dec. 31 for a tournament which included over 100 people.

Two masters races to be run Saturday

While the KSU Invitational Track Meet Saturday will be the last chance for track athletes to qualify for the upcoming NCAA indoor championships, not all the events this weekend in Ahearn Field House will be open to the collegiate runners.

Two special masters races, the 60-yard dash and the mile run, have been scheduled.

Both races are open to amateur runners age 35 or older. Although the meet is a men's track meet, women will be allowed to run in the masters competition.

The exact times of the events haven't been set, but are expected to begin around 12:30 or 1 p.m.

Oklahoma sweeps up title and statistics in conference

The Oklahoma Sooners may have a covered wagon for a symbol, but they zipped through the Big 8 like a Lear Jet this year. They won the conference by two games and led in several statistical categories.

K-State, which tied for second place in the conference, also finished high in several categories.

The Sooners' 50.8 field goal percentage led the Big 8. Missouri was second with 49.6 percent shooting, followed by Nebraska's 47.4. The Wildcats were fifth with 47.0 percent.

Oklahoma also led in free throws, hitting 75 percent. Missouri was second, followed by Oklahoma State and K-State. The Wildcats' percentage was 71.2 in conference games.

K-State's tough defense held its opponents to 63.3 points per game, second behind perennial leader Nebraska, which gave up 62.9 points a game.

The Wildcats' offensive average, however, was sixth in the conference. Missouri led in scoring with 71.9 points a game and were last in defensive average, giving up 71.4 points per game.

OKLAHOMA was second in offensive average, scoring 70.5 points a game. The Sooners were fourth in defensive average with 65.4 points per game.

Rebounding statistics, which were led by K-State in the early part of the season, were taken over by Iowa State. The Cyclones averaged 39.2 and Kansas was third with 35.6.

Iowa State had 549 rebounds to its opponents' 479.

K-State had the dubious distinction of coming in second in total turnovers with 232. Eighth-place Colorado committed the most turnovers in the conference with 235.

Rolando Blackman was the Wildcats' most frequent representative in individual statistics.

He was second in scoring, counting only conference games, behind Iowa State's Andrew Parker. Blackman scored 17.9 points a game, while Parker had 22 per game.

IN THIRD PLACE was Missouri's Larry Drew with a 16-point average. The next K-State player was Steve Soldner, who was 14th with a 13.1 average.

Soldner was second in the Big 8 in field goal percentage, hitting 76 of 129 for a 58.9 percentage. Oklahoma's Al Beal led the conference with a 67.3 percent mark.

Missouri's Steve Wallace led in free throws, hitting 49 of 55 for 89 percent. Blackman was sixth with a 78.6 percent.

The Big 8's leading rebounder was Dean Uthoff of Iowa State, who averaged 10.5 a game. K-State freshman Ed Nealy pulled down 8.1 rebounds per game, good for sixth.

The conference assist leader was again KU's Darnell Valentine with 67, a 4.8 average.

FAR FROM THE MADDING CROWD

As Bathsheba Everdene, Academy Award-winner Julie Christie (Demon Seed) wends her way through a maze of unhappy romantic entanglements in this screen version of Thomas Hardy's novel. Set in the English countryside of the 1870's Far From the Madding Crowd follows Bathsheba as she inherits a lucrative farm from a wealthy uncle and careens from lover to lover. A capricious and foolish woman, Bathsheba errs in her marriage to Frank Troy (Terence Stamp) who gambles away her inheritance. When Troy's earlier paramour dies in illegitimate childbirth, Troy walks into the sea—only to reappear unexpectedly and disrupt Bathsheba's imminent marriage to yet another man. The new beau, William Boldwood (Peter Finch, Oscar-winner for Network) murders Troy and is sent to prison. Left alone, Bathsheba turns to Gabriel Oak (Alan Bates) for solace in his quiet strength. Director John Schlesinger (Day of the Locust) captures the brooding Weatherbury landscape as the perfect backdrop for Christie's tempestuous loves.

"Simple, beautiful, endlessly descriptive ... Julie Christie, Terence Stamp, Alan Bates, and Peter Finch are brilliant performers."

OPEC nations take a hike

VIENNA, Austria (AP)—The Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC) gave official approval Wednesday to separate oil price boosts announced by several member countries, stating that such hikes did not run counter to the cartel's long-term objectives.

The announcement in a news release by the OPEC secretariat at its headquarters here followed price hikes independently decreed by the governments of Kuwait, Libya, Qatar and the United Arab Emirates.

Venezuela also announced an increase upcoming shortly. Reports from Tehran said the revolutionary government of Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan would sell to the highest bidder when oil shipments resume next week.

Gas and diesel tax may jump two cents

TOPEKA (AP)—A subcommittee of the House Transportation Committee has recommended an increase of 2 cents a gallon on gasoline and diesel fuel sold in Kansas to boost revenues for highway maintenance and construction.

The recommendation went Wednesday from the subcommittee chairman, Rep. William Eddy (R-Leawood) to the Transportation Committee chairman, Rep. Arden Dierdorff (R-Smith Center).

The state now collects 8 cents a gallon tax on gasoline and 10 cents a gallon on diesel fuel.

The subcommittee's recommendation includes placing revenues from 1 cent of the increase into the state Highway Fund and revenues from the other penny to the special City and County Highway Fund, which means the state would be sharing the additional money 50-50 with cities and counties.

The governor's Task Force on Transportation had recommended last December after studying state transportation problems for a year and a half that the gasoline tax only be increased 1 cent per gallon, and the revenue sent to local units of government.

EDDY SAID the subcommittee is recommending maintaining the 2-cent differential between the gasoline and diesel taxes, although the governor's task force had suggested "a thorough investigation" of that difference, noting only Kansas and New York have the 2-cent difference.

The differential originated because the trucking industry years ago agreed to pay the higher tax in return for gaining elimination of the old ton-mile tax. Under that tax, trucks were taxed an amount for using Kansas roads based on how heavy their loads and how far they traveled in the state. The industry accepted the differential at that time to rid itself of the paperwork involved in computing the ton-mile tax.

The House subcommittee also endorsed a proposed constitutional amendment permitting the state to be a financial partner with local units of government in airport construction and maintenance, and that the Kansas Highway Patrol be funded out of the state general revenue fund rather than out of the highway fund.

THE LATTER proposal would free about $13 million more for highway construction and maintenance, if the Highway Patrol got its operating funds from the general fund rather than from highway tax revenues.

The subcommittee also suggested an interim study this summer and fall to investigate maintenance costs of the state highway system. A recent Legislative Post Audit report suggested Kansas highway maintenance costs are excessive in comparison to surrounding states.

Botanist finds Siberia warm in people, plants

By ALAN WINKLER
Collegian Reporter

A camping and research expedition into the Siberian wilderness last August gave a K-State botanist a rare opportunity to collect Russian plants and an experience that he will remember for a lifetime.

The first expedition by a group of westerners into south western Russia in more than 75 years included K-State's Spencer Tomb, associate professor of biology.

Three Americans and nine Soviet botanists ventured into the Altai mountain region of Siberia, camping in floorless tents for more than three weeks.

"We were allowed to visit Russia as part of a biological detente'," Tomb said. "For the past three years U.S. and Russian scientists have been on a foreign exchange program.

"We allow them to study something of interest to them and in return they allow us to study Russia," he said.

"There was no government intervention of any kind while we were there," Tomb said. "We were allowed to take pictures anywhere except from planes."

"The people in Russia were just great," Tomb said. They kill you with their friendliness mixed with a little vodka," he said. "They are fun-loving people."

"One night I was joking about how I would like to treat them to a barbecue. The next day I found a goat waiting for me to butcher," he said.

TOMB SAID said many people believe Siberia is nothing but barren snow country.

"They don't realize what a large area it covers," he added. "We were only 40 kilometers from the Mongolian border."

Tomb said the area is heavily wooded and mountainous.

The botanist's collected as many different kinds of plants as they could.

"This way we could take them back and compare them with plants here in the U.S.," Tomb said. The Americans brought 4,150 plants back from the Soviet Union.

"Many of the plants we found were the exact varieties found in Colorado," he said. "This is because there used to be a continuous forest around the northern hemisphere. "The forest existed 40 million years ago and has given us many of our present day plants in our forest," Tomb said.

"The plants we collected will be distributed among major centers of study in the U.S.," Tomb said. "We will be able to compare the Russian plants with our own and possibly determine why some plants survived and others didn't."

Tomb said he believes a few of the plants he brought back will have practical value. One of these is a deciduous tree that is a relative of the Russian Olive, he said.

"The berries of the tree can be made into jelly or eaten raw. The tree could also be used by farmers as a windbreak," Tomb said.

"The most important thing to come out of this expedition was meeting the Soviets and getting to know them," Tomb said. We now have lanes of communication open and have professional contact with each other." he said.

Carlin: 'We're going to do what's right in the end'; governor ponders coal-fired plant solution

By LISA SANDMEYER
Staff Writer

Some of the questions concerning K-State's proposed coal-fired power plant have been answered, but those questions need to be sorted out, Gov. John Carlin said in a press conference last night in the K-State Union.

Carlin was in Manhattan Thursday to attend the Stockman's Dinner in honor of Walter Lewis, a polled hereford breeder from Larned and immediate past president of the Livestock Meat Industry Council of the United States.

"A lot of questions have been answered," Carlin said about the coal-fired power plant. "It's an area where things change so fast. We don't want to get locked into a position."

The necessity of the facility was questioned by some legislators in a joint meeting of the Kansas House and Senate Ways and Means Committees two weeks ago. One representative said the costs of generating steam with a coal plant could be as much as six times what K-State spends now to heat the campus.

"If there's a better way, we're not going to turn it down," Carlin said. "We're going to do what's right in the end."

In his brief stop in the K-State Union, Carlin commented on the "strong vote" in favor of a new fieldhouse at K-State, and said he expects support from other areas to come in. However, the vote came after his budget recommendations to the legislature, he said.

CARLIN ALSO said although he's heard no legislators talking specifically about a new athletic facility for K-State, "that doesn't mean no one's talking about it."

The governor spent the past few days in Washington, D.C. at a governors' conference where he met with Agriculture Secretary Bob Bergland, Vice President Walter Mondale and "other key people" in the federal government, he said.

Carlin said he took a message of the Kansas agriculture situation to Washington, but added that the situation varies much from state to state. Farmers in some states "aren't complaining," he said, but those states grow different crops.

Carlin said he talked with both Bergland and Mondale about Kansas' specific problems and "they've heard our message."

The most talked-about issue of that conference, Carlin said, was the federal budget. Proponents of a balanced federal budget have proposed a constitutional convention, and Carlin said there is enough interest in a convention to pressure Congress into balancing the budget.

"The people calling for a balanced budget are serious," he said. A balanced budget could be "beneficial to all of us, if it is brought about in a responsible way."

CARLIN SAID the federal budget issue ties in with the Kansas spending lid bill he vetoed last week. He said the legislature is now working on a resolution which will do everything the bill would have done, but with more flexibility.

'Singin' in the Rain'—theme song at McCain

By SALLIE HOFMEISTER
Staff Writer

McCain Auditorium may appear to be in good condition, but like several other campus buildings, it needs extensive roof repair.

McCain's roof has been leaking for the past five years, according to Allan Bailey, auditorium stage manager. Leaking water, which until recently caused puddles on stage and stained the stage curtains, has been rerouted with a device designed by Bailey and Joel McGill, shop superintendent for University Facilities.

University Facilities workers constructed an eave network about two weeks ago to alleviate McCain's leak problem until money is available to repair the roof. Aluminum pans suspended below each leak collect water, and funnel it to eaves through garden hoses and drain it through a pipe. Water was collected in garbage cans before the eave system was installed.

Bailey said he believes this is the best solution for now. Shows must be staged, and a leaking roof is an added headache, he said.

THE ROOF was partially mended about three years ago, Bailey said.

"The roofers took it down to the concrete, trying to do the job right," Bailey said, "but kept finding water everywhere."

All the roof insulation was soaked, he said. Funds ran out before the entire roof was repaired, and the job could not be completed, Bailey said.

The south end of McCain's roof was repaired in the summer of 1976, but the north end still leaks.

Since the 1976 repair attempt, water has seeped into the north metal sheets which form the base layer of the roof, Bailey said.

The water then showers the stage, warping the floor and staining stage drapes, he said.

The original roof drains were improperly installed, Bailey said, when the building was erected in 1967.

"You can't point the finger at any one person," he said.

THE PROBLEM is the architects' original building specifications, he said. "We started out with a bad product, but nobody believed it was bad until it broke."

The estimated cost for repairing the stage house roof is $46,000, Bailey said. University Facilities doesn't have money for these repairs and neither does the College of Arts and Sciences, which supplies McCain's funds, Bailey said.

McCain Auditorium is not a University facility, such as Ahearn Field House or the Power Plant, so doesn't obtain independent funding.

Bailey said he expects the roof to be repaired within five years. A special allocation, combining costs of roof repairs with other necessary renovations in McCain, may be sought from the Kansas Legislature, he said.

COUNTERPOINT...David Exline listens attentively while fellow arts and sciences senator Lori Bergen discusses a proposed bill Thursday night.

Students lauded for bloodletting

Today is the last day to contribute blood and help the Red Cross Bloodmobile meet its spring semester quota of 1,200 pints.

Bloodmobile workers will be taking students on a walk-in basis or by appointment from 9 a.m. to 2:45 p.m. in the K-State Union.

"What people don't realize about this program is that it guarantees each student, faculty member and their immediate families blood if they ever need it," said Evelyn Schoeff, chairman of the K-State bloodmobile program.

Fourteen nurses operate the Wichita Regional Bloodmobile that serves most of Kansas and parts of Oklahoma and Texas. Other volunteer workers, 40 of which are K-State students, help with the bloodmobile program at the University.

Schoeff said they have received about 980 pints so far this week.

"We are very proud of the K-State student body," Schoeff said. "Their enthusiasm to donate both blood and time has made the program a success."

Senate OKs funds for black conference

By ANNA BARTON
Collegian Reporter

A bill to allocate $1,500 for the 1980 Big 8 Conference on Black Student Government and a resolution to endorse admission charges at Sunset Zoo were hotly debated and passed by Student Senate last night.

Isaac Turner, arts and sciences senator and president of Black Student Union, informed senate that K-State will play host to the conference and urged the group to allocate the money.

"I'm in favor of the concept (having the conference) but I'd feel better if senate added to the funds from other sources," Dee James, agriculture senator, said. "I'd like to see something (a bill) more specific; more concrete."

Craig Cole, arts and sciences senator, said he thought more alternative sources of funding should be sought before taking student funds.

DANA FOSTER, junior in political science, charged that senators who say they are concerned with minorities but oppose the bill are hypocrites.

"You're not taking away student funds

—you're investing them. So I think that's an idea you better get out of your heads right now," Foster said.

"If we were talking about someone other than Black Student Union, we'd pass it through with a rubber stamp," Lori Bergen, arts and sciences senator, said.

The bill was passed 21 to 13 with one abstention and four senators absent.

Tam Lipps, member of the Organization for Gate Receipts Enactment, lobbied senate for their support of the concept of a users' fee or admission charge at Sunset Zoo.

Vast improvements have been made at the zoo, but "money is needed to keep the zoo at a quality level," because "the exhibits are falling down around our ears," Lipps said.

"The city has pumped in enough money," she said. "They have no more money to give unless they take away funds from other facilities and raise taxes."

"I'm asking you to go from not paying anything to paying a gate receipt for something you all enjoy."

ROGER LIND, agriculture senator, said students he had discussed the proposal with were all against an admission charge at the zoo.

"If the city commission came to us for input, that would be super," agriculture Senator John Martin said.

It would be unwise for senate to "go on black and white" supporting a lobby group, Martin added.

"I don't think we should lose one of Manhattan's best assets. Manhattan doesn't have a lot to draw people in," Kevin Bennett, business senator, said.

Greg Musil and Rich Macha were sworn into their offices of student body president and senate chairman during the meeting. Mark Bergmeier was also sworn in as a new engineering senator.

Senate approved Pam Warren as new assistant student coordinator of University For Man and unanimously approved summer school allocations of $36,000.

Correction

Thursday's Collegian incorrectly reported that a judge, Leroy Graham, was involved in the preliminary hearing of the robbery of Citizens' State Bank in Village Plaza Shopping Center. It should have reported that Judge Harlan Graham presided.

Also one of the defendant's names was misspelled. The correct spelling is Robert Knight.

China sends 'dove' to Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand—While Chinese troops fought indecisive battles around a strategic Vietnamese provincial capital Thursday, Chinese leaders in Peking proposed peace talks to end the 2-week-old war.

The Chinese proposal to negotiate was made in a note to the Vietnamese Embassy in Peking, according to Hsinhua, the official Chinese news agency.

The message apparently did not mention China's earlier demands that Hanoi pull its forces out of Cambodia in exchange for a Chinese withdrawal from northern Vietnam.

Hsinhua reported that China proposed both governments "appoint a vice minister of foreign affairs as a representative to meet at an early date at a mutually agreed place for concrete negotiations."

No immediate Vietnamese response to the peace overture was reported.

In its latest battle communique, Hanoi said its troops had killed or wounded 27,000 Chinese troops since the invasion force drove into Vietnam Feb. 17.

Liquor amendment gets another shot

TOPEKA—Advocates of a liquor-by-the-drink constitutional amendment, undaunted by a solid drubbing they took Wednesday, introduced two new resolutions in the Senate Thursday.

One would amend the state Constitution to permit serving individual drinks in restaurants doing at least 50 percent of their business in food sales, on a county-option basis.

The other also would remove the ban on the open saloon, but would legalize sale of liquor-by-the-drink only in bona fide nonprofit social, fraternal and veterans organizations—thus closing the state's Class B private clubs which have existed since 1965.

Those promoting the resolutions through the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee said they were designed to give the 40 Senate members a clear choice: open up the state to let restaurants sell mixed drinks with meals, or outlaw the private drinking clubs, other than the nonprofit types.

The Senate defeated, 21-19, on Wednesday an attempt to approve a proposed liquor-by-the-drink amendment, which didn't get close to the 27 votes needed to send it to the House when supporters got their wires crossed and in the confusion the wrong amendment was offered to limit it to restaurants only.

L.A. to host 1984 Olympics

LAUSANNE, Switzerland—The International Olympic Committee and the organizers of the 1984 Olympic Games signed a formal contract Thursday to place the event in Los Angeles for the second time in 52 years.

Count Jean de Beaumont, president of the IOC Finance Commission, said the year-long struggle to secure Los Angeles as the host city of the Games had required great patience from all parties.

"The negotiations were often long, often complicated. But the efforts have finally paid off," the count commented after a brief signing ceremony at IOC headquarters in Lausanne.

In the absence of IOC president Lord Killanin, the contract, which stipulates organizers must "assume all obligations" for the Games, was signed by de Beaumont and IOC director Monique Berlioux.

Begin like March—in like a lion

WASHINGTON—Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin opened crucial talks Thursday with President Carter, vowing that his government "cannot be pressed into signing a sham" peace treaty with Egypt.

In a tough arrival statement, Begin said Israel was being asked to alter terms of a treaty with Egypt that would make it "null and void."

But later, after meeting alone for nearly two hours with Carter at the White House, the Israeli leader said he was encouraged.

"There was not even one difficult moment," he told reporters as he entered Blair House, the official guest house across Pennsylvania Avenue from the executive mansion. "I think it was one of the most important and constructive talks I ever had with the president."

A joint statement, issued by White House press secretary Jody Powell, said Carter agreed that the meeting was conducted in "a most friendly atmosphere."

Zoo needs funds from entrance fee

If Dr. Doolittle was here to talk to the animals in Sunset Zoo, he would find them in support of charging admission to the zoo.

The beasts would agree this plan provides direct relief from the problems of being a zoo animal in Manhattan.

Since 1975, the Humane Society, zoo veterinarians and others have said if the city can't support the zoo then it should be abandoned.

City funding for the zoo, while increasing, is used for upkeep and does not allow for improvements. The zoo has relied on donations for this.

Charging an admission fee would generate capital earmarked for improvements only. Lack of improvements is the cause of many zoo problems.

The zoo is more than a park. It is often referred to as a living art museum.

People in Manhattan want the unlimited access allowed to other recreational facilities, such as the city park. However, a park does not contain animals which demand, and deserve, certain standards for living—standards that can only be improved with increased funding.

The zoo has also had problems with vandalism.

The Kansas City zoo was having this problem before it started charging admission. Admission fees have meant not only increased operating capital but an end to unsupervised youngsters bothering the animals.

However, the Kansas City zoo only charges adults and children not accompanied by adults. This is an idea Manhattan might find more acceptable than the proposed fee of 50 cents for all children over six.

Critics of the admission fee warn that attendnce will drop. Even if attendance did decrease, at least those attending would be contributing to the welfare of the animals they were viewing.

Charging admission is a way of getting more Manhattan residents involved with the future of the zoo. Their refusal to pay a fee could mean the end of the zoo.

Everyone enjoys having a free zoo but it is easy to take for granted. Charging admission could generate the amount needed to keep the zoo open and create more viable conditions for the animals.

High at the concert

"It's going to be awfully lonely up there," said Mark Bonjour, manager of Ahearn. I dropped his keys to him 100 feet below. Opening the now unlocked gate, I gazed back down the 35 steps I'd just climbed. Dizziness prevailed.

I had always wanted to shoot pictures from the catwalk in the fieldhouse, but had always been stopped. Basketball games were out because Jack said "no" and hockey games were out because the athletic department said "no."

But tonight; well, tonight would be different. With the help of Rob Cslieki and Bonjour, I got permission to climb the catwalk to shoot pictures of last weekend's concert. One catch: once I got up, I couldn't return to earth until after the show.

So there I was alone, a half hour before Firefall was scheduled to appear. As I tiptoed very gently, oh so gently, I realized where the catwalk had gotten its name.

MY HEART throbbed bright red colors, reminding my brain it was scared of heights. After creeping back and forth along the catwalk checking the different camera angles, my heart began to adjust to the altitude.

I glanced down at some of the 6,000 people who had already arrived for the concert. I recognized friends. Bo and Sue, with their bright yellow T-shirts, were standing around with cameras slung over their shoulders. There was Sallie (was it Sallie?) talking to some friends in the middle aisle. I had a bird's eye view on the crowd, but I couldn't do my duty and find Doug and Andrea.

I got up enough nerve to tiptoe along the walk to the crossover section in the middle of the fieldhouse. Directly below was the scoreboard. And for you trivia buffs, guess what's inside? No, not Curtis Redding. Instead, a battered-up softball, a Pepsi Cola can and a moldy hamburger bun. I wasn't that hungry.

The house lights went off as Firefall took the stage. People started cheering, lighting matches and stomping their feet. The "old barn" was now shaking.

WHY, OH WHY, did these people have to stomp their feet and cheer so loudly. Unbeknownst to them, the crossover walk was swaying back and forth with me holding on for dear life. While my heart had earlier throbbed bright red, it was now beating bright purple.

The concert went on. Firefall played a few tunes, then there was a long and lonely intermission. I had nothing to do, no one to talk to. I watched the Frisbees flying below and hoped one would reach me.

I knew I could grab it one-handed and flip it back all in one smooth motion while the crowd watched in ecstasy. A standing ovation. It was not to be.

So I resorted to people watching again. Cheap thrills.

Before long, Marshall Tucker appeared on stage, and again the catwalk shook. Thankfully (at least for me), it wasn't a sellout. I couldn't have survived another 4,000 cheering people.

As Tucker began "Can't You See," I was now fairly comfortable about shooting pictures without worry of tumbling onto a stunned crowd. Shooting with my long lens, I wrapped my right arm around a girder for added support. Easy as pie.

WHAT, NOW, was this spotlight swiftly approaching? As it got closer, I realized it was a flashlight. Wait a second. Who the hell would be up on the catwalk in the middle of a rock concert, other than a fool like myself?

Was it a crazy drunk? Was it the basketball coach? My heart throbbed. I hoped like hell it wasn't a killer. After all, I had left the gate unlocked. Panic set in.

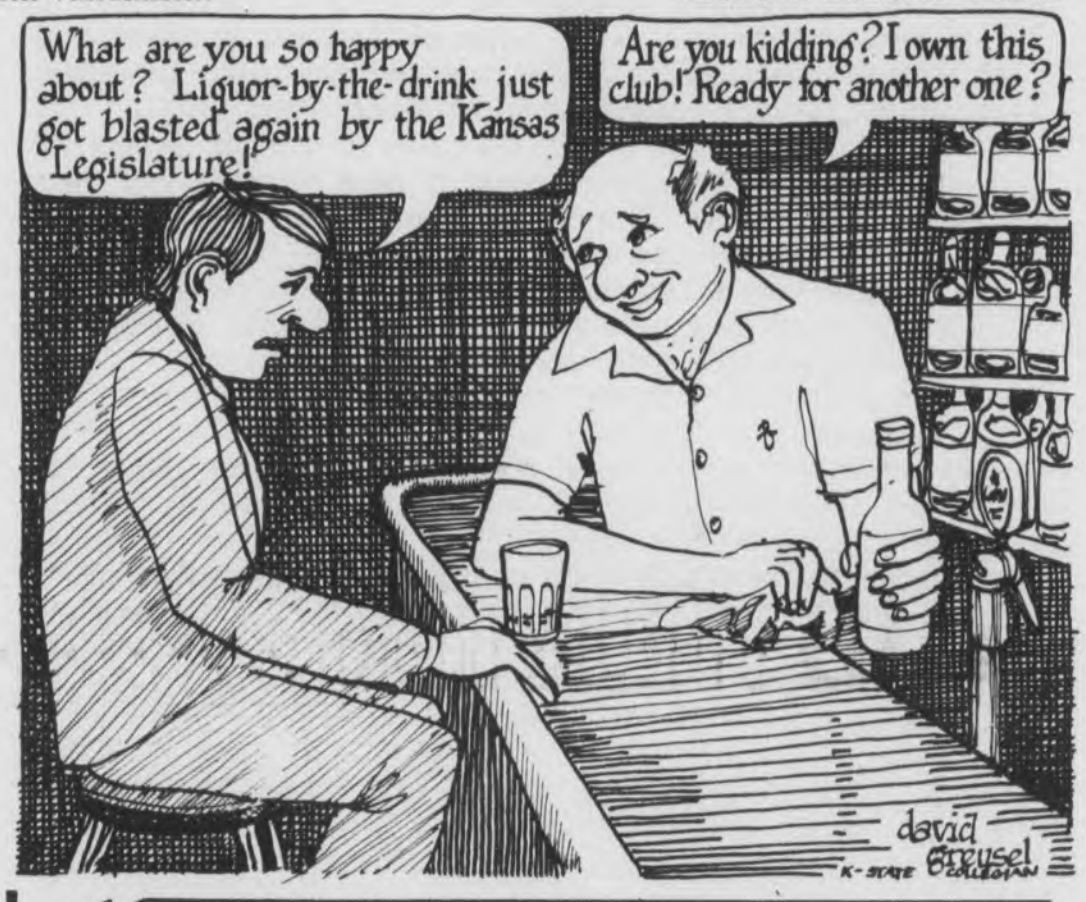
I thought of the movies and TV where two people had struggled atop a catwalk, and one, usually the bad guy, ultimately fell to his death. But this was for real. Who would win here?

"What the hell are YOU doing up here," the bad guy blurted out. Wouldn't ya know. Campus police.

I felt like telling him I was mad at the world and was going to commit suicide. "Get away from me or I'll jump," I thought of saying. But being a relatively nice guy, I told him the truth.

HE DIDN'T believe me. Here I was, cameras and lenses around my neck and he didn't think I was shooting pictures. I've always said the campus police should stick to giving out parking tickets. But he didn't have any with him.

I showed him my K-State ID and told him I was from the Collegian.



He murmured something like "oh, that rag" and asked for my Collegian press pass.

"The Collegian doesn't have press passes." I began to get a little edgy. I told him to talk to the fieldhouse manager if he had any more questions. Ignoring him, I went back to shooting pictures. He left in a puff and a huff.

The three encores for Tucker were not to my advantage. Each time the rafters shook more and more.

Luckily, the concert soon ended. I returned to ground level, with a relief that I had survived the evening. My brain no longer was afraid of heights, my heart no longer throbbed.

Unfortunately, I had to contend with something else. My ears were ringing.

Zoo should be free

Editor,

The Student Senate proposal to enact admission charges to Sunset Zoo is irrational. Having been a year-round resident of Manhattan for the last six and a half years, I have come to enjoy the atmosphere of our zoo.

During the summer, I often bike-ride for hours and Sunset Zoo almost always was one of the places I stopped. If admission were charged, I would probably never go there again, regardless of the amount of admission. Granted, our zoo is small and many of the animals have too little room to live healthfully, it is still an enjoyable place to go.

I am afraid the admission would spoil the informality of people's visits to the zoo.

If the intent of Student Senate, in considering this proposal, is to raise money for zoo improvement, I hope it can be done through other alternatives, which might include large-scale fund raising activities.

Coverage unbalanced

Editor,

I'd like to extend a hearty "thank-you" to the Collegian for the explicit two-page coverage of the Marshall Tucker concert in Monday's paper. I wouldn't have expected you to be able to cover another well-known singer who was also performing on the not-so-far side of campus.

Saturday night also happened to be the night that Red Steagall performed at a very successful horse show in Weber Arena. A lot of people put a lot of hard work and money into the show, which was sponsored by Block and Bridle, and I'm sorry to see that the show didn't get more recognition.

By the way, it's nice that the Collegian saw fit to put in the one picture from the horse show of a team from Missouri, when K-State had many fine competitors.

Law prevents abuse

Editor,

Congratulations, Debbie Rhein, you have finally opened a can of worms.

You said that because 15 counties approved liquor-by-the-drink measures, many people are in favor of it. What about the 90 counties that didn't approve any measure? Do these people not count? Or do you not consider them voters or people?

The current liquor laws are stupid, agreed. But they do serve as a psychological barrier for a number of people who would otherwise drink.

The more liquor that is available automatically increases the chances of alcoholism as more people can drink more liquor.

It is nice to be able to quote statistics from Virginia to support your claims. The only problem is that they don't prove anything.

How much higher is the consumption today over what it was 10 years ago when Virginia first allowed liquor in resturants? You didn't tell us that.

It still surprises me that you can fly in the face of facts. It has been shown that as consumption rises, the number of alcohol-related accidents also rise. And while laws make it possible for people to drink and drive, it still does not make it anymore safe.

Your statement that Jesus drank wine is also misleading. Wine of that time is not the same as wine of today. Biblical wine contained far less alcohol than today's wine.

Please get your facts straight Ms. Rhein.

Educators will lead reading conference

By KRISTI WALTER
Collegian Reporter

It isn't always easy to be motivated in the same old school subjects of reading, writing and arithmetic.

A reading-language arts conference to help provide motivation, new ideas and excitement for the educator, is being sponsored by the College of Education, said Leo Schell, professor of curriculum and instruction.

The conference, which will emphasize reading comprehension, starts at 9:30 p.m. Saturday in the Union Little Theatre. Over 200 teachers are expected to attend, Schell said.

"This conference is a service like an extension program," he said.

DAVID PEARSON, professor of education at the University of Minnesota, will be the speaker for the conference. Pearson is nationally recognized as an authority in the field of reading comprehension.

Pearson has published a book, "Reading Comprehension" as well as a number of research and journal articles on reading comprehension.

Small group workshops will follow the opening session with Pearson, he said.

The workshops will be led by teachers from Topeka, Wamego, Manhattan and K-State. The workshops are designed to appeal to teachers and students, Schell said.

The workshops will cover early prevention of failure higher level comprehension, handwriting, poetry reading, motivation, content-area reading, sight words and language arts for the gifted, he said.

Registration is open to the public and begins at 8:30 a.m. until 9:30 a.m.

Group from Paraguay to perform here

A group that has performed all over the world is making a special trip to Kansas to share the music of their country.

Los Mensajeros del Paraguay from Asuncion, Paraguay, will perform at 7:30 p.m. Sunday in the Union Little Theatre. The group arrived on Thursday after singing in the Far East. They will do 12 concerts in Kansas before traveling to Singapore on March 15.

Singing in the official languages of their country, Spanish and Guarani, the group will perform Paraguayan folk music and general Latin American folk and pop songs.

"I don't know if they will sing in English," said Brad Shaw, assistant professor in modern languages and associate director of Tri-University Center of Latin American Studies. The group has translated into Spanish songs native to the countries they have visited, he said.

The group is sponsored by the National Partners of the Alliance, the International Communications Agency, and the Kansas Paraguayan Partners Inc. The local sponsor is the Tri-University Center of Latin American Studies.

Through the National Partners of the Alliance, every state has a Latin American sister country.

"We have had a number of cultural exchanges with them," Shaw said. "We sent a pianist from Topeka to Paraguay last fall."

Nigerians pay fees to regain admittance

All but two of the 14 Nigerian students who were denied admittance to the University this semester because of unpaid fees have been admitted, according to Ralph Perry, University Comptroller.

The students were involved in a program in which their tuition was to be paid by government agencies in Nigeria. At the beginning of this semester the Nigerian government owed K-State $10,146 in student fees.

The Nigerian government sent payment for nine of the students, Perry said. He said he didn't know why they paid only for those nine. Three of the others paid their own fees, he said.

Bikeways en route to decisive review

By VINCE WHEELER
Collegian Reporter

The future of the city and campus bikeway system will be determined when an evaulation is made this spring, according to Bob Smith, chairman of the campus traffic and parking department council.

Smith, professor of civil engineering, said as a result of the evaluation, the bikeways may be redesigned, left in their present state or dropped altogether.

The city of Manhattan funded 20 percent of the bikeways total cost of $40,000, Smith said. The federal government paid the remaining 80 percent.

If the bikeways stay, the city will pay for maintenance, he said.

"The bikeway project is on a one-year probation," Paul Nelson, director of Security and Traffic, said. "The initial cost was mostly paid by the federal government. After the evaluation we'll see whether the program will continue."

Nelson said changes need to be made in the bikeways. The rerouting of steets on campus to accommodate the bikeways has caused some problems.

"The bikeways have caused us to lose parking and loading space east of Eisenhower Hall," he said. "We've also had trouble with trucks unloading at the Power Plant."

A section of 17th Street which runs by the Power Plant was changed into a one-way street to accommodate the new bikeways.

"I think most cyclists like the bikeways, but they want restrictions taken off riding on the sidewalks," Nelson said.

THERE ARE three classifications of bikeways on campus and around the city. Second-class bikeways, the most numerous, consist of painted lines on the pavement. Third-class bikeways are designated only with street signs, and first-class bikeways give bikers complete possession of the right of way.

"I'd prefer to see money spent on the third-class bikeways," said Bill Jacoby, owner of Bill's Bike Shop and member of the city's bikeway committee. "I'm sure they'll keep the bikeways."

Jacoby said he doesn't believe separating bikers from motorists is in the best interest of safety.

"Many more people ride bikes in Europe than do in the United States," he said. "They have no bike lanes there, just more awareness of bikers. Most families have only one car so they don't look on bikes as a toy like we do here."

JACOBY SAID he has no objections to the bikeways' routing, but he said he would like to see an advertising campaign warning motorists to beware of bikers. He also said more strict enforcement of traffic laws would lessen the necessity for bikeways.

The bikeway project began as a result of a nationwide bikeway program, which was funded by $6 million from the federal government in 1976. Smith said the idea for a Manhattan bikeway began as early as 1974 when he was teaching a class in civil engineering.

"In the spring of 1974, a nationwide contest was held for bikeway projects," he said. "My class entered their design and won second.

"In 1976, we submitted a design to the City Commission. They said 'yes' to the project and submitted it to the (federal) government. It turned out that we were one of two or three bikeway projects in Kansas that were funded," he said.

Menotti's "The Old Maid and the Thief" is a delightful and comic opera being presented by the K-State Opera Theatre as part of "A Night of Opera and Dance."

The opera evolves around a spinster, Miss Todd, and her housekeeper, Laetitia, and their attempts to capture the affections of Bob, a wanderer who becomes a houseguest in Miss Todd's home.

Collegian Review

Last night's opening performance of "Old Maid" was light and fluid. The opera is comic throughout, and the cast's timing and interpetation was successful as the audience's reaction ranged from chuckles to outbursts of laughter.

One of the most delightful characters in the show is Laetitia, played by Carolyn Thayer, senior in music education. She portrayed well Miss Todd's curt and flirty housekeeper, not only through her pleasant and lyric soprano voice, but through her actions and facial expressions.

Barbara Miller, graduate in music, was also convincing in her part as Miss Todd. The transition in her character from a refined spinster to a liberal lady was humorous and effectively executed.

The tall and handsome wanderer, Bob, played by Richard Brunner, junior in music education, not only infatuated Laetitia and Miss Todd, but the audience as well. His rich baritone voice added charm to his intriguing character.

The busy-body town gossip made it a point of always being in on everybody's business, and usually at the wrong time. Kim Moore, senior in home economics journalism, added an amusing touch to "Old Maid," with her portrayal of Miss Pinkerton, dashing about the stage in constant agitation.

The light, colorful setting and Menotti's well-written lyrics and harmonies contributed to the excellence of this opera.

FROM THE spunky "Czardas" to the classical "Pas de Quatre" to the cool abstract "Folds," the dance half of "An Evening of Opera and Dance" was total delight.

The six dances covered the spectrum of dance styles, but fit together the way the colors of a rainbow blend into a beautiful whole.

Parts of the dances were somber, but a feel for the ridiculous sprouted at intervals. "Frogs, Flies and Farries" and "Kowboys" succeeded in being funny as well as keeping a tightly unified dance—a difficult task. Even the classical "Pas de Quatre" had a mischievous solo.

The costumes fit the dances beautifully—showing originality, and emphasizing the movements without dominating. The sparse sets served the same purpose of lightly flavoring the simmering dance styles.

The lighting was excellent—showing real brilliance in "Folds."

The dances that really shined were "Pas de Quatre," "Frogs, Flies and Farries" and "Folds."

"Pas de Quatre" was a return to pure romanticism and beauty—a reminder that grace isn't gone. This dance had the best of everything: costumes, backdrop, choreography, and, of course, classical ballet. The dancers, dressed in gossamer pink glided against a soft fairytale backdrop, and closed as a delicate statue.

The computer-age music for "Folds" prepared the audience for the space-like abstraction of the dance; the dancers appeared to float around each other in a large void.

"Divertissements" was the grand finale to a wonderful evening of dance—a delight in seeing K-Staters perform as well, if not better, than many small professional companies.

Along with the audience, we give "An Evening of Opera and Dance" a standing ovation.

X-rated film a sexual remake of 'Pygmalion'

By RANDY SHUCK
Collegian Reviewer

Pornographic "Pygmalion?"

A sexual "My Fair Lady" minus the musical interludes and costumes?

The eternal question, "Can a $5-a-job working girl be passed off to the gentry as a sexually avant-garde equal?"

Collegian Review

"The Opening of Misty Beethoven" seeks to answer this question, I am told.

The movie's plot is the only thing not immediately obvious. I was forced to consult the promotional clip to decide what the movie was about.

The starring actors of this "classic" are Constance Money (reported to have been 19 at time of filming) as Misty Beethoven; Jamie Gillis as Doctor Love, eminent sexologist, and Terri Hall as Dr. Love's assistant.

This identification of the cast is made because unless movie-goers refer to the marquee for the credits, they will likely miss them.

DIRECTOR HENRY Paris chose to run the credits over an opening scene, which will cause the easily shocked to look away and the lecherous types to see right through the moving print. (Just wanted to prepare you.)

The dialogue is of a deeply profound nature with philosophies such as, "The reason people have sexual problems is that they talk too much."

The producers and director obviously didn't want the public to have similar problems with the movie; there are gaps of about 25 minutes in which no coherent words are spoken.

The promotional clip claims, "Today's production values and acting rival even Hollywood."

The clip doesn't say if the Hollywood referred to is Hollywood, Calif., or Hollywood, Ala.

Camera crews, moving with the action, pan and zoom so quickly they give the viewer sensations equaling the experiences of wide-angle panavision classics such as "Downhill Racer" and "Rollercoaster."

BE ADVISED, dinner should be eaten after viewing.

Attempts at humor, using the scant dialogue, are feeble at best.

"Why is Rome so much different than New York?" Misty asks.

Love replies, "Well for one thing, there are more Italians in Rome."

Portions of the film such as the sequence instructing Misty in the correct procedure of seducing a homosexual painter, sparkle in a way reminscent of military training films on automotive maintenance.

As promised by its X rating, much of this film will offend and shock some people.

By the way, Misty has nothing in common with the classical composer whose last name she shares, save both are human.

If one is interested in seeing a poignant, sensuous drama of great artistic merit, forget this flick.

However, if you just want to cast your peepers over pounds and pounds of attractive, well-packaged flesh, and care naught for plot, "The Opening of Misty Beethoven" is worth the admission price.

In short, I rather liked the film. (Fooled you didn't I?)

There's just no way to account for some people's tastes.

'Cats to try, try again against Sooners tonight

K-Staters are hoping the fourth time is a charm tonight as the Wildcats take on Oklahoma in the semifinals of the Big 8 post-season tournament in Kansas City's Kemper Arena.

Sports

Kansas and Missouri will play the first game tonight at 7:05, followed by K-State and Oklahoma at 9:05.

The Big 8 champion Sooners have beaten the Wildcats three times this season: 62-61 in the Big 8 preseason tourney, 70-62 in Manhattan and 65-52 in Norman.

"People keep asking me about playing Oklahoma again after they have beaten us three times this season," Coach Jack Hartman said. "As far as I'm concerned, that doesn't mean a thing. It's a different game—none of the stats are carried over from the other ones."

Poor shooting plagued the 'Cats in their last meeting with Oklahoma as they shot 35 percent from the field. Rolando Blackman had 20 points for K-State.

HARTMAN pointed out after the last loss to the Sooners that Blackman needed some help on offense. Tyrone Adams supplied it Tuesday, scoring 16 points to help lead the 'Cats to a 61-60 double overtime victory over Nebraska.

K-State's shooting percentage of 48.2 for the 78-79 season is a school record, breaking the 47.7 percent mark set by the 1972-73 team.

The 'Cats, however, have played well on both ends of the court. Their 63.6-point defensive average is the lowest by a Hartman-coached K-State team.

K-State and Missouri have met in the finals of the Big 8 tournament both times since it began in 1976-77.

Women tracksters head for nationals

Get on your mark.
Set.
Go....

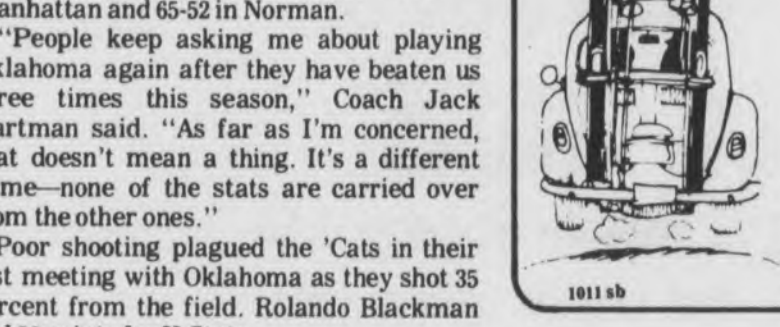
The women's track team will be off at the gun when it heads for the National Indoor Invitational this weekend in Columbia, Mo.

The team has qualified 17 people in 10 different events for the two-day meet starting 6 p.m. today at Hearnes Center.

"We need to get some good individual performances. If we can do that, our team placing should be good," women's track coach Barry Anderson said.

The team took second at the Big 8 Indoor last week and would like a repeat performance or better, Anderson said.

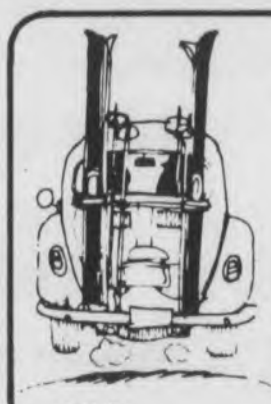
"As a team we are really starting to jell. They have pulled together as a unit and immproved every week," Anderson said.



Eyes will be on Linda Long and Annette Sittenauer, who both had record--breaking performances in the Big 8 Indoor. Long heaved 46-2 in the shot put and Sittenauer went 18-7½ in the long jump.

K-State's mile relay team of Leesa Wallace, Freda Hancock, Lorraine Davidson and Wanda Trent has the second-best time in the Big 8 this year. They have cut two seconds off last year's best in the relay.

The 'Cats also have four chances at the high jump with Beets Kolarik, Diane Moeller, Linda Scott and Patty Bundy all trying for a win.



"The national isn't like the Big 8," Anderson said. "Depth alone will not win the national. It's a place to display a schools' top talent," Anderson said.

The Wildcats placed sixth in last year's national meet, in which six of the top 10 teams were from the Big 8.

Kent Gaston

Yes, we have no predictions

Yes, we have no predictions, we have no predictions today (I do have some bananas, however).

I have no predictions, because somehow whenever I make them, the team I choose loses. It must be a jinx, because I surely wouldn't just pick the wrong team.

Extra points

So, I'll resist the temptation and refrain from predicting.

If I would predict the games this weekend, I would take K-State over Oklahoma (surely they won't beat the 'Cats four times this year) and KU over Missouri, but I sure won't jinx anybody by making choices.

The Jayhawks are looking extremely tough, and they may be warming up. If the 'Cats get past Oklahoma and the Jayhawks beat Missouri, I'm hoping in all my journalistic objectivity (a contradiction in terms) that KU doesn't reach its full potential.

Speaking of full potential, Rolando Blackman (remember, he's just a sophomore) was named All-Big 8 Thursday. K-State has now had a first-team All-Big 8 player for eight straight years.

BLACKMAN was also named honorable mention All-America by the AP (American People) Wednesday, although three American People in Walla Walla had never heard of him. Other Big 8 players on the honorable mention list were KU's Darnell Valentine, Oklahoma's John McCullough and Colorado's Emmett Lewis.

No Big 8 players were first, second or third team All-America, which isn't too surprising. In the rest of the nation's eyes, our lil' conference is none too strong. No Big 8 teams are in the Top 20 and Oklahoma has the best record at 17-9.

But, if the Sooners lose in the Big 8 tourney (wouldn't that be a shame), they may still get a bid to the national tournament, just because the NCAA is inviting everybody and their pet amardillos.

They've increased the number of at-large berths (as opposed to Pullman overhead berths) this year, and Oklahoma may thank them if they indeed get a spot.

By the way, K-State has dominated the Big 8 post-season tournament over its long and illustrious history of two years. The 'Cats were first in 1977 and second in 1978. Missouri was second, then first.

SPEAKING of Mizzou, the Tigers' athletic department can't match the ol' purple and white in tennis.

We had world-famous Bob Stephan and Paul Dugan (he's the lieutenant governor, for those of you who don't take Newsweek), while Missouri could only get Vitas Gerulaitus (I caught that once in junior high) and Rod Laver for a tennis exhibition.

I mean really, Vitas has a funny name and Rod Laver is over the hill. In fact, Jimmy Connors could probably beat Laver left-handed.

UFM schedules eight Fun Runs

The jogging craze has hit Manhattan and the joggers will join forces twice monthly starting this weekend.

Fun Runs, sponsored by University For Man and Runner's World magazine, will start at 8:30 a.m. in Memorial Stadium the first and third Saturdays of every month.

Everyone is eligible for the races, but individual rank will be judged on age, sex and speed. Everyone who finishes the race will receive a certificate.

KSU Invitational Saturday

Track team has last chance to qualify for nationals

For those who missed the Big 8 Indoor Track Championship meet last weekend (or wish they could see it again), the KSU Indoor Invitational should resemble the highlights of last weekend's meet.

K-State track coach Mike Ross said he expects from six to eight athletes from each Big 8 school to compete, in addition to several state schools, junior colleges and the University of Wyoming.

The meet is the last chance athletes will have to qualify for the NCAA Indoor Championships which will be held March 9-10 in Detroit.

"The teams from very far away either have qualified and want to get a race in before nationals or are very close to a qualifying," Ross said.

Although the Wildcats have already qualified four athletes for national, injuries are expected to prevent the foursome from competing Saturday and possibly in the NCAA.

Two K-Staters have good chances to qualify for nationals this weekend.

JUNIOR TIM DAVIS, the Big 8 indoor mile champ, will try to qualify in the 1,000-yard run while sophomore Ray Bradley will make his attempt in the shot put. Bradley took third in the Big 8 with a toss of 55-4, but his season best, 57-9½, came during the OU dual.

The shotput event alone should make meet worth attending.

Iowa State's John Scheetz, who won the Big 8 Indoor championship with a toss of 60-6½, will be matched up against Bradley and a fifth year student from Missouri who has already thrown 63' this year.

During the championships last weekend, Scheetz became the center of attention, even before his first toss. While Bradley sat calmly in a metal folding chair beside the ring, Scheetz began pacing a 20' square area like a caged animal, clenching his "paws" and growling through clenched teeth, "Nobody beats the Hulk." Scheetz, an avid comic book reader, continued his rabid antics throughout the shotput competition, until he was announced the winner. Then he growled, "Stop Hulk, stop."

"Yeah, he does it all the time," an Iowa State team member said. "We're kind of embarrassed about it, but at least he wins."

Prospective K-State golfers meet Tuesday

A meeting for students interested in playing on the K-State golf team will be held at 3 p.m. Tuesday in the Manhattan Country Club pro shop.

K-State didn't have a women's team last season, but if enough women are interested, a team may be formed this year, Paul Anderson, K-State golf coach, said.

Professor says Iranian oil won't aid U.S. energy woes

By MIKE CORN
Collegian Reporter

Resuming oil production in Iran will not solve the oil crisis in the United States, a K-State professor, who chairs the Kansas Energy Advisory Council, said Thursday.

To solve the oil crisis, the U.S. must increase oil production and decrease consumption of oil, Robert Robel, professor of biology, said.

He recently returned from a meeting of the Mid-America Solar Energy Research Committee's board of directors in Minneapolis, Minn.

"The Iranians will not go back up to the level of oil production they were at before the revolution. They are going to have problems reaching the same level because all of the technicians have left," Robel said.

If the oil embargo of 1973-74 would have lasted through the summer, the U.S. might have had an energy policy which would've prevented the current oil crisis, he said.

Contributing to the crisis, Robel said, is a negative policy toward the energy program.

"There has been a closing of federal land that once was used for exploration, and the U.S. doesn't have a coal leasing policy for federal land.

"There is also the problem of economics. Price controls on gasoline and natural gas restrict companies from finding and producing new wells," he said.

The solar research group, funded by the U.S. Department of Energy, is seeking to commercialize solar energy and is planning for construction of demonstration houses this year.

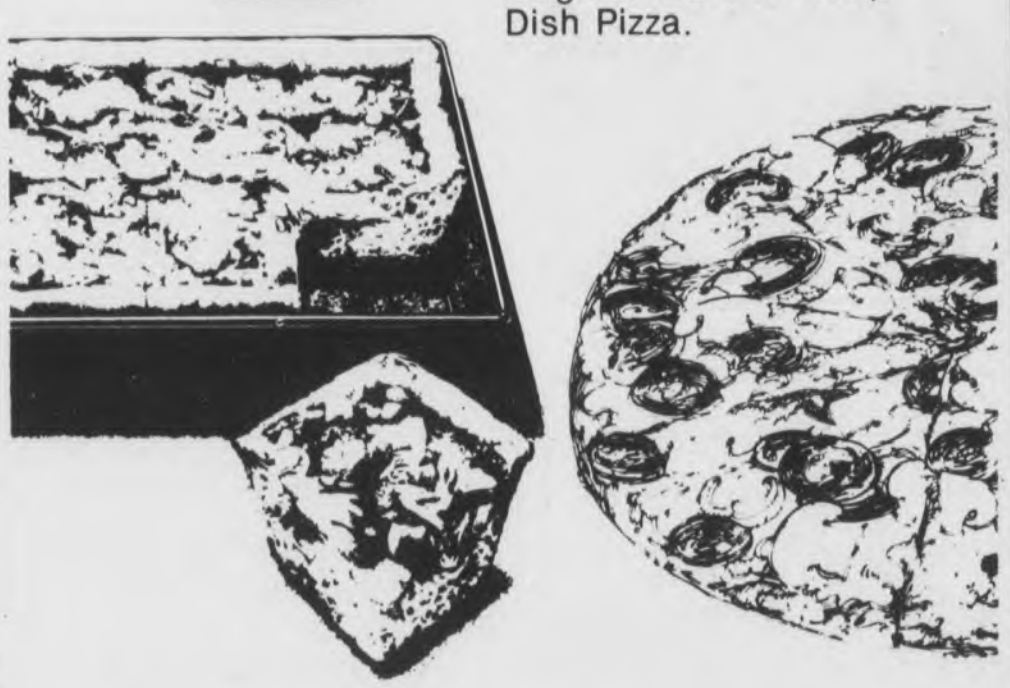
Government plans to ration gasoline are not going to solve the shortage, Robel said.

"All rationing does is spread the shortage around. All that can be done now is to conserve," he said.

Wichita protestors support Palestinians

WICHITA (AP)—About 30 students paraded peacefully in support of Palestine Thursday as former Israeli Prime Minister Yitzhak Rabin told a Wichita State University audience not to be discouraged by the present stall in Egypt-Israeli peace talks.

Rabin, delivering the first 1979 Eisenhower Lecture at the university, said peace talks cannot produce major results without active participation by Egyptian President Anwar Sadat.



Outside, some demonstrators carried signs or Palestinian flags. One placard read: "Today We Free Iran; Tomorrow We Free Palestine." "We're not objecting to Rabin himself, but we're objecting about Zionism policy—expansionism which is attacking southern Lebanon, killing people," said Nasser Nazaran, a demonstrator.

Palestinians seek settlement

OPEC brandishes 'oil weapon'

ABU DHABI, United Arab Emirates (AP)—The head of the OPEC oil cartel said Sunday that future oil sales to consumer nations should depend on whether they help bring about a Mideast settlement favorable to the Palestinians.

Mana Saeed al-Otaiba, current president of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries, brandished the Arab "oil weapon" in another way as well, threatening a "blacklisting" of foreign oil companies that have raised prices sharply because of market disruptions caused by the Iranian oil shutdown.

Meanwhile, the OPEC countries' own price boosts continued. Libya announced it is raising its prices an additional 3 percent, on top of a 5 percent hike imposed just two weeks ago.

"Countries that expect us to maintain our supplies of petroleum should help us to arrive at a rightful solution to the Palestine situation," Otaiba told the opening session of an Arab Energy Conference here.

SUCH A solution would include the "liberation of the Palestinian people and the freedom of Jerusalem," he said. Otaiba is oil minister of this Persian Gulf nation. The OPEC presidency rotates every six months.

The Arabs want an independent Palestinian state in territories now occupied by Israel and want an end to Israeli control of Jerusalem.

In late 1973 Arab states, angered over American support of Israel in the 1973 Mideast War, cut off oil shipments to the United States briefly, sending supplies plunging and prices soaring. Major American oil companies reported profits for the last quarter of 1973 up as much as 70 percent over the same period a year earlier.

Otaiba said the sharp reduction in Iran's oil output, caused by anti-government strikes, and severe winter weather in North America and Western Europe have combined to stretch oil supplies thin.

"Most of the major petroleum companies have abused the current market situation" by sharply raising prices, he said. He claimed some companies had tried to boost prices by 80 percent for refined products sold to the United Arab Emirates.

OIL-PRODUCING nations say some producers are selling oil on the short-term, or "spot" market for about $20 a 42-gallon barrel. The basic OPEC price is $13.35.

Some OPEC members have begun adding their own surcharge to the base price, claiming it is unfair for the companies to cash in on reported shortages while the OPEC countries stick by their previous prices.

Otaiba told reporters he would propose at a scheduled OPEC meeting in Geneva, Switzerland, on March 26 that the cartel "blacklist" companies capitalizing on supply problems to make excessive profits.

Low-income mothers eligible for food funds

A food program for women with low incomes who have children has been established by the Riley County Health Department.

The program is designed to help establish good eating habits and a balanced diet for infants and children.

The Women, Infant and Children (WIC) program is funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and administered by the Kansas Department of Health and Environment and the Bureau of Maternal and Child Health.

The program is under the direction of local health agencies which receive funding to provide specified nutritious foods, health services and nutrition education.

According to Bill Deam, health department administrator, WIC is a new program for Manhattan.

"Certain areas in the state are selected because of high birth rates in this area compared to birth rates in other areas in Kansas," Deam said.

Deam said Riley County was chosen because of its birth rate of 21.1 births per 1,000 people. The state's overall birth rate is 15.7 births per 1,000.

DEAM SAID program participants will receive infant formulas, cereals, fruit juices high in vitamin C, fortified milk and cheese and eggs.

He said the program participants in Kansas will use check vouchers instead of cash to purchase food from certain retail grocers who have entered into a contract with the state and local health agency.

"We are in the process of setting up contracts now," Deam said.

People who are issued vouchers can only get the commodities listed on their vouchers, he said. Eligibility for WIC is based on financial need.

ABOVE...Mitsugi Ohno, assistant instructor of physics, holds his model of the Klein bottle up to a Bunsen burner. The Klein bottle is a mathematical example of a one-sided figure on a continuous plane. The figure was once thought to be impossible to create. RIGHT...Ohno's scale model of the White House will be displayed at the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.

GLASSBLOWER

'Patience' key to obscure art

By CHRIS McKEE
Collegian Reporter

His eyes focused on the flame, Mitsugi Ohno heated the glass rod to a soft, red glow. He stretched, twisted and blew on the glass to cool it, and then returned it to the flame for more twisting.

Ohno, assistant instructor of physics at K-State, has been blowing glass for more than 40 years.

"Patience, patience," is required for the art of glass blowing, he said. Ohno is building a scale model of the White House, which will be displayed in the Smithsonian Institution in Washington, D.C.

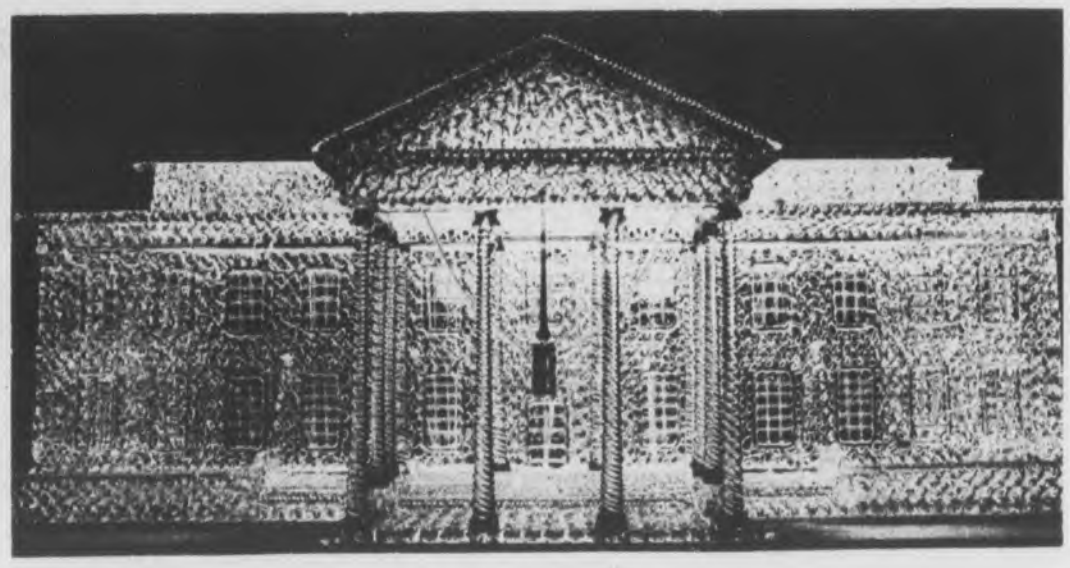
Photographs of the White House from a variety of angles helped him design the model. The White House also supplied blueprints to help him.

Ohno said he had difficulty in obtaining the documents, but Sen. Robert Dole (R-Kan.) was a "big help" in getting the information.

Ohno said he hopes to have the model completed by October—the culmination of 2,000 hours of work.

THE MAIN STRUCTURE of the White House model is a mesh of connecting glass loops delicately bonded by fire.

"It's like knitting," he said. With a miniature blowtorch he heats a glass rod until it glows and begins to flow. He moves the rod in a half circle to conect it to an adjoining piece of glass.



The miniature columns and window frames are pieces of glass twisted and stretched into spiraling rods.

Ohno said the formation of large glass models is possible because of the low thermal expansion rate and strength of Pyrex. Thousands of cracks appear in the model, he said, but they make the structure stronger.

"These cracks remove stress from the model," he said.

The American flag appears in every replica Ohno has made. He said the colored glass he uses is more expensive than ordinary glass because it contains gold.

(see GLASSBLOWER, p. 2)

Glassblower...

Ohno said he recreates models of historical objects for "the enjoyment of the public and not for money." He has never been paid for his replicas.

HIS LARGEST glass work, a replica of the United States Capitol Building, took 5,000 hours to make. It was a gift to the American people for the Bicentennial celebration and is on display at the Smithsonian Institution.

Ohno made a model of the U.S.S. Constitution which is on display at the Eisenhower Museum in Abilene. His model of Anderson Hall is on display on the first floor of the K-State Union.

Ohno displays letters from admirers of his work in his office. Letters of thanks and praise from former presidents Gerald Ford and Richard Nixon, from Mamie Eisenhower and K-State President Duane Acker are prominently displayed.

Ohno said he considers his greatest accomplishment in glass blowing to be his model of the "Klein bottle," a one-sided figure where the inside plane becomes the outside in a continuous movement of form without ever closing on itself. He said it was thought to be impossible to create the bottle.

OHNO SAID the solution to blowing the Klein bottle came to him in a dream.

"I found myself in a dream in which I had solved the problems. I got up immediately. It was 4 o'clock and I ran to the University to make the bottle," he said.

Ohno makes glassware for scientific research at the University. He came to K-State's Department of Physics in 1961 from Japan. He said he likes the United States and the response to his glasswork is encouraging.

"People that I don't even know come up to me and ask what kind of project I am going to do next. This makes me happy. I believe it is my duty that I respond to these expectations," he said.

Ohno said most people consider glass to be fragile and dangerous, but he has a special feeling for it.

"When glass breaks, the sound caused by it renders me speechless. I have been earning my living by glass blowing for 40 years," he said.

Emeritus professor dies at 88 in Illinois

Eva McMillan, 88, an emeritus associate professor of foods and nutrition at K-State, died Feb. 20 in Macomb, Ill.

McMillan joined the K-State faculty in 1930. She was promoted from instructor to assistant professor in 1937 and to associate professor in 1938.

McMillan served an an assistant dean in what is now the College of Home Economics. She retired in 1958.

She received a master's degree from the University of Chicago in 1918. Prior to joining the K-State faculty, McMillan lectured for six years at the University of Toronto.

McMillan was a member of the American and Kansas Home Economics Associations, the Kansas Academy of Science, Sigma Xi, and Phi Kappa Phi.

Puzzle lovers, bring your gnus

STAMFORD, Conn.—It was showdown time Sunday for 170 puzzle-lovers who brought their ernes, emus and gnus to a weekend crossword tournament. And the well-schooled winner turned out to be an English teacher.

Contestants from as far away as Santa Monica, Calif., and Sioux Falls, S.D., came to the Stamford Marriott Hotel to compete for two days against each other and the clock for a first prize of $250.

When the last blank square in the seventh and final puzzle had been filled in, the winner was Miriam Raphael, of Port Chester, N.Y., a teacher of English to grade school students of foreign origin.

Examples of puzzle results—of embassy vaccinations turned out to be "diplomatic immunity"; jam produced in the jungle was "wildlife preserves"; horse's financial concern was "stable economy," and football wear for a wildebeest "gnu jersey."

Spelunkers saved from watery death

LAFAYETTE, Ga.—Seven college explorers were rescued from a cave late Sunday after being trapped by floodwaters more than a 24 hours.

The seven, two women and five men from Georgia Southwestern College, walked out of the cave in Pigeon Mountain with help from rescuers, witnesses said.

All seven, including an assistant professor who led the group, were taken to a hospital in Fort Oglethorpe, Ga., for examination, Walker County sheriff's deputies said.

The party entered the cave about 11 a.m. Saturday, and were trapped when heavy rain blocked off a passageway about six hours later.

Old deserters never die, just fade away

WASHINGTON—The amnesty that President Carter granted to draft evaders and some deserters from the Vietnam war era when he took office has quietly faded into history with officials not even bothering anymore to keep track of those who returned.

The Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS) stopped keeping records on returning draft dodgers and deserters last June 1.

"It had become a trickle at that point and it was never very large," said Vern Jervis, a spokesman for the INS, in an interview last week.

According to INS figures, 381 individuals returned to this country from Jan. 21, 1977, after Carter declared the amnesty, until the record-keeping stopped. Only 114 men said they intended to stay in the United States while the remaining 267 said they just intended to visit.

Chinese army promises withdrawal

BANGKOK, Thailand—China reportedly told foreign diplomats Sunday it will withdraw from Vietnam as soon as possible, but Hanoi said Chinese troops had launched new attacks and "fierce battles" were raging near the captured Vietnamese town of Lang Son.

A Japanese Foreign Ministry spokesman in Tokyo said Chinese Foreign Minister Huang Hua told Japanese Ambassador Shoji Sato in Peking that the withdrawals would take place but did not say when.

Japan's Kyodo news service quoted Chinese Vice Premier LiHsien-nien as saying, "We have already decided to withdraw from Vietnam. Our purpose has been almost achieved." He did not elaborate.

The official Vietnam News Agency (VNA) said six Chinese divisions—60,000 men—and hundreds of artillery pieces and tanks had launched new attacks around Lang Son. The Soviet news agency Tass quoted VNA as saying the Chinese were suffering heavy losses.

Western intelligence sources confirmed earlier that Lang Son, a provincial capital 11 miles inside Vietnam, had fallen to the Chinese. Analysts say its capture might be the major blow the Chinese hoped to strike before pulling back across the border.

The Chinese said from the outset that they sought only to "punish" Vietnam for alleged provocations and did not plan a protracted war. Despite Western intelligence reports to the contrary, China claims that main-force Vietnamese army units have been badly battered in the fighting. After pulling out, Peking might point to this as another "punishment" inflicted on Vietnam.

Opinions

Operating on ignorance

Finally, after years of deafness on the part of the federal Atomic Energy Commission (AEC), the local police, the FBI and just about everyone, an operation is scheduled—one that will make them listen.

A court is preparing to consider a lawsuit charging the Kerr-McGee Corporation with negilence by failing to contain plutonium at an Oklahoma plant.

Karen Silkwood was one of many Kerr-McGee employees who were concerned about the accidents at the plant, the insufficent training given the workers, the lack of adequate storage for the highly-toxic carcinogenic plutonium. Instead of quitting and adding to the already high turnover at the plant, Silkwood worked to improve the conditions.

It started with strikes and went to union bargaining and ended with Silkwood documenting abuses at the plant.

The workers weren't trying to close the plant, many of them were trained techinicians who believed in nuclear power, at first.

But as accidents increased, contaminating 73 workers and a local resturant, Silkwood became more and more disillusioned.

Silkwood was contaminated, once, when plutonium was released and she wasn't wearing a face guard (she waited over a year for the company to purchase one to fit her), and later, when she discovered plutonium on cheese and bologna in her refrigerator after she had started documenting the accidents.

Silkwood died in 1974 when her car went off the road as she was on the way to give a New York Times reporter the information she had documented. Although there is speculation that she could have fallen asleep at the wheel after taking a sleeping pill, there is evidence that her car was hit by another before it went off the road.

Even more interesting is the disappearance of the papers documenting negligence at the plant. A policeman at the accident remembered picking up loose papers and putting them in her car after the accident. Hours later, they were missing.

During all this the AEC did nothing about the stories which were filtering in. The AEC was in the awkward position of promoting and regulating the same industry—nuclear power production.

Since Silkwood's death, nuclear power opponents have used Silkwood's investigation and death to warn the public of the dangers of nuclear power. It took a bunch of amateurs to restore the ability to listen to these questions, even though experts were available.

There were plenty of experts who could, and should, have called attention to the safety problems, but they considered the operation too risky—too risky to the nuclear power companies and the agency set up to regulate them.

This lawsuit won't consider the circumstances of Silkwood's death, nor, vowed the judge, will it be a forum for nuclear proponents and opponents.

The lawsuit will deal with the plutonium discovered in Silkwood's apartment, but there is no way the case will be an isolated incident.

The implications surrounding Silkwood's possible contamination and death have been furious cries, but everyone was too deaf to listen.

This court case is the operation needed to restore their hearing.

Students head for 'Peel City'

The exodus is about to begin. Spring fever has sprung and as the week progresses, classes will slowly dwindle down to a faithful few.

Where are the masses migrating to? Like geese in the autumn, they're flying, driving, walking or hitching South. As the days lengthen, a new god arises to be worshipped by all—the SUN.

Padre Island, Corpus Christi, Mexico and Arizona will soon be flooded with K-Staters equipped with baby oil, tanning lotion, moisturizers and cold cream. Bodies as far as the eye can see will be char-broiling their skin to become that voguish brown shade.

The pain of overdoing and the embarrassing color of lobster red must be endured to assure the final result will cause plenty of comment and envy back at school.

There will be a desperate few who must stay behind to keep winter company. Some will break out their sun lamps while hundreds of others will walk around with orange palms from overdoing the QT or Sudden Tan.

A FEW will even brave the cold Kansas March winds and lay outside, surrounded by their reflectors while trying to capture the light bouncing off the snow. Some will acquire the desired but faint strap lines. Others may only tan their goose bumps.

The students left behind in Kansas will pray for snow, floods and hurricanes to stike all sun spots in the southern states.

I succumbed to ths mystifying fever last year. I journeyed to Arizona with a sole purpose in mind—getting a tan. I was out in the sun from dawn to dusk, bathing my body with oil and Vaseline. I suffered through two sleepless nights and braless days with an unbecoming painful pink coloring.

The end result (after days of constantly salving hand lotion and Noxema on my tortured skin) was a beautiful brown tan. People stopped me to ask where I'd been and I proudly showed off my tan and replied—Tucson. This lasted for about a week; then it was Peel City.

I will be among those envying others who had the chance and the money to get out of this snow hole when March 19th rolls around. Monday, following the break, will find numerous skimpy t-shirts and shorts on campus filled with gyrating bodies vying for the opportunity to display their glistening brown skin.

Even with my white body and pale face, people will ask me where I escaped to over spring break—snickering behind a facade of interest because from the tint of my skin they know I didn't go anywhere.

Where did I go? Oh, just skiing.

Wine fan drinks to biblical brew

Editor,

I'd like to address Jef Pekham who made the statement that wine in biblical times contained far less alcohol than today's wine.

I, along with hundreds of others, have been making wine for home consumption for many years. Wine that is allowed to ferment naturally usually obtains an alcohol content of about 15 percent. This is greater than the average commercial wine today. (Barring fortified wines.)

Wine needs only about 12 percent alcohol to keep it from spoiling so the wineries stop the fermentation at this point for economic and product reasons.

Besides, wine was healthier to drink than water in those times and as a wine lover—"I drink to that."

Voyager's encounters get close to Jupiter

PASADENA, Calif. (AP) — Voyager 1, which has already delighted and startled scientists with undreamed-of details of Jupiter, was unveiling new secrets Sunday as it raced to its historic encounter with the mysterious planet.

The unmanned spacecraft, launched in September 1977, passed within 173,000 miles of Jupiter's colorful, churning clouds early today.

Excited scientists at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory say the ship's high-resolution cameras will let them see features as small as five miles across in the dense clouds that make up Jupiter's visible surface.

Then the Voyager, flying about 81,000 miles per hour, will examine three of Jupiter's curious moons before starting a 20-month cruise to distant Saturn as the Nationl Aeronautics and Space Administration mission continues. A sistership, Voyager 2, has a similar itinerary. It's due at Jupiter in July and at Saturn in 1981.

THE VOYAGERS are following a trail blazed by two earlier American spacecraft. Pioneer 10 and 11 reconnoitered Jupiter in 1973 and 1974. One of them, Pioneer 11, will be Earth's first emissary to Saturn this September.

Voyager 1's television eyes were opened in January and its pictures of Jupiter have become increasingly spectacular as it races toward the largest planet in the solar system.

Jupiter, encircled by light and dark belts, looks in Voyager's recent pictures like a widly decorated birthday cake. Orange, tan, brown and white waves and streamers swirl within the belts and curious spots drift over the surface.

THE APPROACH pictures revealed a dazzling and unsuspected complexity in the thick Jovian clouds. NASA officials used the pictures to identify particularly intriguing television targets for the close encounter, project scientist Edward Stone said.

A prime target for the cameras will be the famous Great Red Spot, a dark orange oval about 13,000 miles long and 7,000 miles wide that lies south of the Jovian equator.

Time-lapse pictures, compiled into a moving picture, show the spot whirling counter-clockwise like a gigantic hurricane that's lasted at least 300 years. The violent vortex occasionally sucks up smaller features, churns them around and spits them out.

BUNNY BALL...Julia Davis, senior in pre-law, discusses last minute arrangements before 1979's Playboy was chosen at the Delta Sigma Theta Playboy Bunny Ball Saturday night.

Playboy of the year named at 7th Playboy Bunny Ball

By JACKIE MARTIN
Collegian Reporter

Shimmering decorations, soft lights and bunnies were part of the festivities as Delta Sigma Theta sorority sponsored its seventh annual "Playboy Bunny Ball" in the K-State Union Ballroom Saturday night.

Proceeds from the ball will provide a scholarship for a student with financial need and academic potential, said Cynthia Doss, president of the sorority and senior in political science and pre-law.

The main attraction of the ball was a ceremony selecting the Delta Playboy for 1979.

As part of the ceremony, six sorority members, dressed in chic black bunny suits and velveteen jackets with snowy white bunny tails and thin sheer black stockings, served as escorts for the six candidates.

The Playboy candidates were selected on the basis of community and campus involvement and academic endeavors.

Marc Blanchard, freshman in architectural engineering, was named Delta Sigma Theta Playboy for 1979.

Doss and Lee Willis, 1978 Playboy and junior in mechanical engineering, served as emcees for the ceremony.

The Delta Playboy attends Delta functions and works with the sorority in service projects, Doss said.

One service project participated in by Willis was the Beauty and the Beast contest. Willis and his partner, Gwendolyn Macon, senior in physical education and a member of the sorority, were awarded the prize for best-dressed couple in the competition. The money collected from the contest was donated to the Big Brother-Big Sister organization.

Nuclear power martyr? Silkwood case to trial

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP)—Jury selection begins Monday in the trial of an $11.5 million lawsuit alleging that nuclear worker Karen Silkwood was contaminated with plutonium as a result of negligence by the Kerr-McGee Corp.

The case has drawn national attention and Silkwood, who was killed in a car wreck in 1974, has become somewhat of a martyr to some opponents of nuclear power.

Relatives of Silkwood, who was 28 when she died, filed the lawsuit in U.S. District Court.

The lawyers say that since Silkwood was active in the Oil, Chemical and Atomic Workers Union, the plutonium contamination of her apartment may have been caused intentionally by Kerr-McGee. The company has repeatedly denied the allegation.

The young woman was an employee at the now closed Kerr-McGee nuclear fuel rod manufacturing facility near Crescent at the time of her death. The rods are used in nuclear reactors.

Kerr-McGee attorneys have argued that any personal injury Silkwood sustained was caused by her own negligence and she may have smuggled plutonium from the plant and contaminated herself to dramatize her allegations that the plant was unsafe.

SILKWOOD was killed in a one-vehicle car wreck on Nov. 13, 1974. At the time of the wreck, she was reportedly en route to meet a New York Times reporter to discuss alleged safety problems at the Kerr-McGee nuclear plant.

Silkwood attorneys have alleged that the documents the woman was planning to show to the reporter disappeared from her auto. They also have said that Kerr-McGee may have contaminated Silkwood's apartment with plutonium as an excuse to enter and search for the documents before her death.

A day before her fatal accident, Silkwood returned to Oklahoma from government laboratories in Los Alamos, N.M., where it was confirmed she was internally contaminated with plutonium.

Congress organizes support for Taiwan

WASHINGTON (AP)—Opponents of President Carter's China policy are mounting efforts to win Senate and House approval this week of stronger U.S. defense and diplomatic ties with Taiwan than the president contemplates.

The Senate is to start work Tuesday and the House Thursday on bills that would declare any forceful Peking takeover of Taiwan a threat to peace in the Pacific and "of grave concern to the United States."

Opponents of Carter's policy in both chambers have amendments raising the threat of U.S. military assistance for Taiwan if Peking tries to take it over.

They also will try to win a government-level U.S. liaison office for Taiwan, which is opposed by both Carter and Peking.

Chinese Vice Premier Teng Hsiao-ping told Congress members in January that would violate the new accord under which America recognizes Peking as China's only government.

Bills in both chambers instead would create a non-governmental agency, as Carter wants, to take over most duties of the U.S. embassy that closed down in Taiwan Thursday.

AN AMENDMENT by Sen. Jesse Helms (R-N.C.) would declare any Peking force against Taiwan to be a threat to U.S. security and promise that "the United States will resist any resort to force."

The bill put before the Senate by its Foreign Relations Committee says more cautiously that America "will maintain its capacity to resist" such force.

Helms' amendment also would promise Taiwan U.S. anti-ship missiles, planes and anti-submarine weapons to defend itself against attack or economic blockade from Peking.

On the House side, Rep. Robert Bauman (R-Md.) says he may try to win a flat commitment of U.S. military support for Taiwan if Peking tries to take it over.

But aides organizing the House opposition to Carter's policy say they think the best they could win is a declaration similar to Helms' that Peking force against Taiwan would threaten U.S. security interests.

OU Wins Big 8 — Sooner and later

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—"Basketball sure has changed at OU."

In one sentence, Clifford Ray, former Oklahoma center now playing for the Golden State Warriors, summed up the amazing Sooners—the Big 8 regular season and post-season tournament champions.

Oklahoma's convincing victory over Kansas Saturday night in Kemper Arena completed Oklahoma basketball's metamorphosis from its former role as something to do between fall and spring football in Norman.

Sports

"K-State's goin' home now. Their season's over!"

Again in one sentence, OU substitute Kyle Dodd captured the frustration of the Wildcats' loss to Oklahoma Friday night. The 'Cats fourth loss to the Sooners this year eliminated them from the tournament and ended their 1978-79 season.

Oklahoma's march to the tourney championship began Friday night with a 72-68 victory over K-State and ended Saturday night when they crushed KU 80-65 to earn an automatic berth in the NCAA second-round game in Dallas, Texas.

FRIDAY NIGHT, the game started like a replay of the Sooner win over K-State in Norman. Both teams opened with poor shooting luck, but Oklahoma began to pull away.

The 'Cats fought back to lead at halftime on the unlikely heroics of Dean Danner, who hit four of five in the first half. But, the Sooners' shooting, ball-handling and poise were too much to handle in the second half.

"We gave it a heck of an effort," Coach Jack Hartman said.

Al Beal led Oklahoma's balanced scoring with 17 points. He was a terror inside, intimidating the K-State players on defense and playing head-and-shoulders above K-State on offense. He had five slam dunks and was fouled on three of them.

"(Beal) has improved more in the course of this season than any player I've ever coached," Oklahoma Coach Dave Bliss said. "It's beyond me how you guys (writers and broadcasters) could leave him off the All-Big 8 team."

K-STATE'S man-to-man defense fell victim to repeated attacks by Oklahoma's Ray Whitley (12 points), Aaron Curry (13 points), Terry Stotts (12 points) and John McCullough (16 points).

K-State led 66-65 with 3:37 left, but only scored two more points while the Sooners were hot, hitting seven more.

The coup de grace came on Beal's slam dunk at the 1:37 mark which put Oklahoma ahead by three points.

The desperation of the K-State fans was capsulized by one who yelled "God Almighty, (referee Kent) Kurtz! Give us one call, just one call!" in pleading for a Beal foul on Soldner's last-second rebound.

In the first game Friday night, KU earned its way into the finals by beatng Missouri 76-73. Paul Mokeski and Darnell Valentine had 19 points apiece for the Jayhawks.

But, KU then felt the frustration of playing Oklahoma's hot-shooting Sooners.

THE JAYHAWKS only trailed by four at halftime, although they were shooting 34 percent to Oklahoma's 53 percent. However, KU came out in the second half and shot only 33 percent.

Beal was nothing short of incredible. He had 23 points and 22 rebounds, playing against the 7-1 Mokeski.

"He's a real threat inside, especially defensively," Mokeski said of Beal, the tournament's Most Valuable Player.

The Sooners shot 52.2 percent for the game, including Beal's nine of 13, Ray Whitley's 10 of 17 for 22 points and Cary Carrabine's six of six.

The post-season tournament was icing on the cake of Oklahoma's first Big 8 season championship in 30 years, Bliss said.

'Cats claim fourth in nation; Big 8 dominates track meet

When Barry Anderson, K-State women's track coach, says "There's not a lot of teams in the nation any better than the Wildcats," he's not just talking off the top of his head.

The 'Cats fourth-place performance over 25 teams at the Missouri National Indoor Track and Field Invitational in Columbia last weekend proved the coach's words to be true.

"I think second in the Big 8 and fourth in the nation is pretty good and I'm very pleased," Anderson said. "I think this is the best indoor season we've ever had."

With six American indoor records set during the weekend competition, which Iowa State won, the coach has a right to be pleased.

"We had some girls who didn't place, but they did reallly well with the kind of competition that was there," he said.

Before the meet, Anderson said he thought his team might place in the top 10, but the thought of placing sixth as it did last year was "out of the question." He attributed the surprise finish to the team's extra hard work during the past two months.

ALTHOUGH K-State didn't win any championships, the 'Cats placed in several events.

While senior Renee Urish placed third in the mile run, Wanda Trent, a junior, finished fourth in the 600-yard dash with a personal best of 1:22.98 and anchored K-State's second placed mile relay. Also running in the mile relay were Lorraine Davidson, Leesa Wallace and Freda Hancock.

Hancock also placed eighth in the 60-yard dash and Janel LeValley took fourth in the 1,000-yard run.

In addition to his team's effort, Anderson said he was proud of the Big 8 conference's showing at the meet. Four Big 8 schools placed in the top six.

"When you get into a meet where six American records are set you know the competition is tough," he said. "That just shows that what this conference's coaches have been saying is true—the Big 8 is probably the toughest in the nation."

Hanf treks alone to NCAA

Four K-State men's track members qualified for the NCAA indoor championships this season, but sophomore Ray Hanf will travel alone to the national meet in Detroit, Mich. next weekend.

Bill Tanner, Vince Parrette and Doug Knauss also qualified, but a foot injury and two pulled hamstrings will prevent the trio from competing in the nationals.

During the KSU Indoor Invitational Saturday in Ahearn Field House, the K-State track team failed in its final attempt to qualify anyone else for the national meet. The invitational primarily served as a qualifying meet and a final chance for competition before the nationals, Mike Ross, K-State men's head track coach, said.

K-State's Tim Davis and Ray Bradley were thought to have a good chance to qualify, but both narrowly missed the necessary marks.

DAVIS finished first in the 1,000-yard run with 2:11.6, but needed 2:10.3 to earn a trip to nationals.

Bradley tossed his longest shot put of the season, but his 58-9½ attempt fell seven and a half inches short of the needed distance.

Two runners set fieldhouse records while qualifying for nationals.

Stan Whitaker of Kansas broke Hanf's record in the 440-yard dash with a time of 47.9 seconds, while Mike Spillsbury of Colorado, the Big 8 two-mile champion, set a new three-mile record with a time of 13:34.9 minutes.

Akers nominated for coach's award

K-State coach Judy Akers is one of 20 nominees for the country's outstanding women's collegiate basketball coach award.

The winner will be honored April 2 at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York at the second annual Stayfree Coach of the Year Awards.

The 1978 Coach of the Year in the large college divsion was UCLA's coach Billie Moore, originally from Westmoreland.

In addititon to the Coach of the Year award, the Wade Trophy for the outstanding junior or senior women's player in the country will be presented April 2. A panel of 100 coaches chooses the Wade Trophy winner.

ORU chills women's tennis team

In a chilly dual match, the K-State women's tennis team lost to Oral Roberts University 6-2 in Tulsa, Okla. Saturday.

Although they usually play nine matches, the last doubles match was cancelled because of the 34 degree weather, Coach David Hacker said.

The two K-State winners were No. 5 Brenda Bennett, who defeated Ruth Hopkins 4-6, 6-1, 6-3 and No. 6 Emily Cohn, who defeated Vicky Miller 6-2, 6-3.

"ORU has a tough team," Hacker said. "Its top two players are Australian, and among the top women college tennis players in the country."

The team leaves Sunday for a spring break trip. They play duals against Illinois in Champaign-Urbana March 12, Wisconsin in Madison March 14, Iowa State in Ames March 15 and Nebraska in Lincoln March 16.

Music, storytelling make show a success

By SALLIE HOFMEISTER
Collegian Reviewer

The Bill Haymes poster described him as an "Easy going folk musician," and with due cause, but concert-goers who battled the rain to hear his Friday-evening performance received a bonus. Haymes entertained the Catskeller audience as much with his witty, energetic personality as with his instruments and song.

Fred Schmidt and Skip Brod, a student musical team from K-State, opened the Haymes concert, sponsored by the Union Coffeehouse Committee. Brod, a graduate student in animal science, sang and displayed competency on the guitar, while Schmidt, senior in architecture, vocalized, blending well with Brod's voice. The duo appropiately set the mood for Haymes.

Haymes, from Little Rock, Ark., highlighted the show with spontenaity, sandwiching outlandish tales between each song.

Besides his comedy act, Haymes also provided a hodgepodge of music on guitar, mandolin and piano. The first set, mostly on guitar was widely varied. The pace changed from slow to fast and there were no monotones in his concert because either the tempo of the song changed or Haymes' vocal tone did.

HAYMES USED used his voice as an instrument of contrast, varying volume and tone to enhance each song, and revealing much emotion.

He also exhibited colorful guitar riffs, his fingers traveling up and down the frets. He used the full scale of notes, mingling fingerpicking and strumming techniques, volumes, tones and offering some lively guitar playing.

Imagery was also a favorite Haymes technique. In "Morning Breeze" dawn mist seemed to fall down on a dock awaiting the arrival of a riverboat. Later, a piano piece titled "Summer Shower" created the sensation of a light rain storm, making smooth transitions between the drizzle, the shower and the lightning.

Haymes was flexible and expressive on the piano. He tickled the keys with ragtime, geared down to plunk a Taj Mahal blues number and then disciplined his fingers for Rachmaninoff's "Prelude in C Sharp Minor."

He bade farewell with "Goodnight Irene," which he eventually transposed into a thank you to the committee.

Haymes is an open, personable musician who offers his audience his good nature, as well as his artistic prowess.

City primary Tuesday for Manhattan voters

By JEFF MYRICK
Collegian Reporter

Downtown revitalization is a key issue of the three candidates in Tuesday's Manhattan City Commission primary election.

The election is for those candidates seeking to fill the unexpired term of former City Commissioner Robert Smith. When Smith resigned last year, Ed Horne was appointed to fill the position until the vacancy could be filled in the next election.

The general election April 3 will determine who will fill the four of five City Commission seats that will be vacated. The primary election will eliminate one of the canditates for Smith's seat. No primary election is needed for the three other vacant seats on the commission.

The two candidates who receive the most votes in the general election will hold four-year terms, while the candidate with the third most votes will hold Smith's unexpired two-year term.

The new commissioners will take office on April 17, earning $100 annually. The commission meets on the first and third Tuesdays of the month in City Hall, with "work sessions" on off Tuesdays. All registered voters in the city limits of Manhattan are eligible to vote in Tuesday's primary election.

THE SEVEN candidates for the general election were at Reynard's restaurant Friday to discuss issues at the Council of Social Agencies' monthly meeting.

The major issue dealt with was the city's attempt to revitalize the downtown area. All the candidates were in favor of renovation and agreed that one of the major needs for revitalization is strong backing from the private sector.

One of the candidates in the special primary, Chris Curtain, said, "I'm a native Kansan who moved here seven years ago to go to school. I got into real estate after graduation.

"I'm very interested in growth. I'm interested in our bringing new industry to Manhattan which I think will help people in this group (members of the Council of Social Agencies) by providing new and better jobs to the people of Manhattan.

"The revitalization of downtown is a particularly important issue and I think the whole question of 'Do we need to do something about the downtown area?' becomes two big questions of how much and what we want to do. By this, I mean do we want to expand or renovate," Curtain said.

"The main reason I'm running," said R.J. Dickens, another candidate in the special primary, "is that Manhattan is a city of involvement and I want to be a part of that involvement."

A LIFE-LONG resident of Manhattan, Dickens is making his second try at the commission; he ran as a write-in candidate in 1975. He said he is for greater access to commission meetings and better communication among the city staff.

"I don't think there is any question that we need a strong downtown area," Dickens said. He said he is for strong private funding of the project and wants to see the Boulder consulting firm's findings on the downtown area before making any definite plans for renovation.

Wanda Fately, the third candidate for the seat vacated by Smith, recalled her experiences as a student wife in 1953 and 1955.

"I can remember how hard it was to find affordable housing and I can remember how hard it was to find a job, and it seems to me that those two things haven't changed that much," she said. "I certainly favor keeping the downtown strong. Private investment would have to be greater than public investment."

Candidates in attendance running for the other commission seats to be determined in the general election were Dr. Eugene Klingler, Joe Rippetoe and incumbent City Commissioners Russell Reitz and Horne.

Nun preaches power as way to strengthen farm industry

By ELLEN STERNER
Collegian Reporter

On the center platform raised above hay and dirt the holy word was given to the farmer.

Sister Thomas More Bertels, professor of history at Silver Lake College and representative of Wisconsin Women for Agriculture, spoke Friday in Weber Arena as part of the 66th Annual Cattlemen's Day.

The farmer and his entrepreneurial teams are what makes the farm functionable, she said. An entrepreneur is one who takes initiative in combining the resources of land, capital and labor in production of foods or services, she said.

Children are as much a part of the team as anyone, she said; of all farm employees, more than two million are unpaid family members.

A FARM OFFERS a person the opportunity to be the best he can be with a lifestyle of freedom, responsibility and self accountability, Bertels said.

"In order to have a strong entrepreneurial team every member must be a strong individual," she said. Each individual must learn to gain and use power in making farming a real business.

"Farming must become a real business, involving research, promotion and even public relations," Bertels said.

It is not only the power to produce food and fiber, she said. The economics and ability to manage supply are also a vital part of the farming business.

"Abuse of power is wrong but it also is a sin to not use your power to build up the farming industry," she said.

Christ and twelve guys, not one of them a prize, she said, were on the earth thirty years. In those thirty years, they organized a power base to make their words spread even to this day.

"Power will not come to you as an act of charity," Bertels said.

To become a real business and match up to the others in the system, it is going to take a great deal of togetherness, and not just a lot of talking, she said.

Audubon Society shocked

Scowl hits new KP&L proposal

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

The conflict between the National Audubon Society and the Kansas Power and Light Company (KP&L) over proposed high voltage power lines in the Flint Hills has not been resolved, despite KP&L's announcement of a change in the lines' route.

Ron Klataske, west central regional representative of the National Audubon Society, said Monday he will object to KP&L's alternative proposal of the power line location that will connect Jeffrey Energy Center near St. Marys with the substation in Council Grove.

KP&L decided to make the change after the Audubon Society objected last fall to the original route, because it would have run across land slated for possible use as a tallgrass prairie national park.

Klataske said although the new route proposed by KP&L was better than the original path, it still didn't meet favorably with the society.

"We will have no choice but to object to that route," Klataske said.

He said he will respond formally next week to the proposal KP&L made last Thursday in Alma before about 300 area residents.

The KP&L representatives went to Alma to meet with members of the Mill Creek Watershed Joint District No. 85 to discuss the impact the new route would have on watershed projects.

According to Verne Claussen, watershed chairman, the route would not conflict with the district's watershed projects.

The 345 kilovolt power lines will cross two proposed projects; one west of Randolph and one near the southern border of Wabaunsee County, but Claussen said he received assurances from KP&L the lines over the water would conform to state height requirements.

THE ORIGINAL route was to run from the energy center and through a portion of the Flint Hills earmarked by the society for preservation as an example of rare tallgrass prairie.

The new route will run from the energy center to about five miles east of Wabaunsee where the deviation from the original path begins. The line will run east of Alma, then parallel Highway 99 for about 10 miles. The amended line will rejoin the original route about eight miles southeast of Alta Vista.

Klataske said his response to the new route will include objections to the proposal and suggestions that KP&L include public input in its considerations for power line routes.

The society objected to the original proposal because it would mar the preserve's scenery with its 110-foot-high, 54-foot-wide power lines.

"It goes through one of the more scenic, pastoral areas with many small farms, stone buildings, rock walls and deep valleys, Klataske said. "I wouldn't want to see the line there."

"At the present time, transmission line routing is left up to the discretion of utility engineers and administrators," he told the Kansas Legislature Feb. 20 in a House Energy and Natural Resources Committee hearing. "The public has no voice in the decision-making process."

He said plans for the power line route were made as early as October 1976 and equipment and materials were moved into the area, but people were not aware of the plans until late last year.

KP&L DECIDED to change the controversial section after talks with the Audubon Society in October. Klataske said, however, the society doesn't want to be burdened with the responsibility of having the route changed.

He said the society doesn't want to endorse any particular route but wants to suggest guidelines that power companies can use when they consider power line routes.

One suggestion Klataske made was to use corridors where many lines may run instead of spreading them throughout the state. He said the proposed route to Council Grove could be combined with one running through Osage County, thus bypassing the area marked for preservation by the Audubon Society.

Vote today

Primary elections for seats on the City Commission and the USD 383 Board of Education are today from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m.

Voting in the City Commission election is restricted to those residing within the city limits. All Riley County voters, including those who vote in the Board of Education primary, will vote in their usual precincts and township polling places.

School district residents who live outside of the county may vote in one of two polling places: Woodrow Wilson School at 6th and Leavenworth streets; and Brooks Yamaha at U.S. 24 and Enoch Road.

Peking claims withdrawal; Hanoi says fighting continues

BANGKOK, Thailand (AP)—China said Monday it was withdrawing its invasion army from Vietnam after a bloody 16-day war of "punishment," but Hanoi claimed the fighting was actually escalating and ordered a general mobilization "for national salvation."

Peking's official news agency said Chinese troops began pulling out Monday after achieving their goal of "dealing devastating blows to Vietnamese armed forces." It warned Vietnam against new border provocations.

Several hours later, the newspaper of the Vietnamese Communist Party said the Chinese announcement "is contrary to the real situation in the battlefields."

China "is stepping up its aggression, and its troops are frantically destroying Vietnamese villages," the paper Nhan Dan said in a commentary reported by the Vietnamese News Agency.

IT SAID Vietnamese President Ton Duc Thang signed a general mobilization decree Monday instructing all miltary-age citizens to join the armed forces. "All necessary manpower, material and financial resources shall be mobilized to meet the needs of war for national salvation," it said.

The Japanese Embassy in Hanoi said Vietnamese officials had instructed it to prepare airraid shelters for its personnel, Japan's Kyodo news service reported.

Intelligence sources in Bangkok said Monday they had no evidence of a Chinese pull-out or signs that the Chinese were preparing new attacks. But the reports by these sources have lagged behind events throughout the largely secret war.

SOME OBSERVERS said the Chinese troops might be following a "scorched-earth" policy in withdrawing from Vietnam, and this could be the 'stepped-up aggression" the Vietnamese reported. Others noted it was likely the fighting would not end abruptly but would wind down to small-scale border skirmishing.

Even if a Chinese withdrawal takes place, it will not end the tensions in Southeast Asia. Vietnam's rebel proteges Monday scored a new victory in Cambodia against Chinesebacked guerrillas, and the fighting there moved closer to the Thailand border.

In announcing the pull-out, China's official Hsinhua news agency called on "peace-loving" nations to "urge the Vietnamese authorities to stop promptly their aggression against Cambodia and withdraw all their forces of invasion."

The Hsinhua statement also warned that China reserves the right "to strike back again in self-defense" if the Vietnamese resume border provocations against China. When it sent its troops storming across the Vietnamese frontier Feb. 17, Peking said it was "punishing" Hanoi for border incidents.

A Vietnam radio broadcast Monday said China's leaders "failed in their large-scale invasion to teach Vietnam a lesson and could not fulfill their expansionist aims."

THE HSINHUA announcement called for immediate talks between the two countries "to discuss ways on ensuring peace and tranquility...and then proceed to settle the boundary and territorial disputes."

Reports from Peking quoting unidentified Chinese officials have indicated that China may hold on to some disputed territory previously controlled by the Vietnamese. One report said it involves less than 40 square miles scattered along the 700-mile border.

The Vietnamese newspaper report Monday said that in some border areas seized by the Chinese troops "they built Chinese-style houses and flew the Chinese flag in an attempt to permanently occupy the area."

The Soviet news agency Tass said the Peking announcement "confirms that China continues to covet Vietnamese lands." Moscow has repeatedly warned China to pull out of Soviet-allied Vietnam but has not threatened any specific reprisal.

Administrative problems takes the peace out of Peace Corps

By SUE FREIDENBERGER
Staff Writer

Recent conflicts between Peace Corps and ACTION adminstrators may result in changes in the direction of programming, and basic philosophies of the Corps, according to Bill Myer, four-state regional Corps director.

Myer, who is on campus today recruiting volunteers, said the November resignation of the Peace Corps' national director, Carolyn Payton and the ensuing search for a new director has caused "chaos" at the regional level.

"We (the regional directors) are a little insecure. We don't know what will be coming at us in the next year," he said.

Though the changes have caused problems at higher levels, Peace Corps volunteers are relatively unaffected, Myer said.

"The political decisions made by the president and Congress and the administrative changes rarely affect the volunteer 6,000 miles away," he said.

Myer said potential volunteers have expressed concern about the changes.

"Some (applicants) ask me about the things they're reading in the papers and how they will affect them if they join," he said.

ALTHOUGH THE changes in Corps administration have been relatively major ones, Myer said they were not unusual.

"With every new administration and Congress come changes," he said.

The changes don't affect the basic goal of the volunteers—dealing with the necessities of life for people in developing countries, Myer said.

"We still have the same ideals about the Peace Corps we've always had, in spite of administrative changes. Our concerns are still family, food, health and education," he said.

Though the Peace Corps has been relatively low-profile in the '70s, volunteer experience is as important as ever, he said.

"Our culture has changed drastically in the last decade," he said, "but the attitudes, beliefs and ideals of volunteers have remained the same.

"The volunteer experience is still as valid, necessary and effective as ever—maybe even more so."

One of the reasons for the effectiveness of the volunteer service, Myer said, is the make-up of the staffs. Many staff members are former volunteers. They are good consultants, and act as guides in training and helping volunteers after they are placed in a country.

MYER SAID he believes the Peace Corps is putting less emphasis on recruiting volunteers with technical backgrounds.

"We won't turn down any applicant, whether he has a degree in mechanical engineering or not, but we feel the Corps is moving more towards an emphasis on the culture aspects.

"We are always trying to stay on the basic level—providing people with the knowledge to survive. We are looking for volunteers with general interests, social capabilities. It also helps if they're good scroungers."

Although many areas are filled by volunteers each year, some fields remain unfilled.

"In agriculture, for instance, we usually only get two-thirds the amount of volunteers we need," he said.

Myer said Vista and the Peace Corps usually get about 70 volunteer applications from K-State a year.

The Peace Corps has always represented a kind of humane idealism for Americans, Myer said.

"Idealistically, the Peace Corps people like to think they are not a political force," he said. "But, being a federal agency, that isn't possible.

"Our purpose is not to make countries dependent on us. We can ship tractors somewhere, but where do they go when those tractors break down—to us."

Myer said he thinks it is unfortunate that foreign aid can make countries dependent on the United States.

"The old phrase is still true," he said, "we don't want to give someone a fish every day, we want to teach them to fish for themselves."

Blasts appear aimed at construction firm

ST. JOSEPH, Mo. (AP)—Police and federal agents combed the debris of two explosions that occurred early Monday in St. Joseph and were apparently aimed at a local construction company.

The blasts appeared to be related and probably were caused by dynamite, authorities said.

The first explosion occurred around midnight in a crane parked downtown. The crane, owned by Bob Madget Inc. construction, was heavily damaged. Two hours later a blast at the firm's offices in an industrial area near downtown left a large hole in a wall and broke windows.

Federal agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms have entered the investigation.

Iranian oil begins to flow...

TEHRAN, Iran—Iran started supplying the world's hungry oil market for the first time in 10 weeks Monday with a shipment of crude oil bound for Japan.

"The days when foreign tankers could come to Iranian ports and load as much oil as they wanted, under prices and conditions dictated by them, are over," said Hassan Nazih, the new managing director of Iran's state-owned National Iranian Oil Co. "We will export only enough to meet our financial needs."

To the cheers and chants of workers lining the dock at the Kharg Island terminal on the Persian Gulf, Nazih pushed a button to start the pumps and the Iranian crude began to flowed into a tanker.

Iran was the world's second largest oil exporter, next to Saudi Arabia, before the year-long turmoil that led to the downfall of Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi. The nation's 65,000 oil workers heeded Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, leader of the shah's religious opposition, and halted exports, thus helping precipitate the collapse of the monarchy.

...while blood continues to spill

TEHRAN, Iran—The Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini's revolutionary government Monday executed eight more members of the Shah of Iran's toppled regime.

A communique from Khomeini's Revolutionary Committee said seven former officials of the shah's government, four of them generals, died by firing squad at 5 a.m. Monday. The communique said one of Khomeini's secret Islamic courts had found them guilty of corruption and killing or torturing opponents of the shah.

Tehran Radio also announced the execution in the Persian Gulf oil center of Abadan of Musa Mirshekai, a police officer. An Islamic revolutionary court found him guilty of killing four anti-shah demonstrators, the report said.

Three policemen accused of shooting anti-shah demonstrators were reported stabbed to death by a mob while being transferred to a prison in the central city of Najafabad three days ago.

Many thousands were reported flocking to Amadabad, 60 miles west of Tehran to the gravesite of former Prime Minister Mohammad Mossadegh, who forced the shah from Iran in 1953, but was overthrown three days later in an army coup supported by the U.S. Central Intelligence Agency.

The renewal of Iran's oil exports Monday coincided with the 12th anniversary of the death of Mossedegh, who nationalized the oil industry.

Amin launches 'last man' drive

NAIROBI, Kenya—Ugandan President Idi Amin abandoned his cease-fire efforts Monday and called on his army to "fight to the last man" in a major new drive planned against Tanzanian invaders, Radio Uganda said.

An unconfirmed report said hundreds of Libyan and Moroccan troops had arrived to bolster Amin's forces. But the Ugandan leader was dealt two new blows—by the British, who cut off supply flights from Britain, and by four fellow black African leaders who offered to help the Tanzanians.

The Ugandan broadcast, monitored here, called on all citizens in the occupied areas to "evacuate immediately before a major offensive is launched to liberate Ugandan territory." There was no indication when the drive might start.

Mideast peace treaty: Carter wings it

WASHINGTON—President Carter, in a drive to wrap up a Mideast peace treaty, will fly to Egypt and Israel this week to try and clear away remaining roadblocks to a settlement.

Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil said in Cairo that Carter's trip "will most likely lead to a signing."

And Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin told members of the U.S. Congress in Washington, "now there is a ray of hope." Noting that Israel has accepted U.S. proposals for wrapping up a treaty, he added:

"Let us hope Egypt will join the effort. Then if this happens, in a short period of time, we may have the ceremony of signing."

Khalil told The Associated Press in a telephone interview: "When an American president puts down all his stakes, it is natural that it has to have a positive result."

Weather

A mechanical problem at the Collegian last night almost cancelled today's weather report. However, the weather staff persevered. Today's gorgeous forecast calls for temperatures (a little drum roll please) in the low to mid 60s!! Sunny skies will remain in the forecast at least through Wednesday, when highs again are expected to reach the 60s.

Bottle bill a balm

It's been a terrible day, you're sick of studying, so you head out to Tuttle Creek to get away from it all.

Ahh, a visit to Tuttle, the beautiful outdoors, where the geese are returning, some greenery is sprouting, the waves are soothing, and the land sparkles.

Wait a minute. The land sparkles?

Yes, the land sparkles with all the broken glass from busted beer bottles, a reminder of "civilization."

Tuttle's land wouldn't sparkle so, and neither would the rest of the state, if the bottle bill was passed.

The bottle bill provides for a 5-cent deposit on beer and soft-drink containers. Similar bills have worked beautifully in Oregon and Vermont for years. Maine and Michigan recently passed popular bottle bills.

The bottle bill encourages returning bottles—cutting down on litter and the waste of energy and raw materials by using the bottles again.

Most people have to be forced into remembering the environment hitting them in their slim wallets is the best way to guarantee a lack of amnesia.

With the bottle bill, the hard-core litterbugs would be free to litter, because somebody would be sure to go around and pick up their trash.

The state would have all kinds of unpaid workers cleaning up containers—it wouldn't have to hire a large staff when many will work for the 5-cent deposit.

The bill passes the three tests any legislative bill should: it makes sense, it works (in other states), and it's an inexpensive program Kansas can afford.

So why isn't it on the books?

A powerful lobby for the beverage industry is working against the bill; twisting facts so much legislators don't know what to believe, so they postpone voting on the bill.

The bill isn't dead. It is in committees in the House and Senate.

Support the bottle bill, and let the only sparkle at Tuttle be the water.

K-State professors have something to learn from the army. The army has shown real ingenuity and understanding of human nature in dealing with some of its problems.

Many of the new army recruits can't read. (Even though this army is 80 percent high school graduates, which says something about the value of a high school diploma.)

So what does the army do to teach its illiterate recruits about advanced weaponry?

The army has simplified its training manuals so they can be understood by seventh-grade level readers, has instituted a remedial reading program for many recruits, and has (drum roll) made comic book-style training manuals.

There is a lesson for K-State English professors here. Instead of complaining about students who can't read or write, they should order comic book-style textbooks for illiterate students.

A natural K-State hero would be Writerman, the Ace of X,1,2,3s.

K-State's school of parking

All right, settle down. As you know, this is Erratic Parking 235, a prerequisite to obtaining a K-State parking permit. My name is Fenton Bender and I'll warn you now this is an intensive course, so pay attention.

First let's go into the simulator room. I'm sure you all remember these things from Driver Education. Just sit down at one of the simulators and familiarize yourself with the controls.

Okay, all set? Today's session will teach you some basic sloppy parking techniques you can use anywhere, anytime. The film on your simulator is of the West Stadium parking lot, a good place for novices to begin learning the fundementals of Erratic Parking.

No, Johnson, don't turn into the staff parking area; not in this class anyway. We play it strictly by the the book as far as which sections we screw up.

All right, the first trick is a basic ploy used by those who want to avoid any possible contact between their car and others, or by just inconsiderate slobs. It's called The Straddle.

I SEE Pannquist has already put his simulator into the proper straddle position. Very good, Pannquist. You have effectively hogged two spaces by straddling the yellow line.

No, no Johnson, STRADDLE the line, don't just put your tires on it. You'll never pass if you can't do better than that.

Everybody got the hang of it? Good, let's try something a little more advanced: the Quadruple Forward Straddle. As the name implies, it isn't enough to simply straddle the space next to you. You have to pull your car forward so the two spaces in front of you are also unusable to anyone else.

I do not recommend this tactic in any parking lot where there are meters.

Now here's one you can use with or without a straddle manuver called the Rear Projection. You simply fail to move your car up to the front dividing line. Just leave your tail hanging out enough so only a Volkswagen can squeak through.

No, Johnson, you needn't worry some moron will come along and pile into your car's posterior while you're in class. That's not the American way. What would happen if someone got mad and rammed your car? He'd damage his own vehicle, wouldn't he? And do Americans willingly damage their own vehicles? Well, I don't have to answer that question, do I?

OUR NEXT ploy cannot be done in every lot but it will work in areas such as the small northeast corner of the West Stadium lot. Let's head our simulators there.

You'll notice these are just short rows of spaces right next to a small creek with deep banks. At the end of each row is a narrow space for a vehicle to turn around and cruise up the other side of the row to look for a parking space.

That's right, Pannquist, I want you to park in that no-parking space. This will just infuriate people who come after you. Not only can't they turn around but now they have to back up into the mainstream of traffic coming in and out of the parking lot. Talk about confusion and cussing and minor denting!

Time's about up for today. Next week we'll teach you how to box someone in and how to drive the wrong direction in a parking lot without getting clobbered.

See your next week and remember: IT'S YOUR GOD-GIVEN RIGHT TO PARK WHEREVER AND HOWEVER YOU CHOOSE.

Students responsible for mess on campus

Editor,

I would personally like to congratulate the custodial and maintenance staff of K-State for their work toward the upkeep of our campus. Your love for this university must be overwhelming.

As for K-State students, I'm not so sure the congratulàtions are in order. Do we realize how sloppy we are? The incident at Derby was just one small example. Have you walked through the Union lately? If you say it's clean, you're blind. If you say it's the fault of the staff, you're mistaken.

This is our university, we pay for it. We should at least keep it clean. Next time you can't find a clean table to sit at, clear one off. If you see someone leaving a mess, tell them about it. We all deserve a clean university. But don't expect one unless you are willing to help.

Let's give our staff a break. They're still cleaning up yesterday's mess.

Love, sunshine touched all

Editor

We wish to express our gratitude and thanks to the many thoughtful and loving friends of our daughter Joy, for whom memorial services were held Feb. 20 in the college chapel.

Her life will ever be an inspiration to her family who lovingly shared her with her friends, classmates, teachers and sorority sisters. Joy loved K-State for its friendly and sincere traditions. This reflected in her loving and happy qualities of life. Her signature, "love and sunshine happinesss" touched us all.

The scholarship that is being established in Joy's memory in the Department of Interior Architecture will perpetuate her compassion, encouragement and helpfulness to others. Joy expressed the ever-presence of divine love.

As we joyfully shared happy moments with her college friends on campus and in our home the past four years, we continue to look forward to and welcome these visits.

Power alternatives feasible; system would use wind, sun

Editor,

The University is in the market for a heat source, and below are some of my thoughts about using a solar-assisted wind-powered heat-pump system.

This university has been built with two-thirds of the buildings having hot-chilled water heat and the remaining one-third with steam, at 150 degrees Fahrenheit condensing temperature. This use of relatively low quality energy means the University is already set for using a solar-assisted heat-pump system.

A wind turbine mounted on Bluemont Hill electrically connected to a solar-assisted heat-pump system with thermal storage could be used in order to maintain required temperatures. The back-up for a university central heat-pump system could be off-peak utility power for the electricity and groundwater from the river valley for the low temperature source.

A central solar-assisted heat-pump system could be constructed on a somewhat piecemeal basis allowing for extended life of the present power plant.

I would suggest that a feasibility study be performed of a centralized heat storage system with a combined wind and solar input instead of relying upon the shallow treatise given in the 1976 report upon the feasibility of the independent systems.

Graduation: more than just an empty folder

Graduates will again be allowed their own moment of glory when they accept their diplomas this May.

Students and parents were so complimentary about last May's commencement exercises for each college, which allowed graduates to accept their actual diploma instead of an empty diploma folder, that it will be repeated this year, said Ellsworth Gerritz, dean of admissions and records.

Graduation exercises will be on May 18 and 19 this year, contrary to the listing in the 1978-1979 Kansas State University Bulletin which gave May 18 as the date of all graduation exercises, Gerritz said.

Graduate School and the College of Veterinary Medicine exercises will be at 3:00 p.m. on Friday, May 18 in McCain Auditorium, he said.

All-University exercises will begin at 9:15 a.m. Saturday, May 19 in KSU Stadium. All students who graduated in Summer 1978 and December 1978 are invited to participate in commencement exercises with the May 1979 and Summer 1979 graduates, he said.

After all-University exercises are completed, the College of Arts and Sciences will remain in the stadium for its exercises which start at 11 a.m.

Exercises will begin at 11:15 a.m. Saturday for the College of Engineering, in McCain Auditorium, the College of Agriculture in Ahearn Field House, the College of Architecture and Design in Forum Hall in the K-State Union, and the College of Home Economics in an area outside Justin Hall.

At 2 p.m. Saturday, exercises will start for the College of Education in McCain Auditorium and the College of Business Administration in the fieldhouse.

In case of bad weather, the all-University exercises will be cancelled, the College of Arts and Sciences would begin exercises at 9:15 a.m. in the fieldhouse and the College of Home Economics exercises would start at 9:15 a.m. in the McCain Auditorium, Gerritz said.

Carlin judges court nominees

TOPEKA (AP)—Gov. John Carlin is going through the unprecedented procedure of personally interviewing three nominees he has under consideration for appointment to the Kansas Supreme Court.

The governor talked Monday with former state Sen. Harold Herd of Coldwater.

He interviewed Johnson County District Court Judge Lewis Smith last week, and is scheduled to talk to Sedgwick County District Court Judge Tyler Lockett later this week.

An aide said Carlin "just wanted to see them face-to-face, to know a little bit about who he was considering."

The Democratic governor is not discussing their judicial philosophy, the aide said. Herd confirmed that. Herd also said after talking with Carlin that he had no hint as to which one of the three the governor would choose.

Carlin is asking them about their legal careers, their other activities and trying to get to know them as people, the aide said.

Even Carlin's staff is uncertain how soon the governor may make a decision on who he will select to succeed Perry Owsley of Pittsburg, who took a disability retirement from the court last December because of a health problem.

Carlin has a news conference scheduled Tuesday, but his press secretary, Bill Hoch, said no announcement would be forthcoming at that time on the Supreme Court appointment, Carlin's first to the high court since he became governor in January.

The names of Herd, Smith and Lockett were submitted to Carlin by the state Supreme Court Nominating Commission. All three are Democrats, as is the governor.

Herd is known to have strong support within the Kansas Democratic Party for the appointment, including the endorsement of several members of the governor's personal staff. However, some have said that may not weigh nearly as heavily as might be assumed.

K-State turns to country school for 20th Century solutions

By DEB OLMSTEAD
Contributing Writer

As the "wilderness" retreats from the civilized urban sprawl, environmental battles rage.

Land is wasted, misused and abused opponents say. In response, future city planners are being drilled in the most efficient, and profitable use of available land within American cities from an environmental education viewpoint.

Locally, K-State students in Competency Based Teacher Education (CBTE) are given a field exercise designed to help them implement environmental education through existing classes in high schools and junior highs.

The semi-annual exercise consists of an imaginary city with 640 acres of land to be developed and an unlimited budget. The program allows student-teachers to evaluate public needs and methods to fill those needs in an imaginative way.

The Land Use Simulation Task, developed by the United States Forestry Service, can be used in any subject area, said Mark Stallings, temporary instructor in curriculum and instruction. The problem can be used with classes such as government, biology, communications, geography and economics, he said.

"Environmental education has to be interdisciplinary so it can fit into school just about anywhere and not just a specific course such as Environmental Education," Stallings said.

THERE IS a need for environmental education because people exist in a specific environment and students need to realize that an environmental crisis will affect everyone, Stallings said.

For this special exercise the CBTE class met in the little red schoolhouse north of Council Grove.

The location was chosen to give the 35 students a break from the regular routine, and it offers a larger area for the simulation game, he said.

The game begins with a brainstorming session.

After the students receive an information sheet on Centerplace City and the land available for city use, they list possible uses for the land such as amusement park, minimum security prison or 4-H fairgrounds.

The possibilities then are categorized, usually breaking into five categories, Stallings said, housing, recreation, agriculture, industry and education. Students then split into groups to develop a presentation of what they want to do with the land.

One member from each group is chosen to serve on the city commission which develops criterion for judging the presentations, and then chooses the presentation which meets the criterion.

The city commission this semester chose to use the land for development of an industrial park.

The criterion were developed with the city's needs in mind, said Carol Suderman, senior in English, and member of the city commission. The age and interests of the population were considered as well as resources available.

The problem presented in this game is an everyday type of problem, Stallings said. City commissions have to deal with land use, population needs and interests, as well as the economics of running a city.

This game helps teachers and prospective teachers realize how subject areas are interdependent, Stallings said.

"The interdisciplinary approach is a good one," said Jack Byars coordinator of the CBTE program and assistant professor of curriculum and instruction. "College students can get locked into their disciplines and that's not how the real world is."

"The game showed me how interdisciplinary skills can be brought into any subject and gave me more of an idea how I'm going to have to challenge students," Suderman said.

Latin America topic of Ambassador's talk

The United States Ambassador to Paraguay, Robert White, will speak at 10:30 a.m. today in the K-State Union Little Theater.

White will speak on "Emerging Trends in Latin American Relations with a Focus on Paraguay." He has been ambassador to Paraguay since November.

The visit is sponsored by the Kansas Center for Community Education, in the College of Education, and the Tri-University Center of Latin American Studies.

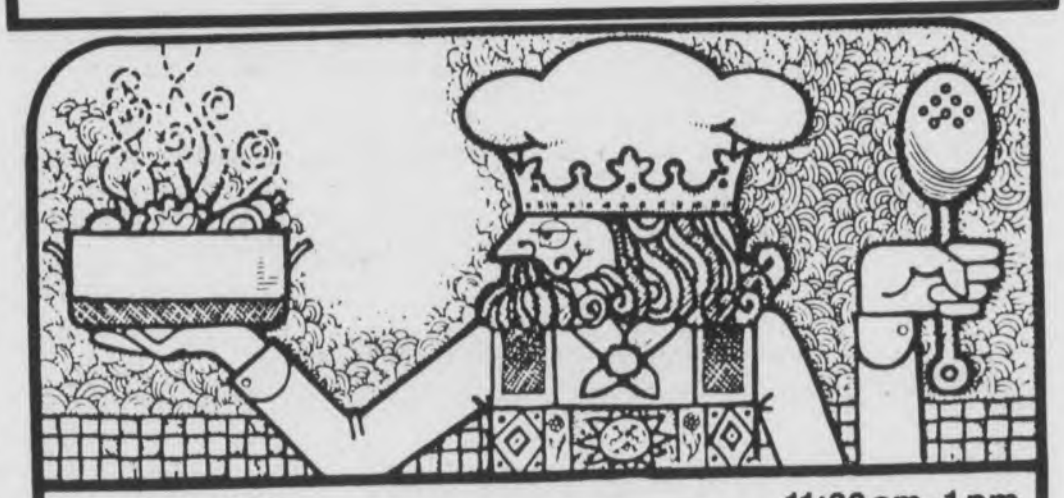
Mickey, Goofy, Pluto— meet K-State Singers

M-I-C-K-E-Y M-O-U-S-E may soon be a familiar refrain to the K-State Singers. The group has been invited to perform at Disneyland during its spring break concert tour.

Disneyland requested the group to perform March 16 in the Carnation Plaza Garden in Disneyland, according to Gerald Polich, assistant professor of music and director of the Singers.

"I wrote to them last year, when we went to Florida on tour, about singing in Disneyworld, and I wrote to Disneyland this year when I found out we'd be there during this year's tour," Polich said. "I got a letter back recently asking us to perform and I called to confirm it all.



"Usually they ask for an audition tape, but they invited us to sing based on a brochure we send to alumni and other organizations. I think it's impressive we were invited and didn't even have to send a tape. I don't think any other group from K-State has performed there before," he said.

THE GROUP leaves Wednesday morning and will travel through New Mexico and Arizona, giving concerts in Albuquerque and Sun City for K-State alumni. Also they will perform in San Diego and Los Angeles on the way to Disneyland.

"The members of the group will get free passes to the park for one day and we'll present about a 30-or 40-minute show. That's what the information we got said groups usually are allowed," Polich said.

K-State Singers is made up of non-music majors only and goes on tour each year during spring break, according to Polich. Last year the group toured Florida and the year before the Singers went to Texas and Oklahoma.

'Sit tight': Title IX decision nears

By CINDY FRIESEN
Asst. Sports Editor

The K-State athletic department will "just have to sit tight a while longer"—at least until April—before finding out if it's in compliance with specific guidelines of Title IX, J.L. Thomas, of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), said Monday.

Title IX, which was passed in 1972 as the Educational Amendment, was designed to eliminate sex discrimination in intercollegiate athletics. Universities were given until July 1978 to comply or risk losing federal funds.

Soon after last summer's deadline, the Alliance for Equality in Sports filed a suit against K-State for alleged violations of guidelines.

HEW was expected to rule last December on the case, but instead HEW Secretary Joseph Califano released an indepth interpretation of each guideline and a request for public comment about his statements.

The ruling will be delayed until comments, along with responses from university presidents, are reviewed, Thomas said.

"They (HEW officials) still don't know today what the requirements will be, so neither do we," K-State Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds said.

"They can't come back with the complaints until they have the guidelines all hammered out," he said.

UNIVERSITIES are bewildered about compliance because Califano's December interpretation contains many contradictions, Dodds said.

"What they're trying to do is continue to operate and increase the women's athletics, but what they've done is created a document that's not very well defined," he said.

HEW is expected to revise its interpretation after reviewing the public comments, Thomas said.

One guideline gathering opposition requires equal per capita spending in men's and women's intercollegiate athletics. Opposition stems from the inclusion of net revenue-producing sports such as basketball and football at K-State.

Unless the guideline is revised, Title IX would require that the same amount of money be spent on each female athlete as is spent on each male athlete.

If net revenue sports are excluded, K-State is spending more money on female than male athletes, he said.

"Financially, we're better off if they exempt (net) revenue sports, but we'll survive (if they don't)," Dodds said.

I got some new tennies today.

Not just any tennies, but Puma brand, a derivative from P.F. Flyers, the best tennis shoes ever made.

When I was a young 6-6 kindergartner in Belleville, Ks., I used to rotate between P.F. Flyers and Red Ball Jets. If you think Glenn Marshall and Rolando Blackman move out while running down the court, you should have seen me "run faster and jump higher."

Just the feel of supple new canvas and soft, cushioned insoles incited the younger me to run around the neighborhood for hours, leaping bushes, trees and houses.

When they first got radical and added stripes to tennis shoes, we little rug rats couldn't be stopped. I figure we earned about 50 presidential awards for jogging 127 miles a day.

As a matter of fact, if you're wondering about the secret of K-State's success this year in basketball, just check the team's feet.

That's right—purple and white P.F. Flyers.

WHILE ALL of the favored teams like KU, Iowa State and Colorado fell by the wayside in their silly Converse or Adidas shoes, K-State almost zoomed to the top.

There was only one problem with the Wildcats. No, it wasn't their inexperience or their opponents' expertise, as some have suspected. John McCullough of Oklahoma snuck in and stole their P.F. Flyers.

Thus, in their crippled state, the 'Cats lost three of their last four games and were unable to land a tournament berth.

In fact, nobody but Oklahoma got a tournament berth, and everyone is pretty ticked off about it.

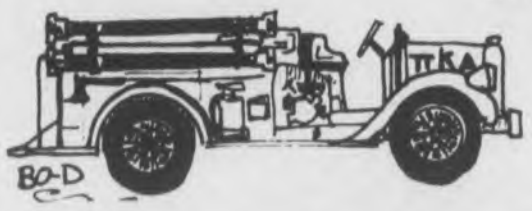
KU was hoping for an NCAA or NIT bid, but all they received was a berth in the IFTWALOTAANSHR (Invitational For Teams With A Lot Of Talent And A Not-So-Hot Record) in WaKeeney.

THE NCAA should operate its tournament like the National Basketball Association. The season would be five years long, with a two week break before starting again. They should play 513 games to determine who goes to the playoffs. They should also allow 820 teams to go into the playoffs, so the regular season will eliminate a grand total of four teams from the university ranks.

Each of the playoffs will be a best-of-23 series, because everyone knows there's too much pressure riding on a single championship game. Besides, if they played one game for the whole ball of wax, interest may be too high.

No, that's not really a good solution. K-State would have a shot at the national title, but the hordes of sleeping fans wouldn't notice.

K-State needs to follow Indiana State's lead in order to gain national prominence.



And, I think the University's athletic department is starting to move in that direction.

Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds announced today that the Wildcats will play 14 Class 2A Kansas high schools next year, followed by an intensified schedule against junior college women's teams.

Are the fish up yet?

For those of you who have been in hibernation, be it known the fish are waking.

Weather permitting, many of the Manhattan stay-at-homes will have an opportunity to stock their refrigerators.

The walleye are already being taken at Rocky Ford. They aren't very big, but they are still fun to catch and they make good meals for those who are short on grocery funds.

The walleye are being taken on yellow jigs, bounced lightly along the bottom.

Channel catfish are also being taken in the river areas. These fish give a hearty fight, if the angler has the patience to sit and wait for them to take the bait. A good bait, by the way, is turkey or chicken livers. It really smells like vulture guts, but it get the job done.

The trout which were stocked last year in the river pond area at Tuttle Creek are doing well enough, that the State Forestry Fish and Game Department has decided to stock another 3 to 4,000 in the spring.

THESE FISH are being stocked in the small streams between the dam and the river pond area. The water there is a cool 55 degrees all year. And, the fish are expected to survive well there because the water is clean and it's at a good temperature. The lack of these two factors has caused adverse results in previous trout stocking programs. If the trout are going to live in the state, they will live there.

The best way to fish for these trout is to use flies, Colorado spinners, size O Mepps spinners, corn or cheese.

Trout are pretty smart fish. If they see you, you're going to be out of luck. So, if you can find a tree to stand behind, do it. Also try to get in a position where you can cast upstream and let the bait travel downstream.

If you see them, and they swim to another area, don't follow them. All you will get is sore feet from chasing the little buggers. Cast to where they go and be patient. They can't be taken like bluegills or crappie, so maintain a little distance between yourself and the fish.

THE ONLY LAW governing trout fishing is that a Kansas fishing license is required. So, catch as many as you can eat.

The local Fish and Game Department is trying to monitor how many trout are being taken. It would be helpful if you report to their office just east of the dam and let them know how you did.

If you haven't been fishing since last summer, it is probably time to clean your equipment.

Clean and grease your reel.

Change the line. Line which has been left for several months will get rotten, and will get kinks in it more easily.

Also, clean the guides on your rods. Smooth guides don't damage the line.

K-State golfers meet today at Country Club

Students interested in playing on men's or women's intercollegiate golf teams should meet at 3 p.m. today in the Manhattan Country Club pro shop.

K-State didn't have a women's team last year, but one will be formed if enough interest is shown, according to Paul Anderson, K-State golf coach.

ARE YOU CREATIVE? ARTISTICALLY INCLINED? GREAT!

We're interested in your ideas for a T-shirt design for off-campus students. Please submit details to the S.G.A. office by Mon. Mar. 19. Thanks!

SKY HIGH...Construction workers were busy Monday high atop the new addition to Manhattan High School.

'Jigsaw puzzle' expansion progresses at city schools

By LARRY RIBORDY
Collegian Reporter

Manhattan's public schools are being improved and expanded.

A bond election in November 1977, provided $7.4 million for remodeling and expansion of the junior and senior high schools, said James Benjamin, superintendent of Unified School District 383. He said by the time construction is completed, the total cost will be around $7.9 million.

"The reason for the expansion is to remove any shortcomings and the lack of space," Benjamin said.

The classrooms are now divided by temporary partitions and classes are crowded. Once the structure is complete, the partitions will be removed to provide larger rooms, he said.

"The ninth grade class will be moved from the junior high school to the senior high school making it a four-year school," Benjamin said.

HE SAID the number of ninth graders will be around 400 and the expected enrollment of the senior high school will be 1,737 students; current enrollment at the senior high is 1,337.

Benjamin said the east structure will provide 19 classrooms on the third floor, a new library on the second floor and a "student commons" on the first level. He said the commons will provide both a space for lockers and a place for students to socialize.

The structure is constructed of reinforced concrete and will have a brick veneer finish with a "20-year bonded roof" when completed, Benjamin said.

The architects for the new wing of the senior high school are Wolfenbarger and McCulley of Manhattan.

Jack English, superintendent of Casson Construction Company in Topeka, said the "20-year bonded roof" is actually an inverted roof which keeps the main membrane from contracting and expanding with temperature extremes. He said the process has been used for about three years and works because the insulation is actually on top of the roof.

THE WEATHER has slowed construction some, English said, but that's to be expected when winter sets in. If the weather had remained good, they could have poured the roof last Christmas, he said.

With construction progressing "just like a jigsaw puzzle," the tentative completion date of May 1980 should still be met.

Benjamin said the new girls' gym will be on the southwest corner of the high school and the new shop building will be on the northwest corner. The shop building will house auto mechanics, agricultural mechanics and the metal shop, he said.

Benjamin said construction at the senior high will use $4.3 million of the $7.4 million budgeted and the remaining $3.1 million is being used to remodel and expand the junior high school.

Benjamin said the remodeling will provide air conditioning for the buildings and elevator access ramps for the handicapped. The expansion will give more room for liberal arts and industrial arts classes and the library, he said.

BENJAMIN SAID the industrial arts building is complete, but is being used for classroom space while the east end of the building is being remodeled. Because of the remodeling, 200 students are attending classes at the old Methodist Temple, he said.

Improvements were made at Manhattan's elementary schools last summer.

Benjamin said all of the windows of the Woodrow Wilson grade school were replaced with storm windows. The Wilson school had priority because the windows were badly worn and leaked, he said. Storm windows also were put on the north side of the Bluemont grade school. He said the old windows will be replaced as soon as money is available.

Doyen, Gaar debate power plant funding

TOPEKA (AP)—The two Republican leaders of the state Senate were divided Monday over proposed construction of a coal-fired power plant to supply the energy needs on K-State's campus.

Both Senate President Ross Doyen and Senate Majority Leader Norman Gaar attended a Monday briefing of the leadership on the plant with representatives from Stone and Webster Management Consultants of New York.

The consulting firm surveyed energy alternatives on the campus in 1974 and ultimately recommended construction of a centralized, coal-fired power plant.

The Legislature presently is considering whether to begin funding of construction for the plant, or delay action for at least one year while continuing to study the problem.

Many lawmakers say the Legislature's ultimate decision on the K-State plant could provide a precedent for construction of additional power generating facilities at other state institutions.

The proposed plant could cost more than $25 million, depending on the type of power generating facilities included.

Those pushing to begin construction argue that a one year delay could add $2 million to the cost because of inflation.

"I think we should go ahead with it or I think we will end up with the biggest, million-dollar debacle we have seen in years," Gaar said.

Doyen, however, said the consultant convinced him it would be beneficial to wait a year and authorize another feasibility study on the plant.

Governmental liability proposed

TOPEKA (AP)—The Senate Judiciary Committee completed work Monday on a proposed tort claims act that would end the traditional legal doctrine of governmental immunity for state and local units of government.

Purpose of the bill is provide those injured by the negligence of state or local government employees to sue for the damages suffered.

In the past, governments have been generally immune from lawsuits for such damages.

The measure is expected to be debated by the Senate on Wednesday, according to Majority Leader Norman Gaar. A host of amendments are expected to be offered during floor debate.

Completion of committee work on the bill ends months of labor by legislators and staff on the measure.

The bill was the subject of interim committee study last summer, and the judiciary committee worked several drafts of the measure this session before arriving at the final version it is submitting to the Senate.

"This bill was more work than getting the Wyandotte Convention," quipped Sen. Paul Hess (R-Wichita) committee member, referring to the drafting of the original Kansas Constitution.

As it will be headed for debate, the bill sets a $300,000 financial limit per occurrence on any claims for damages. That limit would apply regardless of whether one person or several were harmed.

It is anticipated that there will be a move on the Senate floor to raise the financial limit to $500,000 per occurrence.

Fateley, Curtin advance to general election

By HARVEY PERRITT
City Editor

Wanda Fateley and Chris Curtin, the two winners of Tuesday's primary election for City Commission, will take their race for the unexpired term of former Commissioner Robert Smith to the general election on April 3.

Smith, who resigned from the commission last year when he left Manhattan, served only two years out of his four-year term. Ed Horne was appointed by the City Commission to fill the position until the vacancy could be filled in the next election. As there were three candidates for the seat, a primary election had to be held.

The candidate with the most votes, Fateley, has served in city government on the Environmental Board and the Downtown Redevelopment Committee. She is a member of the League of Women Voters, the Older Manhattan Neighborhoods Association and Friends of Sunset Zoo.

MOST OF her platform has centered around city growth and downtown redevelopment.

"I'm certainly in favor of keeping downtown strong," she said before the election. "Private investment would have to be greater than public investment."

Curtin didn't attract as many votes as Fateley, but he pulled enough votes to stay ahead of the third candidate, R.J. Dickens, and stay in the race for Smith's seat.

Curtin is a local realtor who says he understands the problems of growth because he has experienced them as a small businessman. He has a first-hand view of both good and bad development in the city, he said.

"I'm very interested in growth," Curtin said before the election. "I'm interested in bringing new industry to Manhattan. The revitalization of downtown is a particularly important issue."

x—denotes candidates who qualified for the general election.

The third candidate, Dickens, who was eliminated from the race by the primary, lost by almost a four-to-one margin to Fateley. It was Dickens' second bid for a commission seat. He ran as a write-in candidate in 1975 as the youngest candidate for a city office in Kansas history.

THE FIELD of 10 candidates running for a position on the USD 383 Board of Education was narrowed to eight in the primary election. Those eight will go to the general election on April 3 to fill four openings on the seven-member board.

Major issues during the Board of Education campaign have been competency testing, broader disciplinary powers for teachers and renovation of existing schools, with the possible addition of a new elementary school.

The leader in the Board of Education voting, Barbara Withee, supports competency testing, believes the disciplinary measures available to teachers are adequate and forsees a possible bond issue for newer schools.

Most of the other Board of Education candidates supported a platform similar to Withee's. Some of the candidates placed qualifications and restrictions on their support, such as criteria for the competency testing.

The County Clerk's office said the voter turnout was low. One of the rural polling places hadn't any voters by 11 a.m., while polls in the city had low use despite good weather, the clerk's office said.

Paraguay ambassador praises Carter's human rights policy

By JOLENE HOSS
News Editor

The Carter administration's human rights policy is playing an integral role in Latin America's progress towards democracy, according to Robert White, U.S. ambassador to Paraguay.

White spoke on "Emerging Trends in Latin American Relations with a Focus on Paraguay," in the K-State Union Little Theatre Tuesday. His visit was sponsored by Center for Community Education and the Tri-University Center of Latin American studies.

"I can assure you Latin America is better with Carter's human rights policy," White said to a group of about 50.

When the Carter administration took control, there were nearly 1,000 political prisoners in Paraguay, White said. Now there are only five.

Advances also have been made in the press, he added. Although the government did not directly censor the press, there was self-imposed censorship.

The press feared reprisals for overstepping their bounds, although they didn't know what those bounds were, he said.

"Every month a new group tests the system and the government has not reacted," White said.

WHITE CREDITS the progress towards democracy and increasing human rights to the fact the government realized its stability is not threatened by the press' slow advancement.

"In every country in Latin America you can see that respect for human rights has increased," he said.

Relations with Paraguay and other Latin American countries began with the good neighbor policy, in the '30s, White said. The major concern for the U.S. was in protecting investments.

Pres. Roosevelt later changed the policy, to include tax reform, land reform, social justice and redistribution of wealth.

"With the emergence of Castro, anti-communism became our sole criteria," White said.

"We devoted so many resources to the military and so few resources to democratic development," he said. "The United States contributed to the rise of numerous repressive military governments."

The shift in American attitudes has left some Latin American leaders offended.

"U.S. policy has for the last 10 to 15 years been floundering. We are looking for a way to maintain anti-communism as a consideration, but not as the sole consideration."

CARTER'S HUMAN rights policy has offended some Latin American leaders —they don't know how to deal with the shifting attitudes of the U.S., White said.

"They were handling anti-communism the way they thought we wanted them to," he said.

Currently, leaders of Paraguay and other small Latin American countries are waiting to see what happens, he said. As with the anti-communism excitement, they are

Commission flashes caution lights

By SUE PFANNMULLER
Collegian Reporter

Pedestrian-operated caution lights were proposed as a solution to the crosswalk problem at the intersection of 16th Street and Anderson Avenue during Tuesday night's Manhattan City Commission meeting.

The caution lights were proposed by City Engineer Jerry Petty as a partial solution to the crosswalk problem, aided by additional street lighting.

The lights would consist of a warning sign topped with flashing yellow lights that would be activated immediately after a button was pushed by the pedestrian. Petty said the units would contain a clock set at between 10 and 30 seconds to regulate the lights.

Two units would be installed, one on either side of Anderson Avenue. The caution lights would alert motorists to pedestrians in the crosswalk, thus minimizing the chance for accidents, Petty said.

He estimated a cost of $1,000 for the two units, if all the materials have to be purchased, and said the city has most of the materials on hand so the cash outlay may be considerably less.

ALTHOUGH THE caution lights are only a proposal at this time, commissioners said they favored this proposal instead of the installation of an automatic crosslight that would stop traffic when pedestrians weren't present.

Kansas Power and Light (KP&L) is under agreement with the city to install street lights at the crosswalk since that area is so dark, Petty said. However, KP&L is behind in fulfilling its commitments at this time, but Petty said KP&L assured him the lights would be installed sometime this spring.

Discussion of the crosswalk problem has been going on for more than six years, Mayor Robert Linder said. He said he was glad a concrete solution has finally been proposed.

"Trying to cross the street at 16th and Anderson now is a lot like being in a covey of quail—you have to be quick to survive," Linder said.

In other commission business, Mayor Linder officially declared March 25-31 as Arbor Week, and March 30 as Arbor Day in Manhattan.

By planting more than 600 trees on the streets of Manhattan, Linder said the city hopes to set an example civic and governmental groups would follow.

Also discussed was a growth guidance system for Manhattan that would map areas the city believes it can service and encourage growth in those areas. Commissioner Terry Glasscock said the system would help Manhattan prepare for future growth.

White...

waiting for the human rights policy to die down.

Eventually the governments will react to the progression, he said, and there may be retrogression. White said overall, the countries will have to move with time; there will be an advance.

The United States can ensure the stability needed for democratic progression by continuing to project its ideas from the Constitution and the principles on which it was formed, White said.

"I'm convinced that the people in Latin America are perfectly capable of taking change and setting up a democratic government—but they need the support of the United States.

The most important task of the administration will be to continue the push for human rights, White said.

"Constancy is important. For smaller countries, American influence can be decisive. If we have the stamina to keep applying our policy—in the long run, even in the short run—the people who want democracy are going to achieve it."

Gangs murder 800 Chad Moslems

N'DJAMENA, Chad—Rioting gangs murdered more than 800 Moslems over the weekend in one of Africa's bloodiest tribal massacres in recent years, officials of this north-central African nation reported.

The killings were in and around Chad's third-largest city, Moundou, some 300 miles south of the capital, N'Djamena. Moundou is in the heart of Chad's densely-populated southern region and most of its 45,000 inhabitants are Christian or animist blacks speaking French and local dialects. Anamists believe every object has a soul.

The traders, storekeepers and moneylenders of Moundou nearly all belong to the town's 1,000-strong Arabic-speaking Moslem minority. Chad officials said the town's Moslem population was practically wiped out and the few survivors fled toward the capital.

French authorities confirmed the killings and said some 250 French and other Europeans, virtually the entire white population of Moundou, were evacuated to N'Djamena Monday in French army convoys.

China claims victory over Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand—China claimed victory over Vietnam on Tuesday, saying it had "exploded the myth of invincibility of this Asian Cuba." Vietnam disputed the Chinese claim, declared fighting was continuing, but said it was willing to negotiate once all Chinese troops have been withdrawn.

Vietnam also challenged China's announcement Monday that it has begun a withdrawal of troops from Vietnam. However, Vietnam's major ally, the Soviet Union, apparently accepted the Chinese declaration.

Vietnam said peace talks may begin at the vice foreign ministerial level after all Chinese troops have left Vietnam.

Director Phan Thi Minh of the Vietnamese foreign ministry, said contrary to Peking's announcement of troop withdrawal, "Chinese soldiers are still occupying a part of Vietnam's territory. Peking now talks about negotiations and a withdrawal of troops in an attempt to lure public opinion."

The Vietnamese foreign ministry, in a broadcast by the Voice of Vietnam, said Peking was forced to make the withdrawal announcement because of Vietnam's military strength, the Soviet Union's support of Vietnam, and objections to the war among the Chinese people.

Breakthrough? Israel compromises

JERUSALEM—Israel agreed to three compromises proposed by President Carter that may break through the barriers preventing an Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty, Israeli sources said Tuesday.

But the sources cautioned that other problems remain unsettled, and Egypt's response to the U.S. proposals will be pivotal to success.

The Carter trip was announced Monday in the wake of the president's talks with Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin. The president will arrive in Cairo Thursday and flies to Israel Saturday.

Sources with first-hand knowledge of the proposals, which have not been revealed, said they involved two compromises on linking the treaty to the Palestinian problem and a third on softening language about whether the treaty would supersede prior defense agreements.

Warden balks at executioner's role

MONTGOMERY, Ala.—Warden Joe Oliver said Tuesday he is trying to find someone else to throw the switch on the yellow electric chair at Holman Prison, where a convicted triple slayer is scheduled to die in a month.

"Naturally, it will be my preference for someone else to do it," when the decision is finally made, Oliver said.

John Louis Evans III, 29, is scheduled for electrocution April 6. He says he wants to die rather than serve life in prison and would "pull the switch myself if they would put it in my hand."

The warden can delegate the gruesome task to his deputy, Charlie Jones. Or the prison commissioner can assign it to someone else.

Neither Oliver nor anyone else at Holman has ever taken part in an execution. But John Hale, the prison system's information officer, said a few employees in other penal institutions within the state have had the experience and know what preparations to make.

Evans said in a recent death-cell interview that he is "ecstatic" about the impending execution because "it means getting my freedom." He has instructed his attorney to make no further legal efforts to save him.

Tolerance, not control, best way to end abuse

A Rock Port, Mo. youth died this week from a suspected drug overdose.

What drug was this boy "abusing?" PCP perhaps? Darvon maybe? Not heroin?

Would you believe vegetable cooking spray? Well, believe it because this is the suspected cause of the youth's death.

The Missouri county where he died has been having a problem with youths spraying the cooking oil into a paper bag and sniffing it for its hallucinatory effect.

Doctors claim the danger with this high is the product settles in the lung air sacs, either stopping the flow of oxygen in the blood and causing suffocation or damage to the brain and liver.

This can mean a fast end to an inexpensive high.

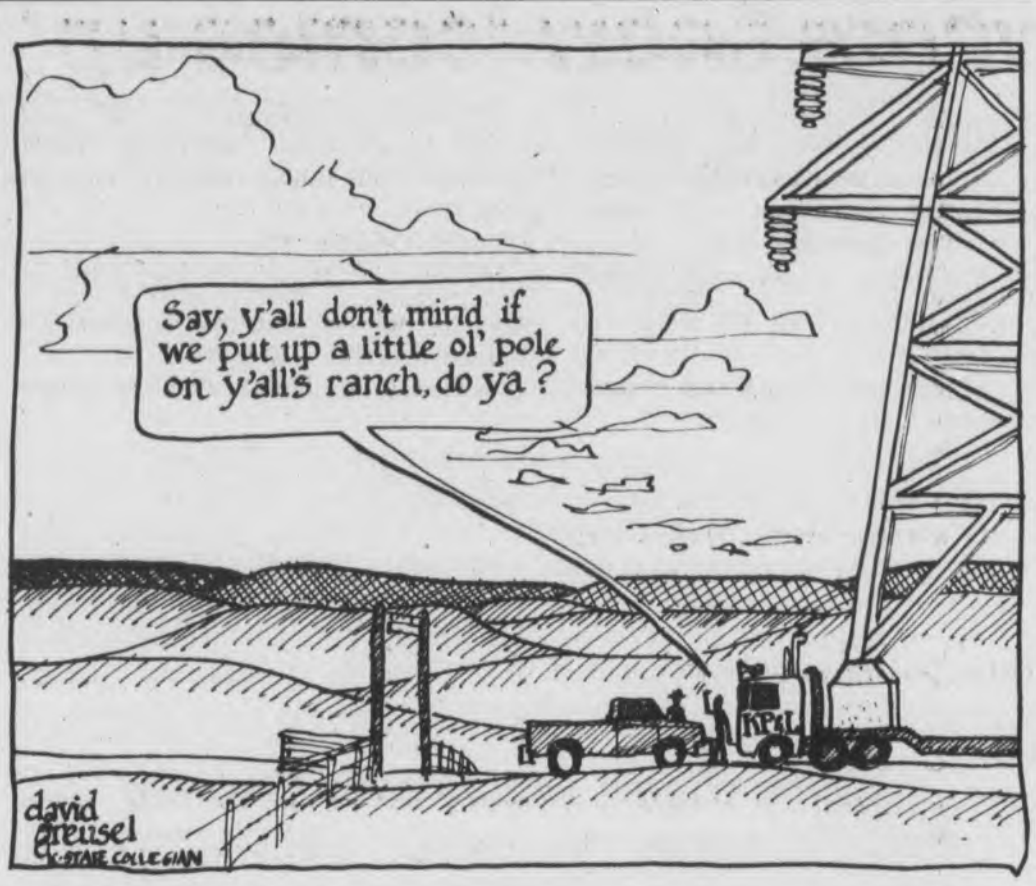
Sniffing cooking oil is only one example of such use of everyday "harmless" products. There are others.

Haven't you ever watched someone buy three or four tubes of model airplane glue and want them in separate sacks? This person is no model enthusiast. Any enthusiasm is for the effects sniffing the glue will produce.

Abuse means wrong or improper use. A substance doesn't have to be controlled for it to be abused. In the same way, government control of a substance doesn't stop its abuse.

The reasoning used in regulating, and outlawing, certain drugs is the drugs invite abuse. And, legislation would stop this abuse.

The fault with this reasoning is legislation forces the use underground.



"Out of sight, out of mind," is the slogan here.

If people are worried about drug use, and abuse, they would be better off trying to create an attitude of tolerance. Then problems with abuse could be worked out.

Instead, they assume any use of certain substances is "abuse" and no "use" will be tolerated.

This helps no one and hurts many. Especially those who turn to legal but more harmful highs—like sniffing cooking oil spray.

Liquor laws outdated

Editor,

The defense used against liquor-by-the-drink is as absurd as are the opponents themselves. The only legal point with which they've been able to hold back the mass of voters is the statute in the Kansas Constitution which states that: There shall be no open saloons in Kansas FOREVER.

This is very legitimate ground to stand on but should easily be seen as irrelevant. The Kansas Constitution was written in the 1860's by people who lived in a world and society only remotely resembling that of today.

What right did they have to declare how things should be forever?

The other weak leg the opponents are standing on is the obviously self-righteous Rev. Richard Taylor Jr., their main spokesman, who insists on maintaining the morals of 18th century rural America. His tactics have been described as "unscrupulous" more than once by Kansas senators.

In defending his position, the good Reverend has now become vindictive and has resorted to personal attacks on his opponents (as quoted in Friday's Collegian) rather than attacking their arguments.

Personally I am indifferent to the outcome of this issue. What upsets me, is seeing so many state legislators being so easily duped by such obvious idiocy.

In the name of common sense though, this law, like the old law requiring a lantern be carried 50 feet ahead of a motorized buggy at night, must be erased or revised to reflect today's standards.

Shooting the breeze

Does your mother say things like "talking to you is like talking to the wind?" Or, "asking you something is like asking a brick wall?"

Have her talk to administrators for a day, and she'll be more than happy to talk to winds and walls.

Talking to administrators is like talking to a strong wind coming off of the world's largest stockyard. I always wondered what they taught future administrators in administrative classes. Now, I know.

Whether they're shooting for president of the United States, K-State or the local frog-jumping club, they all learn one thing—how to bull.

Digging through the crap that falls from the mouths of administrators is no easy task, but by using your imagination and a large manure spreader, you can decipher administrative jibberish.

For example, Kansas Gov. John Carlin, a K-State graduate, was asked about the coal-fired power plant. He replied, "If there's a better way, we're not going to turn it down. We're going to do what's right in the end."

This means the governor doesn't know what to do, and he's desperately looking for somebody with some right answers. The only question I have is, did Carlin learn those kind of responses in an administrative or an animal science class? They're both applicable.

DAIRY farmers-turned-governor have no monopoly on the bull; there seems to be enough around for everyone. Administrators are no longer satisfied with "no comment." (For some reason that phrase lost its popularity about the same time Richard Nixon lost his.) Instead they ramble along merrily without meaning to say anything.

Take K-State President Duane Acker when he was asked about the proposed power plant. He said we (the University?) were watching and waiting for a legislative decision.

Translated: "We" don't have the money, the Kansas Legislature does.

So what's new?

Trying to translate administrative jibberish is preferable to getting answers from an honest-to-goodness non-answer administrator. Who is an authentic non-answer administrator? If you want to find one, just call the Big 8 offices in Kansas City and start asking questions about Title IX.

CHARLES NEINAS, Big 8 commissioner, was more than willing to visit with me until I asked about money the Big 8 donated to protect the interests of revenue-producing sports, namely men's basketball and football. Then he got busy; so busy, in fact, he didn't have time to tell me anything—except for the five minutes he spent telling me most reporters don't understand Title IX.

Apparently, the problem is that some reporters understand it a little too well for Neinas' comfort.

In closing, I would like to reiterate that the problem lies not with the questioner in the case of the interview with an administrator, but with an altercation caused by the differing levels of communication between English-speaking beings and high-velocity winds.

Guess what? I'm enrolled in Administrative Bull I.

Congratulations undeserved

Editor,

In reply to Lee Shalinsky's letter, I would like to personally nullify your congratulations to the custodial and maintenance staff of K-State, but first you are dead right on one point. We K-State students are SLOPPY, MESSY, INCONSIDERATE LITTERBUGS!

As for our grounds crews, they will still be cleaning up yesterday's mess 10 years from now, and it's only partly because of the large amount of purposely misplaced refuse.

This past weekend, I observed a grounds crew person "clean up" the Moore Hall parking lot. He drove up in his glorified tricycle and got out. There were at least 50 pieces of paper trash on the grass and on the pavement.

This guy walked across the muddy area so as not to get his shoes dirty and picked up four pieces of trash. He then walked back to his vehicle, got in, and drove off. I swear you could not tell that any clean-up had been done. I used to think that not all grounds crew people were like this, but I have seen so many perform this way that I no longer have any doubt.

If you think this in an example of a fine job, I sure would hate to see a poor one! This is our university and we pay for it along with the rest of the state's taxpayers. Our money should be spent paying people who will do the job they are supposed to! (At this point, I was going to put in my 2 cents worth about some of the bureaucrats in Anderson Hall, but I was unable to justify the expense.)

Voyager eyes large moon where snow 'comes up'

PASADENA, Calif. (AP)—Voyager 1 turned its cameras Tuesday to the rippled and cratered jovian moon Callisto—a body so cold that scientists think snow "comes up instead of coming down."

The spacecraft, already a million miles past Jupiter, soared close to Callisto, a frozen moon larger than the planet Mercury.

The spacecraft's approach showed shining white craters and ridge-like lines against a dark, rough surface.

Scientists had been surprised Monday when another of Jupiter's 13 moons, Io, showed few meteor craters. They said that suggested a complex series of erosion processes.

"The surface of Callisto is really peppered," said Larry Soderblom, while watching increasingly detailed pictures show up on television monitors at the Jet Propulsion Laboratory.

Voyager 1 passed Callisto, as it swung out into space for a 20-month cruise to Saturn. It has already sent back the most detailed pictures ever taken of Jupiter.

As Voyager left Jupiter, it studied several moons and searched for undiscovered satellites as it periodically scanned its primary objective—the solar system's largest planet.

TRAILING BEHIND is Voyager 2, which will arrive at Jupiter in July. Both ships were launched in 1977 for the journey to Jupiter, 400 million miles away.

Soderblom said scientists are eager for their first details of Callisto and another large moon, Ganymede, because the pair seem to be about half water or ice and are unlike anything in the solar system examined by earlier space missions.

The surface of Callisto, a dim, gray world, looked in places like waves on a pond that have been frozen into place. Countless crater-like features dot its surface, some round and bright while others show fuzzy, distorted shapes.

Soderblom said some of the photographic detail might be a peculiar type of snow on the planet, where temperatures are at least 200 degrees below zero.

"I'm talking about snow that comes up instead of coming down. It may be leaking out of the interior...and the surface is so cold it freezes," he said.

It has been suggested that Callisto, because it is darker than the other large moons, may be covered with a layer of dust or a mixture of ice and dust.

The bright spots seen earlier have been described as craters that exposed new, fresh ice.

Soderblom, of the U.S. Geological Survey, also noted some long, rather straight markings that resembled "broad, raised ridges."

Manslaughter filed in infant's death

Ted Quention Brown, 24, of Ogden, was charged Monday with voluntary manslaughter in connection with the Sunday death of 18-month-old Joseph Seidel.

The child and his mother, Della Seidel, lived in Ogden at the same address as Brown.

The child died early Sunday morning at Stormont Vail Hospital in Topeka from respiratory and cardiac arrest induced by internal injuries, according to an autopsy performed in Shawnee County. Seidel was transferred from St. Mary Hospital in Manhattan to Topeka Saturday.

Brown was originally arrested for second degree murder, but the charge was changed to voluntary manslaughter by the county attorney, who files the formal charges for the county.

County Attorney Dennis Sauter said he had more evidence than was available to the police at the time of the arrest. The chance of conviction for voluntary manslaughter, in light of the evidence, was much better than for second degree murder, Sauter said.

Brown is being held in Riley County Jail on $50,000 bond set by Judge Harlon Graham. The preliminary hearing for Brown is set for 1:30 p.m. March 15.

Supreme Court denies review

Media phone records opened up

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Supreme Court refused to protect reporters and news organizations Monday from secret government inquiries about their telephone records.

The justices, voting 6-3, left intact a ruling that the news media are not entitled to be forewarned about such government checks—even when subpoenaed telephone company records might identify confidential sources.

"This action gives the green light to police all over the nation to secretly seize...telephone records of a news organization in an effort to discover confidential sources," said Jack Landau, executive director of the Reporters Committee for Freedom of the Press.

"The result is highly destructive to the whole First Amendment concept of editorial privacy and independence because a reporter's telephone calls tend to be an hour-by-hour profile of his daily reporting activities," Landau said.

A 1974 LAWSUIT filed by Landau's Washington-based organization, Dow Jones & Co., Knight-Ridder Newspapers and 12 journalists challenged the American Telephone & Telegraph Co.'s policy of complying with such government subpoenas without notifying the phone subscriber.

A subscriber's long-distance toll call records, kept by AT&T for six months, contain the date, the city and the connecting number for all calls.

According to court documents, AT&T made toll records available to government agencies on 32,000 occasions from March 1974 through June 1975.

The tactic reportedly was a favorite one of the Nixon administration to discover the sources of news leaks.

TWO LOWER federal courts ruled that AT&T's compliance with the government's requests did not infringe on the press' First Amendment rights and dismissed the lawsuit.

"The First Amendment does not guarantee journalists the right to preserve the secrecy of their sources in the face of good-faith criminal investigations," the U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in Washington ruled last August.

Justices William Brennan Jr., Thurgood Marshall and Potter Stewart voted to hear the appeal, but the votes of four of the court's nine members are needed to grant such review.

Committee urged to reject U.S. right-to-life amendment

TOPEKA (AP)—Opponents of a right-to-life amendment to the U.S. Constitution urged a senate committee reject the proposal Tuesday saying it would infringe the first amendment right to freedom of religion.

Opponents as well as supporters testified before the Senate Federal and State Affairs Committee on a resolution urging Congress to call a constitutional convention to enact a right-to-life amendment.

The Rev. Jack Bremer, representing the Kansas East Conference of the United Methodist Church, opposed the resolutions saying there are no medical or scientific answers to the question of when a fetus becomes a person, only reflections of religious beliefs.

Therefore if the government should adopt one answer as correct, such as the Roman Catholic contention that "person-hood" begins at conception, the government would restrict the religious freedoms of all citizens to make their own choice, he said.

Terry Dirks, reresenting the Kansas chapter of National Abortion Rights Action League, agreed with Bremer, saying the constitutional amendment would not only limit the religious freedoms but would also jeopardize the safety of the potential mother.

An abortion performed in the first three months of pregnancy is 12 times physically safer than childbirth and about five times safer in preventing mental illness.

She also said illegal abortions are 40 times more dangerous than legal abortions.

Supporters of the right-to-life amendment also spoke to the committee urging it endorse the resolution saying the right-to-life amendment would guarantee the fundamental right to life of all persons.

Thefts, mounting costs swell cafeteria prices

When students return from spring break they will find K-State Union cafeteria food prices will have increased again.

Rising food and maintenance costs, and an increase in the number of trays and dishes being stolen are the reasons for the price increase, according to Terry Adams, director of the Union food service.

"We are being nickeled and dimed to death," Adams said. "Our expenses increase only a small amount at one time, but when you add the increases from the past several months together you have a very substantial increase," he said.

Prices charged by the cafeteria remained the same during the fall semester but were increased in January.

Adams said records are being kept to help determine how much the cafeteria's expenses have increased during the past year.

The tally showed some food prices have increased as much as 75 percent in the last year.

Prices have increased regularly for round steak, green beans, pears, grape juice and even pepper, Adams said.

One of the larger price rises was for the ground beef used for hamburgers. In February 1978 one pound of ground beef patties cost 85 cents. The price increased to $1.49 in one year. Although this is an increase of 75 percent, the cafeteria has raised their price for hamburgers only 15 percent.

The cafeteria is now using dry and canned goods ordered before prices increased in December. These items are expected to last until April and then prices will increase, Adams said.

According to Adams, the prices charged by the cafeteria are 2.7 times the original price of the food.

"We try to keep our prices down to give the kids a break," Adams said. "We know the students are on a fixed budget, but our buying expenses are not fixed," he said.

Student hits jackpot in crossword contest

Larry Lindstrom is $775 richer than he was Friday.

Lindstrom, sophomore in accounting, competed Sunday against 4,700 contestants in a crossword puzzle contest sponsored by the Wichita Eagle Beacon newspaper.

Lindstrom and another contestant won $1,550 which they had to split because both solved the puzzle by the Wednesday deadline.

"I don't usually do crossword puzzles, but I thought this puzzle was easier than any I had seen in the Wichita paper," Lindstrom said.

"This is the first substantial thing that I've ever won."

Lindstrom said he has no idea what he'll do with his winnings. His choices are buying stereo equipment, replacing the tires on his car or going to Los Angeles this summer.

The prize money started at $200 and increased by $75 each week for 18 weeks until Lindstrom helped solve the puzzle.

Art exhibit like 5-and-10 store

By DAVID GREUSEL
Collegian Reviewer

This year's Student Comprehensive Art Exhibition is packed so tightly into the Union Gallery the space more resembles a colorful 5-and-10-cent store than an art gallery.

The show resembles a dime store in another way as well. It has some good stuff and some junk. The good stuff, however, is quite good.

Sculpture steals the show, and two samples stand out from the crowd. "Centrex XXVL," by Malcolm Dumas, senior in fine arts, a piece which puts the "pop" back into pop art, and "Anaphase," by Gary Jantz, graduate in art education, a dramatic steel sculpture which gives the impression of thick steel plates ripping themselves in half.

Collegian Review

There are some delightful pieces in the ceramic display case, such as a bizarre contact lens case designed by Tom Madden, sophomore in fine arts. Also in the ceramic case are a coconut and silver place setting by Jim Gugg, junior in art, and a poncho made of hand-spun alpaca by Kathy Kesner, senior in fine arts. Personally, I thought Kesner's silver and brass rattle more deserving of an award than her poncho, but there's no accounting for juries.

EVEN HARDER to understand is the jury's award of Best in Show to "Past Six," a painting by Jimalene Jeffery, senior in fine arts. It's not a bad painting, but Jeffery has not yet achieved a mastery of her medium, oils, in the same way Jantz has mastered steel with his nimble welding torch.

Other paintings of note in this show are "Sardines and Crackers" by Dick Gage, senior in humanities, and two political abstracts by Baharian Akbar, which simplistically illustrate the turmoil in Iran with transparent visual metaphors.

There are a number of pencil and other drawings clustered tightly on the gallery's east wall, the best of which are "Convergence" by Brenda Willis, senior in fine arts, an ink and collage work which makes historical references to Renaissance studies, and "Forest Pool," a handsome ink and rubber cement abstraction by Randall Bennett, junior in pre-design professions.

And finally, climaxing a long and weary search for one really good watercolor painting of the Kansas prairie, is "Across the Field" by Steve Moser, senior in art education.

Moser is one of the few watercolor artists on campus this year who can handle a brush in a manner which is neither sloppy wash nor labored rendering.

All in all, the students of K-State have proven themselves rather well in this year's comprehensive exhibition, a fact which bodes well for the future of art in Kansas.

Coffeehouse nooner

Group shows promise, lacks variety

By SUSAN BRINK
Collegian Reviewer

When Todd Pringle, Kathy Cott, Mark Reinhardt and Randy Clark presented Tuesday's Nooner, they weren't playing someone else's music.

In the 45-minute performance, all the music they presented in a near-full Catskeller was written by Pringle, sophomore in animal science and industry (ASI).

The style of the first song, an instrumental titled "Pink Rose," was slow and pleasant; it was indicative of the group's entire performance. Although they handled the mellow numbers nicely, it got a little repetitious. The remedy would have been adding something with a quicker tempo.

The group relies heavily on Pringle's guitar-playing ability, and he handles the responsibility well. He is a master on the guitar and his vocals, though a little breathy, are easy to listen to.

The overall effect would have been improved if variety had been added; if other members of the group had either sung along with Pringle or done some solos themselves.

ONE OF the better parts of the performance was the flute playing of Cott, sophomore in home economics. It is a welcome addition to the traditional sing-along guitar music and added a lot to the group.

Clark, freshman in ASI, playing the casaba, tended to overpower on several of the numbers. But he and Reinhardt, freshman in ASI, on bass guitar, created a nice background for the group's brand of music.

The group was noticeably uncomfortable while performing, but perhaps this was due to lack of experience. They need to loosen up, liven up and get into their music more deeply.

About half the numbers the group performed were instrumental. These were generally well done. They usually blended well and there was good balance between guitar and flute. Most were pleasant, "put your head on my shoulder" tunes which would have made great studying background music.

The problem with the group's music was it became too predictable; the audience began to expect a succession of slow, mellow songs. The group really needed to liven things up with a couple of good, hard-hitting fast numbers.

Despite the fact members of the group were ill at ease on stage, and despite the fact their performance needed more energy and variety, the group rendered 45 minutes of good, easy-listening music.

With a little more practice and experience, the group has potential.

Historical pottery exhibited

Pottery from all parts of the world and all eras will be on display in the Ambry Gallery in West Stadium s..rting March 20.

This collection of pots and other artifacts belongs to Angelo Garzio, professor of art.

Garzio started collecting pottery while he traveled to such places as Africa and South America. He also lived in the Orient for a year.

There also will be pottery from Finland, Germany and early America in the show.

"These are the tools I use in my classroom," Garzio said, who teaches a class in history of cermanics.

Garzio said he feels it is more beneficial to students to study the original pieces of pottery, than to study ceramics from slides or pictures.

"There aren't too many of these pieces in the state that you don't have to go to a museum to see," Garzio said.

The collections includes a small rustic tea pot, a Japanese saki bottle, and African ceremonial drums and masks.

From the early YI dynasty, Garzio has collected rice bowls, which the Japanese now use as tea bowls for their tea ceremony.

He has pieces made by the Mochica and Nezca Indians, and pottery from the Egyptian old kingdom.

Garzio urges the public to come to the art show, because it will give people a chance to see the original pots of past eras.

The show will run until the April 1. There also will be a brief exhibition by Clary Illian, a potter from Iowa.

An apprentice of Burnard Leach, one of the western world's foremost potters, Illian will be presenting a two-day workshop on April 2 and 3, Garzio said.

Wagner to conduct choir

Since the days of craftsmen and apprenticeships, students have gained experience and insight by working with experienced masters.

The K-State Concert Choir will have a chance to learn from a master Thursday when it performs with Roger Wagner, director of the Roger Wagner Chorale.

The performance will be part of the American Choral Directors Association national convention at the University of Missouri, Kansas City (UMKC).

Opening the convention will be performances by several different choirs. The Concert Choir will share a feature spot with the choirs from UMKC and William Jewell College. The choirs, with the Kansas City Philharmonic orchestra, will perform "Requiem," a Gregorian chant by Durufle, at Music Hall in downtown Kansas City.

Wagner, a resident of Los Angeles, is considered one of the better-known choral conductors in America, according to Rod Walker, associate professor of music and director of Concert Choir.

Wagner had direct exposure to Gregorian music because his father was a cathedral organist in Paris, France, Walker said.

"It will be great for the kids to sing with him; he's very well-known," Walker said. "He knows the work backwards."

The choir has trained for the concert here under Walker's direction. They will leave for Kansas City today and will rehearse with Wagner several times before their Thursday evening per-..rance.

Interpretations offer 'enjoyable baloney'

Dreams: 'You can set your watch by them'

By NANCY REESE
Collegian Reporter

A mist engulfs you as you walk. Even though you're not sure where you're going, you keep walking. Suddenly, the next step takes you over the edge of a cliff. You're falling, falling, falling.

You wake with a start. Your heart is pounding your body is bathed in a cold sweat.

If you had hit the ground in your sleep, would it have killed you in real life? Would the shock have been too much for your body?

The answer to those questions is no, according to Dr. Charles Thompson, professor of psychology at K-State.

"I'm living proof that the fallacy isn't so," Thompson said. "I had such a dream and I'm still living."

Another fallacy is that people don't dream in color.

"Sure you dream in color. Why not?" Thompson said. "Close your eyes and imagine something. You imagine in color, and dreams are also ideas you make up. They come from inside you."

ONE MISCONCEPTION people have about sleeping and dreaming is that it's a bad idea to wake a person who is sleepwalking because it would be a traumatic experience for them.

"Care should be used when waking a sleepwalker. The person will be a little frightened and disoriented, but it's not a traumatic experience," Thompson said.

About one-third of our lives is spent in sleep, and things besides dreaming occur while a person sleeps, Thompson said.

Some common sleeping disorders are bruxism (teeth grinding) and somnabulism (sleep walking). Thompson said about one in twenty people sleepwalk.

An uncommon sleeping disorder is sleep apnea, Thompson said. This is a period of sleep when a person can't breathe.

Brainwaves and Rapid Eye Movements (REMs) detect whether a person is in a dream stage. In REM sleep, the pupils move from side to side or up and down during a dream. The dream stage is the deepest stage of sleep, Thompson said.

Most people have four or five dreams a night, he said. The first dream usually begins an hour and a half after a person falls asleep.

"You could set your watch by it," Thompson said. "The time between dreams gets shorter and the dreams get longer."

The first dream lasts for about 10 minutes and another hour passes before the next dream starts, Thompson said.

EXPERIMENTS DONE on people while they were in a dream stage showed people who were kept from dreaming were irritable and grouchy in the waking state, Thompson said. In the experiments, the people were wakened just before they entered a REM dream.

The following night, the subjects were allowed to sleep during the REM period, and skipped the light sleep stage going directly into the REM state.

"It was like they were trying to catch up with the REM sleep they had lost," Thompson said. "They were trying to get it (REM sleep) back."

Sleep-producing drugs may also affect REM sleep, and for this reason they are bad, Thompson said.

"The drugs put you to sleep, but they tend to cut down on REM sleep, and your body wants REM sleep," he said. "The next night, you have a REM rebound. You could have several intense dreams or nightmares. It's a viscious circle, and the pills intensify it."

Thompson doesn't agree with an old American health rule that people must have eight hours of sleep a night.

"If you need eight hours of sleep, your body will tell you," he said. "There was a documented case in England of a guy who could get by with 15 minutes of sleep a night. He led two separate lives. He had two full-time jobs."

Even though there are books on dream interpretation Thompson said there is no dependable way to interpret dreams.

"I just hope that people don't take all of what is said in dream interpretation books seriously," Thompson said. "Most books on dream interpretation are enjoyable baloney, but we all enjoy a big slice of baloney every so often."

Farrell tastes flavor of international news

K-State is a long way from Europe and Asia, but news from these continents can be read in Farrell Library.

Foreign newspapers are subscribed to by the library or donated as gifts, according to James Lu, social science and humanities librarian.

He said the biggest contribution of foreign papers comes from Asian students at K-State. The library receives six or seven Chinese and Korean newspapers as gifts, he said.

The library has a budget of approximately $178.80 to subscribe to the papers, he said.

"We subscribe to Russian, German, Spanish and French papers to support the modern language department curriculum," Lu said.

The library's collection includes Pravda, a Russian daily, Nouvelles litteraires, a French weekly, Carrieve Della Sera, an Italian weekly, and Die Zeit, a German weekly donated to the library by the German Consulate.

"We are expecting to increase the budget because of inflation to keep the present number of foreign subscriptions," Lu said.

He said the foreign papers are kept in the second floor lobby and the South Asia section on third floor.

"The papers come to us by service mail or airmail and are back issues," he said.

The papers are kept for a week and then discarded for recycling purposes, he said.

Sylvia Blanding, South Asia librarian, said the South Asia department spends $400 a year for the Hindustan Times, a daily which is airmailed, and three other weeklies.

Blanding said a nuumber of other papers are received by the library as gift subscriptions. Other foreign papers are also placed in the section because of the inability of mail sorters to read their titles, she said.

"We are becoming a catch all," Blanding said.

Juco conference centers on transferring college credit

It isn't always easy to get college credit transferred from one school to the next.

In an effort to improve credit transfers, the Office of Admissions and Records is sponsoring a community college conference beginning at 8 a.m. Thursday in the K-State Union.

Kansas junior colleges will send 58 representatives to the conference to talk with K-State students who attended the junior colleges. K-Staters will relay information about problems they faced in coming to the University, according to Cyndy Broadie, assistant director of admissions.

This will enable the junior colleges to evaluate their programs and possibly adjust them to help transfer students coming to K-State, she said.

Invitations were sent to 3,000 transfer students and about 300 have indicated they will attend.

Meetings with K-State college representatives will be in the afternoon so junior college representatives may attend the Landon Lecture at Thursday morning in McCain Auditorium, Broadie said.

Grain science offers FFA scholarships

Three Kansas Future Farmers of America (FFA) may study milling, feed or bakery science at K-State next year with the assistance of three new $1,000 scholarships offered by the Department of Grain Science and Industry.

The scholarships will be awarded annually to incoming freshmen or junior college transfers who are FFA members, Charles Deyoe, department head, said.

"No other university in the United States offers B.S. degrees in these three areas," he said.

"I feel that we have really good opportunities for kids who have problems staying on the farm in production agriculture," Deyoe said. "Many times our graduating students have three or four job opportunities."

The grain science department has approximately 110 students in milling, 35 in feed science and 400 in bakery science.

Nearly $60,000 in scholarships already are awarded annually by the department, and companies have donated approximately $2.7 million in equipment for classroom and research work, Deyoe said.

Student loan program default rate increasing

WASHINGTON (AP)—The government Monday made public the college loan default rates that have thrown the national direct student loan program into a deficit of more than $700 million.

At more than 200 colleges, the default rate as of June 30 was 50 percent or more. The national rate was 17.4 percent, compared with a 10 percent default rate in the federally subsidized guaranteed student loan program, which is run through banks and other lenders.

The 20-year-old national direct student loan program is operated by colleges and universities using 90 percent federal funds.

Many of the colleges with the worst default rates are beauty schools, business schools or two-year colleges. Robert Coates, an HEW official, said the default rate at proprietary institutions was 33 percent and at public community colleges, 35 percent.

Health, Education and Welfare Secretary Joseph A. Califano Jr. recently announced plans to step up pressure on colleges to improve operation of the loan program, and to take over collection of loans that have been in default the longest.

Califano is planning to issue new regulations, to be effective by the 1980-81 school year, that would cut off federal loan funds unless colleges meet performance standards to reduce their default rates.

While the guaranteed student loan rate was dropping from 14 percent to less than 10 percent in the past year, the national direct student loan rate climbed from 16.9 percent to 17.4 percent.

More than 800,000 of these loans are in default for $702 million, as well as 350,000 guaranteed student loans for $407 million.

Although it is the worst-run program from the federal viewpoint, the national direct student loan program is the best deal for students, with an interest rate of only 3 percent. The guaranteed student loan rate is 7 percent. The loans are not repaid until a year after the student graduates or leaves college.

The state with the lowest default rate was North Dakota (4.6 percent), followed by Wyoming (6.5 percent) and South Dakota (8.8 percent). The highest rates were in Alaska (30.4 percent), the District of Columbia (25.2 percent) and Mississippi (24.1 percent).

Here is a state-by-state breakdown of area colleges with National Direct Student Loan default rates of 50 percent or higher as of last June 30:

Arkansas—21.4. American College of Commerce, 54.1; East Arkansas Community College, 75.9; Garland County Community College Philander Smith College, 54.2; Shorter College, 70.3; University of Arkansas-Pine Bluff, 64.3.

Illinois—18.2. American School of Beauty Culture, Des Plaines, 60; Bryman School, Chicago, 55; Central YMCA Community College, Chicago, 62; City College of Chicago-Central, 70; Columbia College, 76; Debbies Schools of Beauty Culture, Chicago, 60 and 56; Electronics Technical Institute, 54; Flamingo Beauty College, Springfield, 50; Hebrew Theological College, 61; Kishwaukee College, 51; Moraine Valley Community College, 59; National College of Education, Chicago, 57; Prairie State College, 64; Sawyer College of Business, Oak Park, 63; Sawyer College of Business, Waukegan, 100; State Community College, 82; Trend International Beauty College, 54.

But I thought Soldner played basketball...

By CINDY COX
Contributing Writer

It looks like K-State may have found another asset for its football program. The asset comes in a package well-suited for the game.

Sports

It's a 235-pounder on a 6-7 frame. He is a good student and athlete. Offensive Coordinator Carl Selmer said he has very good size and pretty good quickness and agility.

It sounds like a new face K-State fans will want to watch for next fall, but the circumstances are a little misleading.

Although he is an athlete, this guy's never played football. The coaches won't be able to redshirt him, either, because he's a senior at K-State, not a high school blue-chipper. And, if the whole truth must be known, it's not even a new face to K-State fans.

In fact, it's an old, familiar name in a new, unfamiliar situation. And playing football is an unfamiliar situation for K-State's most recent grid walk-on, Steve Soldner.

"I don't even know if I can play," Soldner said, "I don't even know how to put on shoulder pads."

SOLDNER SAID he always wanted to play football, but never had the chance. He said his high school in Farina, Ill. was so small it didn't have a football team. All of the teams in the conference played fall baseball.

"I've been thinking about it for a long time," he said.

Any college student has four years of eligibility in all intercollegiate sports and each person has five years from the time he starts school to use up any or all of that eligibility, Soldner said.

Soldner will complete a dual degree in mechanical engineering technology and business next year.

"I'm going to stay at school an extra year to play football and I'm getting a dual degee since I'll be here," Soldner said.

Before making a final decision to go out for football, Soldner said he talked to Selmer and basketball Coach Jack Hartman. Hartman played both football and basketball in college and both he and Selmer mentioned the fact that there are professional football players that were basketball players in college.

Selmer cited Cornell Greene of the Dallas Cowboys as an example. He said Greene was an outstanding basketball player at Utah State and went on to become a successful defensive back for the Cowboys.

The Cowboys must believe basketball players have football potential, because Soldner received a letter from the Dallas organization about a month ago.

"They send out a lot of those form letters. It's not any big thing," Soldner said.

SELMER SAID the football coaches are really excited about the fact that Soldner is going to go out for football.

"We respect him as an athlete from what he's shown on the basketball court. We realize he hasn't played football and hope he can help us," he said.

"He certainly ought to be able to catch a football," Selmer said.

Selmer said Soldner has to learn how to block, but his aggressive play on the basketball court indicated he should be able to handle the contact.

He said the agility drills for football will probably be different than anything Soldner has done before and a weightlifiting program to increase overall strength will also be set up for Soldner.

"I say that tongue-in-cheek since I don't know how strong he is," Selmer said.

Soldner said he will start a conditioning program for football after spring break. He said the coaches are going to give him information concerning the terminology he needs to know.

Soldner said he will probably be a tight end. His size, agility and coordination are all assets that could help him in the position.

"We appreciate the fact that he's coming out and hope he can do well," Selmer said.

Soldner will be giving football his best shot when spring drills begin for the Wildcats March 30.

That is, if he figures out how to get the shoulder pads on.

Wilcox bounces back from knee injury...

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

Dec. 2, 1977—LeAnn Wilcox drives hard to the free throw line, stops and prepares to fire a 15-foot jump shot. Her left knee buckles. She crumples to the floor, clenching her teeth in pain. "Why doesn't somebody get over here and help me?" she wonders. She hears the crowd screaming, although she was later told Ahearn Field House was quiet enough to hear a pin drop.

Feb. 26, 1979—K-State works the ball, trailing by one point in the second overtime. Wilcox takes a pass 20 feet from the basket and dribbles to the middle, preparing to take a 15-foot jump shot. The ball leaves her hand, rolls around the rim and drops through. She has her 29th point of the night and a one-point victory over arch-rival Kansas. This time she hears real screaming, as K-State fans in Allen Fieldhouse go crazy.

"The first person I saw was my dad," Wilcox said. "The last time he came down on the floor was in a high school championship game. I thought, 'this must be important because he doesn't come down here unless it is.'"

THUS, the rehabilitation of Wilcox's knee was complete. K-State won its conference by beating 17th-ranked Kansas for the second time this year. The 'Cats won a trip to regionals, and Wilcox's 15-point average was a key factor.

But, she probably was not thinking of conference championships in that December 1977 game against Wayland Baptist.

"I still remember falling down," she said. "After that shot went up and hit the backboard, I looked down at my legs, and they just kind of folded like I was squatting, and I just toppled over.

"I can't describe how much it hurt," she said. "It was like there were no different parts to my leg—no knee, no ankle—it was just one sensation."

That sensation meant she had a problem. The anterior cruciate, a ligament which runs from the back of the femur (thigh bone) to the front of the tibia (shin bone), was severely stretched and would have to be removed in a five-hour operation.

The medial collateral, a ligament on the outside of the knee, was torn from the bone and had to stapled back on.

TO FURTHER compound the problem, the synovial capsule, which holds the fluid around the knee, was ruptured and fluid drained down into her calf.

She was sentenced to six weeks in a hip-to-toe cast and three weeks on crutches, but she didn't let it completely stop her workouts.

"I started lifting weights with the cast on," Wilcox said. "I did some stuff I wasn't supposed to do, but I think it prevented some atrophy."

When she began playing basketball again, Wilcox avoided some of the psychological problems of many injured athletes.

"I didn't tell myself that I wouldn't think about my knee," she said. "I just realized that if something did happen, it wouldn't bother me, because I had accepted the fact that there was something wrong."

THANKS to a huge knee brace, which is a sort of substitute anterior cruciate made of foam, metal and elastic material, Wilcox is able to play full speed.

"(The knee) really doesn't bother me," she said. "I'd be upset if it was injured again, but I could accept it.

"A lot of (injured) people wince when they see players fall on their knee, but it really doesn't affect me.

"I was never babied, and I think that helped."

...but all is not rosy

By KENT GASTON
Sports Editor

LeAnn Wilcox is the leading scorer for the regional-bound K-State Wildcats, but all is not rosy.

An interpretation is still pending which will decide if K-State is in compliance with Title IX regulations. In effect, the athletic department will find out from HEW if men's and women's athletics are going to be equal.

"To me, it's very obvious," Wilcox said. "If somebody gets something and somebody else doesn't, it's unfair, no matter what the rules say. Maybe the rules are wrong."

"I'll be relieved when they come out. We'll know what's right and wrong according to the law."

Wilcox has a special interest in the ruling, because if something doesn't change, she may not be a Wildcat after next year.

SHE WAS redshirted last year, giving her an extra year of eligibility. But, a rule of the Association of Intercollegiate Athletcs for Women (AIAW) says that a woman athlete may not receive scholarship money for her fifth year of school.

That money is important to Wilcox, because she is from Independence, Mo, and would have to pay out-of-state tuition.

The NCAA allows men to receive scholarships their fifth year.

"If Title IX comes out and says men can get their fifth year paid for but women still can't (becuase of AIAW), then I hope our (athletic) department does somethng about being in AIAW."

Wilcox said Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds told her something will be done about her fifth year, but no specific agreement has been made.

"Maybe it's a disadvantage for us to belong to AIAW," Wilcox said. "We can't get the benefits men get from the NCAA.

"(The AIAW's) philosophy is too wholesome-minded," she said. "They're depriving us of the things we should have because they're afraid of the corruption men's athletics have gotten into.

ONE of the areas in which Wilcox hopes to see reform is cold cash.

"My coaches have to decide whether to take so much money out of scholarships and put it in travel, or take money out of travel and give more scholarships," Wilcox said.

"We can't travel enough to get national recognition," she said. "And national recognition is supposed to be one of our goals.

"Men have enough money to give athletes everything that they could possibly get, according to NCAA regulations."

"I don't get my books paid for, but Rolando (Blackman) does," she said. "If he doesn't graduate in four years, he can get his fifth year paid for. I can't."

"I just wish my coach didn't have to make decisions on the things we should be able to have."

Allerheiligen's 'Cadillac' arrives; new weight room complete soon

BY CINDY FRIESEN
Asst. Sports Editor

When Bill Allerheiligen, K-State's new strength and conditioning coach, first saw the football team's makeshift weight room in the visitor's locker room, it probably looked like a garage compared to the University of Nebraska's facility.

In an effort to improve K-State's strength and conditioning program, the athletic department promised the new coach $30,000 to spend equipping a new "garage."

Allerheiligen, former Nebraska coach, accepted the offer and one of his top priorities for improvement was obtaining a new "Cadillac."

A Nautilus weight machine—the Cadillac of weight machines, according to Allerheiligen—was delivered Monday.

In addition to the Nautilus and conditioning equipment, the new weight room will be painted and a stereo and carpet will be installed, he said.

Allerheiligen said he expects the room will be ready the week after spring break.

"The atmosphere of the weight room is important," he said. "It not only makes it better to work in, but it helps in recruiting."

ALLERHEILIGEN'S strength and conditioning program involves running as well as lifting weights.

"I feel if we leave out one part of that, he won't be a totally conditioned player," he said. "A guy may be able to bench 500 pounds, but if his legs aren't strong, he can't run around the field like he should."

Allerheiligen said each athlete is on an individual conditioning program, depending on his team position and needs.

"In order for a body to make new gains, you have to reach new levels. If that means they have to sweat and work harder, that's what they have to do.

"I'm just trying to help them become the total conditioned player," he said.

Exercise helps show less when students show more

By MARY BICHELMEYER
Collegian Reporter

Did you get fat over the winter?

As winter clothing is removed and it becomes apparent that much of the winter bulk is you rather than the clothing, you might want to escape this unslightly advertisement of hibernation through exercise.

Some K-Staters are preparing for halter-top and swimsuit weather through rhythmic aerobics exercise classes offered through Recreational Services.

Rhythmic aerobics is an exercise program of choreographed routines that include continuous rhythmic activity by combining motor skills, jogging, dance steps and various vigorous exercises.

The rhythmic aerobics exercise program is helpful in improving cardiovascular endurance, coordination, flexibility, balance and agility, said Paula Neugent, graduate in foods and nutrition and one of two class instructors.

"I think most girls come because of the help they get in the areas of weight control and muscle tone," she said.

THE RHYTHMIC aerobics classes are held each weekday afternoon for 30 minutes beginning at noon, and on Monday, Tuesday and Thursday evenings for one hour beginning at 7:30.

The program consists of a progressive warm-up period; a series of vigorous dance type routines from two to four minutes each, and a cool-down period of three to five minutes.

A continuous non-stop workout is provided through the routines covered.

The rhythmics aerobics class was initiated at K-State in 1974 by Raydon Robel, director of Recreational Services.

"I had read about aerobics and was interested," Robel said. "Then in 1974, Continuing Education sponsored a workshop on it, K-State student Cheryl Hill took the workshop. We got together and saw the possibility of offering the class through rec services.

"We got it together and kicked it off that year with Cheryl teaching," he said.

"The class started out in 301 Ahearn with approximately 20 participants," Robel said. "It has now expanded to take up the whole gym and is still growing." On some nights attendance exceeds 200.

"Aerobics has become our biggest program, and as far as I know we are the only school with a program so big," Robel said.

Robel attributes the success of the program to the recent fitness boom.

Riley County police replace worn-out patrol cars

By JEFF MYRICK
Collegian Reporter

New Ford LTD IIs will replace 10 Riley County Police Department (RCPD) patrol cars which have outlived their usefulness to the department.

"Each year we determine what our needs are going to be in that calendar year and we consider our budget. Once we determine how many cars we are going to replace, we decide which ones to replace.

"That determination is based on the history of the cars we have, on the basis of mileage and cost. When it gets to the point of costing us more than is reasonable to operate a vehicle, we trade it in," Al Johnson, RCPD director, said.

"In other words, when we get a car with 50 to 60,000 miles on it, repair bills are running high and it's not in service a lot of the time because we are having it worked on, we make a decision to trade it," he said.

"We look at each car in a given year, come up with how many we're going to trade and see if we've got the money. If we do, we go to the law board and say this is how many vehicles we need to trade this year. At that point, they authorize us to go out on bids for X-number of vehicles.

"We go out and accept bids on the basis of low bids with, of course, minimum specifications, and in this case we came up with the LTD II. They sound like luxury cars, and they are larger than what we have had in the last year or two, but the displacement of the engine itself is not that much larger than what they will be replacing.

"It's all within the same ballpark, except the LTDs are designed to look like they are a little bit larger."

THE LTD IIs retail for $7,610, which works out to roughly $80,000 for the 10 new cars, said Jim Woltje, salesman at a local Ford dealer. With the trade-in allowance from the old patrol cars, the department paid $52,429 for the cars. The vehicles come equipped with a stock 351 cubic inch engine with a two-barrel carburetor.

"The cost of replacing a fleet of cars varies from year to year. To replace 10 cars next year will probably cost 25 percent more than it did this year," Les Bieler, RCPD assistant director, said.

This year, 10 cars were replaced with the department keeping the other five cars in the fleet for further use. Of the 10 new cars, six are on the road now and the other four are being processed.

"To put a car on the road, you have to transfer the radio equipment, the shotgun, the visabar, the lights on top of the car and apply decals. This is quite an operation," Bieler said.

Radios in the cars are of several different brands with varying frequencies and ranges. The type of radio put in a car is determined by what type of service the car will provide. If the car is going to be out in the county, it will have a stronger wattage to be able to reach to town.

All the rural cars are equipped with long range radios and citizen band radios. After transferring all equipment from the old car to the new car, the vehicle is traded in, Bieler said.

The only change in the cars will be a different paint job and, according to Bieler, "There will be a color change only from the standpoint of having the two-tone, as opposed to what used to be two-tone paint in three different places. Now we'll have a white top and a light blue bottom on the cars."

"It was costing us additional monies to have the cars painted in the special manner, so we'll be saving about $100 per unit by accepting an original paint scheme offered to the general public," Johnson said.

The department has three types of vehicles in its fleet and all but one of the cars to be replaced are patrol cars.

"Basically we have three different kinds of vehicles: the patrol vehicle; the unmarked vehicle which are staff-like duty cars; and the special vehicles. Among the special vehicles are the four-wheel drive we have in the north end of the county, where the roads are bad; a small pickup for the animal warden, a station wagon used by the jail staff for transportation of prisoners and another four-wheel drive pickup with capabilities of transporting the bomb disposal trailer," Bieler said.

"As far as the patrol vehicles go, there are different categories. Four of the patrol cars are issued to officers who live in the rural areas and they take that patrol car home with them.

"Because of this, they get more mileage on them before we trade them away. But all the mileage is put on by the same person, as compared to the cars used in town which receive use 24 hours a day, seven days a week by different drivers," he said.

THE OTHER type of patrol car is used only four nights a week for four hours while officers instruct a special course in driving, Bieler said.

By replacing cars in the fleet, the cost of maintaining the fleet will decline until trade-in time arrives, Bieler said. The dealer who sells the cars to the department is responsible for maintenance and repair, he said.

"Two things that cost you to run a car are depreciation and running costs. Depreciation comes in the form of simply driving the car out of the garage, and the time span between when you get the car and when it becomes prohibitive to keep the car.

"The running costs, which are maintenance, gasoline and oil consumption, have the impact of mileage with them. We have determined that at 50 to 60,000 miles it becomes prohibitive to run a car. A third factor that we have to take into account is the fact that these are emergency vehicles, so we have to think about safety," Bieler said.

ACCORDING TO the specifications given to the prospective bidders, vehicles will be operated for long time periods at normal traffic speeds, with frequent periods of idling.

However, the vehicle must be capable of fast acceleration and high-speed performance. Vehicles must meet or exceed all requirements of the federal and state governments for the model year bid. The car must include all standard equipment usually sold and marketed to the retail public unless specifically deleted by request.

The cars are 1979 four-door sedans with a wheelbase of 115 inches minimum and 118 inches maximum.

In order to have enough power to run the lights, siren and additional radios, the cars are furnished with a heavy duty 12-volt alternator capable of handling 60 to 100 amps and a 12-volt 75-to 85-amp sealed long-life battery with a heat shield.

Also included are power steering, an automatic heavy duty transmission engineered for maximum performance and heavy duty police fade-resistant power disc brakes on the front and drum shoe brakes on the rear.

Students in trouble; PTA focuses on schools

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—A PTA campaign for "a new national awareness of what's happening in our schools" came to Kansas City Tuesday, with the organization's president urging parents to become the catalyst for change.

A dozen panel members listened as Kansas City area educators, students and government leaders wove a common thread in hours of testimony—America's urban schools, and the young people who attend them—are in trouble.

The panel has met previously in Philadelphia, Seattle, Houston and Miami, and will soon go to Detroit—the final point in a six-city sweep using the theme, "The PTA Challenges the Cities."

Plans calls for a national gathering in Washington this spring to review the information compiled from the six cities and exchange views with federal officials.

GRACE BAISINGER, national PTA president, urged giving America's students a "foothold to the future" and warned that deteriorating urban areas and their effect on young people threaten this hope.

She called for formation of a federal policy that would address itself to the growing crisis in urban schools.

Money was a key concern of educators at Tuesday's hearing.

"We are not yet bankrupt, but we are moving in that direction," warned Robert Wheeler, superintendent of the Kansas City, Mo., schools.

He said school financing should be permanent, not subject to the current political climate, and should be geared to the economy of the particular area.

Wheeler, a former official of the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), used the forum to pitch for a separate cabinet post for education.

HE SAID his experiences with HEW in Washington showed that education programs were cut or postponed to allow money for health and welfare programs, both of which had built-in escalator clauses.

The problems in America's urban schools are simply a reflection of the inner cities that spawn them, said O.L. Plucker, superintendent of Kansas City, Kan., schools.

"For the past 35 years, America and the federal government in particular have been busily inventing and carrying out a series of programs to treat individual symptoms of urban illness," Plucker said.

Plucker said governmental policies have driven out of the urban center that segment of the population with the greatest economic resources, highest level of education and strongest social and cultural goals.

Those same policies, he added, have locked into the inner city those with the least economic resources, employment skills and mobility, and the highest potential for personal, family and social disorientation.

Local gas prices up; shortage diminishing

Manhattan has yet to experience any great shortages of gasoline but the price is going up anyway.

However, some shortages of heating fuels and diesel fuel have occurred, according to Vance Darland, oil wholesaler of Manhattan Oil Company.

Darland said prices for heating fuels and diesel fuel have increased much faster than gasoline prices during the past month. He said the shortages were caused by the hard winter, but the problem is diminishing as the weather improves.

Ed Darrah, owner of Shop Quik West at 3108 Anderson, said his store has raised its gas price about 7 cents in the past 30 days.

Retailers said they are notified of gas increases by their wholesalers only about 24 hours before delivery, so they can't forecast price increases.

Wholesalers report the price of gas has increased only about 3 cents in the past 30 days, with some reporting no increases.

Bob Seymour, manager of Mini Mart at 1102 Laramie, said he has not experienced any shortage in gas and none has been reported to him by his wholesalers. He said his store regularly purchases gas from two to three wholesalers to avoid any shortages that could arise.

Seymour said his store has experienced jumps in gas prices at the rate of three-fourths to 1 cent per gallon as often as two times per week. He raises the price as suggested by his wholesalers he said.

Some Manhattan retailers have been allocated gas supplies for a year or longer, but they said their allocated supplies have been more than adequate.

East Germany gets NATO war plans

BERLIN (AP)—A woman employee of NATO headquarters in Brussels, Belgium, has defected to Communist East Germany with war plans of the Western alliance, the East German news agency ADN said Tuesday.

Ursel Lorenzen, a confidential secretary on the executive staff, crossed into East Germany Monday, the agency said.

The woman was quoted as saying that increased "war preparations" by NATO were behind her decision to enter East Germany.

ADN said the disclosure of the "fascist past" of NATO Secretary-General Joseph Luns provided the final reason for her move.

Coal-fired plant plans under fire

By SCOTT STUCKEY
News Editor

Besides generating reams of paperwork in voluminous studies, the proposal for a coal-fired power plant at K-State has caused heated controversy among Kansas legislators, University officials and others concerned with the future of K-State and Manhattan.

The major point of contention is the adequacy of the engineering studies concerning the estimated $16 million to $35 million project.

Although the 1978-79 Legislature appropriated $900,000 for final planning of the plant, and Gov. John Carlin has recommended $1.4 million be appropriated for first-year construction in fiscal 1980, some key legislators believe funding should be withheld until further studies are completed.

"No one in his right mind would appropriate (the money) until more questions are answered," said Rep. Michael Hayden, chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee.

Hayden said his committee has adopted legislation which stipulates that neither the $900,000 planning money, nor any money appropriated for plant construction, could be spent without approval of the State Finance Council—a body of legislative leaders and executives chaired by the governor.

THE COMMITTEE will direct K-State to answer a "series of questions" which will help the Legislature determine whether the plant should be built.

Hayden said the University would have to provide more information on the feasibility of co-generation (plant production of electricity as well as heat) and another estimate of the total cost of the plant.

Hayden said the committee bill will go to the House floor next week.

Ross Doyen (R-Concordia) president of the Kansas Senate, has charged that the 1976 engineering study done by the consulting firm Stone and Webster did not fully explore the potential for saving energy through conservation and supplemental energy forms such as solar, wind and hydroelectric.

"I don't think we're getting very good usage of the present plant," Doyen said. "We need to know how well the current plant can handle the job after conservation measures are taken."

Doyen said the Legislature should withhold plant funding until another study is done to evaluate the feasibility of alternative sources and the possibility of heating campus buildings individually instead of by a central plant.

"We need to know the answers before we make a definite decision," he said. "We're not just building a cob-burner, we're putting something up that has a hell of a lot of engineering to it."

Hayden said the feasibility of generating electricity at Tuttle Creek Reservoir with a hydroelectric turbine should also have been given greater consideration in assessing the need for the coal plant.

"There's reason to believe that someday a good percentage of the electrical needs of the University could be met by such a turbine," he said.

Hayden noted that the Kansas Electric Power Cooperative Inc. (KEPCo) has received a federal grant to study the feasibility of electrical power generation at Tuttle Creek and other Kansas lakes. The study being done for KEPCo by an engineering firm will be completed in April, according to a KEPCo representative.

THE ADEQUACY of the plant studies has also been questioned by Manhattan's Chief Planner Gary Stith.

Stith said the studies paid little attention to the plant's "social costs," such as traffic problems caused by coal trucks and possible hindrances to the community's economic development.

Stith said the studies do not provide enough information for the community to decide which of the proposed plant sites is best.

"It's really hard to evaluate because they didn't tell us what sort of impact the plant or the coal storage site would have on the surrounding areas," he said.

Stith said he was concerned that the engineers didn't make much effort to consult city officials about the proposed plant.

"It would have been helpful if they would have come and talked to us about some of our development strategies," he said.

Learning 'cruel' lessons at 65: Derby dishwasher told to resign

By LUKE BROWN
Staff Writer

Dorothy Crist received an unwelcome present on her 65th birthday at the end of January. She was told to retire.

After seven years of washing dishes in the Derby Food Center, Crist found herself out of a job. Crist says she was forced to resign, and, because of recent laws doing away with the mandatory retirement age, it is illegal. Her supervisors say she was asked to retire for her own good and for the good of the food center.

The laws, which took effect last July changed the age of retirement from 65 to 70. However, for a person to continue working after age 65: The person's physical and mental condition must be judged to be compatible with the demands of the position; he must have an acceptable work history; he must not have declining work imput, and his retention must be in the best interests of the university and the state.

"Mrs. Crist was getting on in age, and she had a better life. I thought it would be better for her to take it easy," Phillip Immenschuh, washroom supervisor and Crist's supervisor, said.

"When a person cannot produce in a position in which they are placed, they are replaced," Helen McManis, head dietitian, said. "Her work volume declined."

CRIST QUOTED associate director of housing Jean Riggs as saying "You will retire with the compliments of the University or you will be dismissed."

When asked about the quote, Riggs said, "It probably has a lot of truth to it, the essence is there. I'm not sure if that's the exact wording or not. She was kept around until she was 65 so she would be eligible for retirement benefits. Then they changed the rules and she didn't have to retire at 65. Because of her poor work record, we could have fired her if she had not retired."

Crist disagreed with them and said she was able to continue working.

"All the regular workers and all the students that came in the dishroom to work know that I kept my dishes done up out of the trough and would step down and help someone else if they were having problems," Crist said.

All of the students interviewed who worked with Crist said they thought she was a good worker.

"I think she kept up with the pace and everything really well. I don't think she should have been fired just because of her age," Susan Stoddard, freshman in general, said.

"She kept up just like the students did. She never went a day without smiling. She really cheered everybody up," Connie Goeckel, sophomore in health, physical education and recreation, said.

"She worked as well, if not better, than the other ladies who work down there. I think she kind of got screwed myself," Joe Swarner, freshman in accounting, said.

CRIST'S RATING sheets back up her supervisor's claims that her workload was decreasing and that her work was not satisfactory.

The supervisor's comments on the worker rating sheets, which Crist released to the Collegian, included, "Mrs. Crist does not produce the volume of work expected in the dishroom and laundry assignments. She is ineffective in contacts with her fellow workers. She tends to neglect cleaning of equipment in the dishrooms and laundry."

Both Immenschuh and McManis refused to comment on the criticisms.

Crist could have appealed the poor ratings, but claims she did not know about the procedure.

"She should have appealed the low ratings when she first received them, when they could have been changed," Richard Gordon, head of the Kansas Association of Public Employees, said.

"I thought it (the forced resignation) was pretty brutal, but that's the business side of it; they have all this documentation and there wasn't much she could do," Gordon said.

Crist is in the process of leaving her $50 a month apartment in Manhattan and moving back to her home in Delphos, a small town north of Salina. There she will live in the house she and her husband lived in before his death receiving $200 per month Social Security and $30 per month state retirement pay.

"I guess I am just learning at age 65 just how cruel some people can be," Crist said.

Chronology

1928: K-State's Power Plant is constructed, consisting of three gas-fired boilers (including one from the previous plant in Seaton Hall). A turbo-generator to generate electricity is also installed.

1940: A gas-fired boiler and another turbo-generator are added.

1950: Two new boilers and a turbo-generator are added.

Early '60s: The engineering firm Black and Veatch are commissioned by KP&L to assess the need for plant expansion. A recommendation is made for more boilers.

1968: Two more boilers are installed, replacing two which had been in use since 1928.

1971: The engineering firm Burgess, Latimer and Miller is commissioned by the University to examine the problems of meeting the University's expanding need for electricity, steam and chilled water.

1972: The Burgess report is finished, and plans are made for a new gas-fired plant adjacent to the existing one. The state architect's office begins plans for the plant.

1973: The oil embargo creates a nationwide energy crisis.

1974: The state architect finishes plans for the new plant, and the Legislature appropriates money for it.

1975: The Legislature withdraws the appropriation because of an expected shortage of natural gas and fuel oil. Money is appropriated for a statewide energy study. The consulting firm Stone and Webster undertake the study.

1976: The Stone and Webster report is finished, concluding that the University should build a coal-fired power plant as soon as possible.

1977: The Legislature appropriates money for preliminary planning for a coal-fired plant. Consulting engineers Lutz, Daily and Brain are commissioned.

1979: The Lutz, Daily and Brain report is completed, recommending that the first phase of the plant be constructed by 1982.

Coal-fired...

"When you've got to live with something for 35 years, I think it's important to take a little extra time to make sure you do the right thing."

There is a long list of environmental problems with the proposed plant, but the Manhattan Environmental Board had "absolutely no input" into the plant study, according to John Selfridge, associate professor of regional and community planning, and a former member of the environmental board.

Selfridge said that although an environmental impact statement is not legally required for the K-State plant, it would be beneficial to the community.

'If KP&L were proposing a plant at any of these sites, everybody, including the University, would be screaming for an environmental impact statement," he said.

DESPITE claims to the contrary, University officials maintain that the engineering studies are adequate.

In a meeting Monday with representatives from Stone and Webster, Vice-President designate for University Facilities Gene Cross was told that the firm stands by its study.

Cross said the engineers told him that they had considered all feasible alternatives to the coal plant before determining that coal is the best choice.

As the supplier of K-State's electricity and natural gas, the Kansas Power and Light Co. (KP&L) has also shown interest in the coal-fired plant proposal for K-State.

Cross said KP&L has told University officials that if campus buildings were heated individually, instead of through a central plant system, the University would hold a higher priority in receiving gas, thus minimizing the chances of a shortage.

This is a policy set down by the federal government and the Kansas Corporation Commission (KCC), and is not determined by KP&L policy, according to Hal Hudson, director of public affairs for KP&L.

CROSS SAID KP&L has also indicated that the University would receive a higher priority for natural gas if it would cease cogeneration of electricity.

This policy would change if a bill being drafted by the K-State subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee becomes law.

According to Rep. Rex Hoy (R-Fairway), the subcommittee bill would require the KCC to change the University's standing (in priority for gas) from category seven—which pertains to commercial users of gas—to category three—which pertains to gas used in educational facilities.

Although K-State doesn't use gas for commercial purposes, it is now in category seven because it generates electricity, Hoy said.

The University now generates about 20 percent of the electricity it uses, and has been generating electricity since 1928, when the first turbo-generator was added to the gas boiler plant. More electrical generating equipment was added in 1940 and 1950.

A University request for funding for more turbo-generators in the early '60s was denied by the Legislature. This denial came as a result of a campus study done by the engineering firm Black and Veatch which was commissioned by KP&L, according to Case Bonebrake, utilities superintendent for University Facilities.

THE STUDY completed this year by Lutz, Daily and Brain shows that the University could meet 46 percent of its electrical needs with cogeneration equipment added to the coal plant.

The additional equipment would cost from $4 million to $6 million, but would save the University $6 million on its electricity bills in about eight years, according to the study. In fiscal '78, the University paid KP&L more than $2 million for gas and electricity, according to Bonebrake.

The University could save more on its heating bill if its buildings were heated and cooled individually, instead of by a central plant, according to Hudson.

According to a study of KP&L's billing records, the University buildings heated by the central plant are less energy efficient than those with self-contained heating and cooling systems, Hudson said.

But Bonebrake said KP&L's calculations on this matter are in error. He said KP&L had omitted about 250,000 square feet of building space when it calculated the efficiency of the centrally-heated buildings. This space was mistakenly figured into the assessment of the buildings with self contained systems, he said.

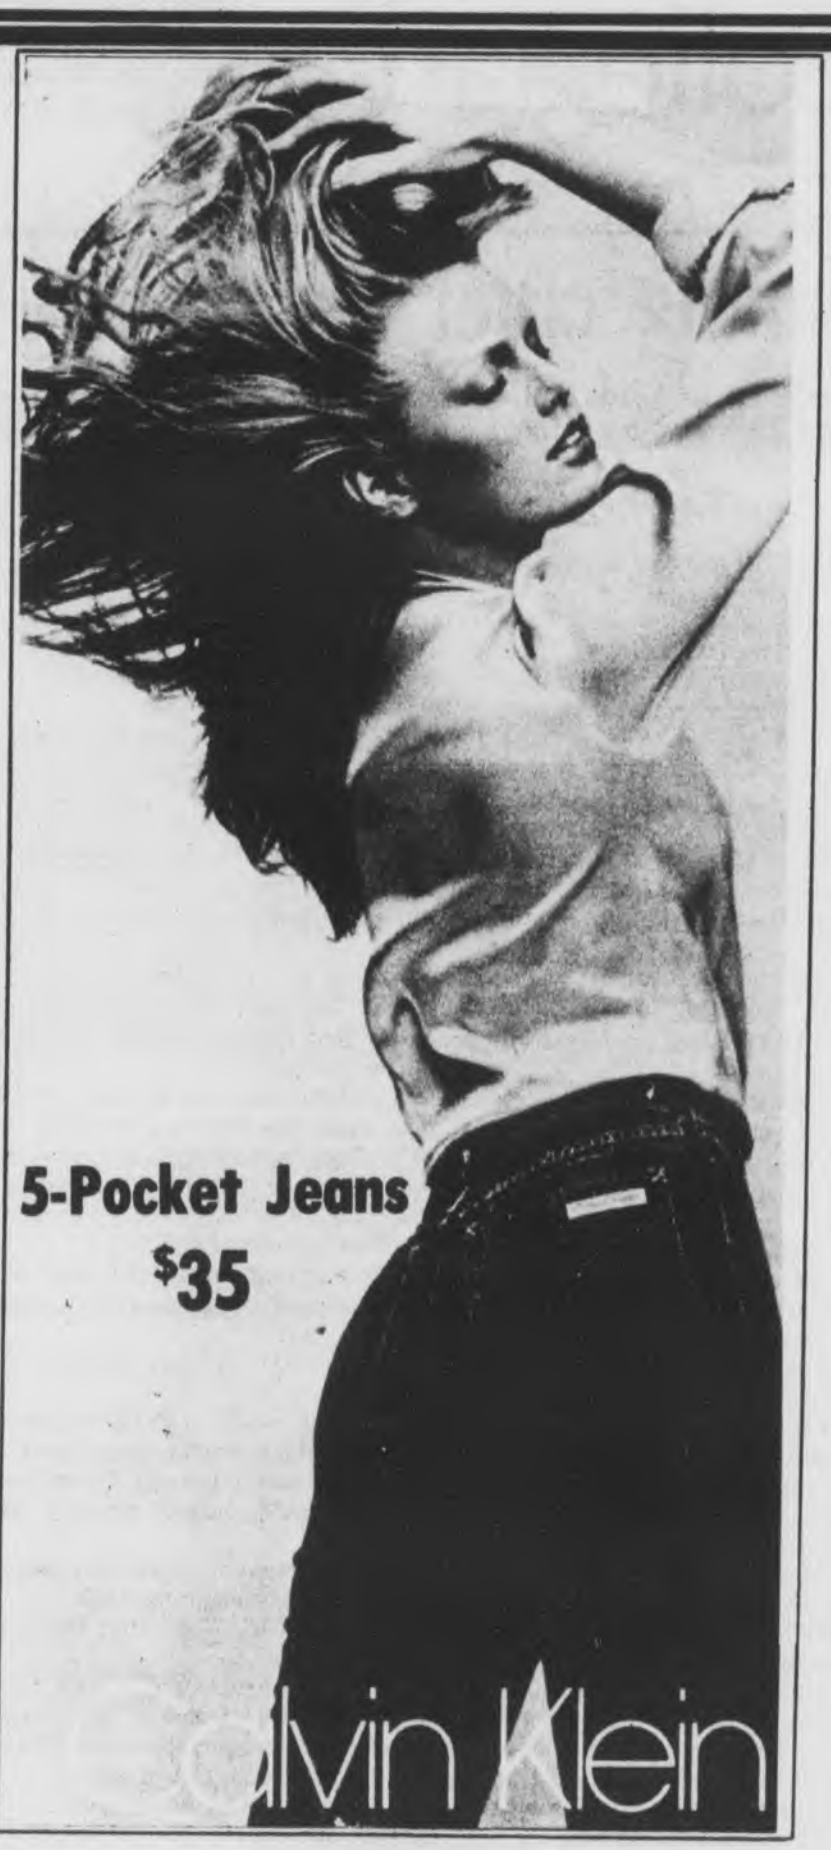
Cross agreed, saying, "There's nothing to show that centralization is not the most efficient way to go, here or anywhere else."

Howard Baker to speak today

Howard Baker Jr., U.S. Senate minority leader from Tennessee, will deliver K-State's 44th Landon Lecture today at 10:30 a.m. in McCain Auditorium.

The Republican Senator's lecture is entitled "Toward a New Republic."

Baker has received national recogniton as vice chairman of the Senate Watergate Committee in 1973 and keynote speaker at the 1976 Republican National Convention.



In the Senate, he is serving on the Committee on Environment and Public Works, the committee on Foreign Relations, and the Committee on Rules and Administration.

Baker did his undergraduate studies at the University of the South and Tulane University. He received his law degree from the University of Tennessee, where he was student body president in 1949.

Cigar case goes up in smoke

RALEIGH, N.C.—The state Court of Appeals has upheld a Superior Court order dismissing a lawsuit by a man who contended that he had been assaulted by a puff of smoke from his boss's cigar.

The state Court of Appeals ruled Tuesday that getting hit by a puff of someone cigar's smoke is a form of "touching, which must be endured in a crowded world."

William T. McCracken, 52, a former Charlotte letter carrier for the U.S. Postal Service, had claimed his supervisor, O.B. Sloan, deliberately blew cigar smoke in his face during a 1975 meeting even though Sloan knew it would aggravate McCracken.

McCracken said that Sloan, currently Charlotte's postmaster, knew that he suffered from a respiratory ailment.

China, Vietnam both claim victory

BANGKOK, Thailand—Vietnam accused Chinese troops of "plundering, burning people's homes and shelling" as they withdrew from Vietnam on Wednesday, but the Chinese-Vietnamese war appeared to be drawing to a close.

It was the first confirmation by the Vietnamese that the Chinese, who announced Monday that they were pulling out of Vietnam, had begun moving back.

The Chinese withdrawal might take two weeks or more because "pulling out is more difficult militarily than advancing," according to Chinese sources in Peking quoted by the Japanese news service Kyodo said.

Kyodo also said China claimed to have killed or wounded 10,000 Vietnamese and to have taken 1,000 prisoners.

The Vietnamese news agency claimed Vietnam had "put out of action 45,000 enemy soldiers, knocked out 273 tanks and armored personnel carriers and hit hundreds of artillery pieces and mortars." The claim was quoted in a dispatch by the Soviet news agency Tass from Hanoi.

The Vietnamese confirmation of the Chinese pull-back, coupled with Vietnam's promise to refrain from attacking withdrawing troops, made it appear the 17-day-old war was nearing an end. Both countries have claimed victory.

However, Western observers were wary. In Washington, U.S. Assistant Secretary of State Richard Holbrooke said "certain Chinese units" have returned to China. But he said, "I am not prepared to call it a withdrawal. It may be only redeployment."

Terrorists bomb Israeli buses

JERUSALEM— Palestinian terrorists planted three bombs on Israeli tourist buses Wednesday to protest President Carter's weekend Mideast peace mission. Two of the three bombs exploded and 12 persons were injured in one of the blasts, police said.

The pro-Moscow Democratic Front for the Liberation of Palestine said in a statement released in Beirut, Lebanon, that it was responsible for the bombings. The statement said the blasts were designed to "confront Carter's visit to the area, which is aimed at achieving unilateral peace between Egypt and Israel at the expense of our Palestinian people's rights."

The guerilla group said orders were issued to its fighters "to step up the military operations against Israel to protest Carter's visit."

Violence ripens Iran for new crisis

TEHRAN, Iran—Iran's provisional government appeared headed for a crisis Wednesday after the Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, the architect of the revolution, called the nation's ministers "weak" and derided them for believing "everthing should be copied from the West."

The Khomeini-appointed government of Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan, primarily Western-educated liberals, has expressed anger over the wave of secret trials, executions and arrests carried out by Khomeini's followers. A revolutionary firing squad executed six men Tuesday night after they were found guilty of kidnapping boys and placing them at the service of homosexuals.

No disturbances were reported in the oil fields, however. Officials of the National Iranian Oil Co. announced that within a 24-hour period crude oil production rose by 300,000 barrels to 2 million barrels as the country's chief refining complex in Abadan neared maximum capacity.

Khomeini's criticisms came as rumors persisted that Bazargan is considering resigning in frustration over his lack of power. His aides denied reports that he resigned.

Title IX helps women...

Title IX—the big question mark.

On one side, it seems unfair to fund high revenue-producing men's sports the same as low revenue-producing women's sports. On the other side, women's sports are never going to produce revenue unless they are given more money.

There is no perfect answer. However, when the finer points are decided (for example, whether football is included in the regulations) somebody is going to be justifiably upset.

The question is, when the guidelines are finalized, who will suffer more, men's sports or women.

It is a problem sports fans don't want to face, especially because it might mean less money spent on their favorite male sport.

But the question envelopes an audience much larger than sports fans at a particular college—larger than sports fans in general.

True, strict compliance with the Title IX might temporarily damage a particular sport.

But non-compliance, or slippery sidestepping of the regulations, could have a permanent effect on American women, even women who couldn't care less about spectator sports.

How?

Since many professional athletes receive their basic training in college, it follows that professional women's sports will increase if women can receive training in college.

There would be more role models—women like Billy Jean King and Chris Evert—to encourage women to get involved in sports.

Since role models had a lot to do with popularizing women's sports, more role models would contribute to a higher percentage of women actively involed in sports—making a healthier population.

Statistics show girls and boys are equally strong before puberty, but after puberty, women fall way behind men.

Doctors say there is no physical reason for this, but there is a sociological one.

Society doesn't encourage women to remain as physically fit as men—it encourages them to be dainty and delicate.

That attitude is changing today, but society has a long way to go before it writes an obituary for the belief.

Contributing to a healthier population is more important than winning the Big 8 title.

Student drivers, new cars don't mix

I practically take it for granted that I can drive. It takes no courage to put a key into the ignition and take off.

I don't worry about traffic too much. After all, driving is a skill I use everyday. I no longer think about how scary it is.

Since I have been in Manhattan I have filled my time with such worthwhile things as TV, discoing and—terrorizing unsuspecting student drivers.

Yes, I know it is the lowest. I think of that each time I pretend to have lost control of my car as I zip past the would-be motorist.

I stoop to feigning a pass or deliberately turning on the wrong blinker. Sometimes passengers in my car wave and make faces or hold up nasty signs to the poor student driver, just to fluster him.

I never considered the damage I could have been causing. Student drivers try to do a good job. They just don't have the confidence we take for granted because of their inexperience. They could have made a serious mistake because of my pranks.

I had almost forgotten how I felt during my first few solos—until last weekend.

MY KID BROTHER Andy came to visit armed with a yellow driver's permit and my mom's brand new Firebird Formula.

Andy is a smart kid who wants desperately to acquire a playboy image. The new license and sportscar scored well with his new wordly view.

I found this a little hard to swallow. To me, he was still my rug-rat brother who somehow got to be six feet tall while I have been away at college.

My brother was a little nervous about driving in a different city but he wanted to make a good impression. He needed to prove he was becoming a great driver.

So here we were cruising Aggieville in my mom's flashy Formula. We dragged Moro and everything went smoothly until we came to the stop sign at the end of the street.

ANDY STOPPED all right. But after that initial stop, he decided to cross the intersection in front of an oncoming Vega. I nearly dove out of the car.

He apparently thought it was a four-way stop even though the cross street had the right of way. Happily for us, the Vega was kind enough to stop when he saw Andy panic because I could not calmly remind him to wait for all traffic to clear. That was close.

I wisely decided the ride should end as soon as possible. We managed to make our way to the parking lot at my sister's apartment. After two attempts to park in a space much too small and a last-resort circle around the building, he somehow parked it next to a wall. We were back at last.

Now I have wised up. I will pledge to never again play silly, dangerous pranks on new drivers. I will remain calm when my sixteen-year-old brother drives, out of courtesy and self-preservation.

And last, but no means least, I will think twice before any sixteen-year old of mine learns to drive in my new car.

...in spite of 'supporters'

"Women have discriminated against women in collegiate sports."

Say, what?!

"The unfortunate thing that has developed from all this is that any time you talk about Title IX, a man is presumed to be wrong and the women presumed right. It is brought on by a false premise from HEW, and that is that women have been discriminated against either by men or by institutions."

Speaking from his austere NCAA office, Executive Director Walter Byers babbles around the issues of Title IX.

Wake up, all of you frustrated jocks who think like Byers. There's a delicate issue here, and it requires more than sexist remarks.

Title IX emerged in 1972 to end sex discrimination—not to fuel a cynical mind.

Set down by the Department of Health, Education and Welfare (HEW), Title IX forbids sex discrimination in any educational institution receiving federal funds.

If a school doesn't comply, HEW can choke off future federal funding. It's as simple as that.

However, what's not so simple is the interpretation of Title IX.

HEW Secretary Joseph Califano in December 1978—three years after Title IX guidelines were proposed—issued a 35-page "clarification."

Califano's "simplified" version requires colleges and universities before August 1979 to draft a formula to provide that "expenditures on men's and women's athletics be proportional to the number of men and women participating..." and that they be "substantially equal" on a per capita basis.

Califano's clarification scared the hell out of athletic directors—and NCAA officials—nationwide. But rather than masking their fears with arrogance, our athletic leaders should remain open-minded and optimistic.

We don't need the backwoods logic of traditional male athletic leaders who have a "keep women barefoot and pregnant" mentality.

Liquor issues misunderstood

Editor,

I would like to respond to Kenneth Sterbenz on the subject of biblical wine. My statement was made on the basis of the following information, which was published in a scientific magazine (I no longer recall which) and subsequently picked up by the Kansas United Dry Forces:

In the caves of Qumran, above the Dead Sea, where the Dead Sea Scrolls were found, there were found flasks with a dried substance inside. Scientists determined this was wine and dated it slightly after the time of Christ, when Qumran was abandoned. Through tests, the scientists determined that this wine had only slightly more than 5 percent alcohol.

I would explain that low alcoholic content by using your statement: "Wine was healthier to drink than water in those times." Most water in that area is undrinkable and these people probably drank only wine. So therefore, it is logical to figure that any wine they made wouldn't be around long enough to spoil. So they didn't need, or maybe didn't have enough time, to let the wine ferment enough to have any higher alcoholic content.

To Larry Seitter on Rev. Richard Taylor and the Kansas Constitution:

You asked what right the framers of our Constitution had to declare how things were to be forever. The answer is: They had the same right that 43 men had when they met in Philadelphia in the summer of 1787, when the U.S. Constitution was written.

You state that Rev. Richard Taylor wants to maintain morals of a century ago. The only difference between then and now is that then alcohol was considered a sin, thanks to people like Carrie Nation. Study has shown that people otherwise were no different morally than today.

You said Rev. Taylor was making personal attacks. It should also be noted that in the week preceding Rev. Taylor's statement, there were two separate attacks on him by two state senators that were reported in the Collegian. I feel he was justified in his remarks.

If, or maybe WHEN, the law is changed, what will the drinking age be changed to? 13? I know of kids who drink at that age and that is in a small town.

Incidentally, it might be noted that the Kansas Dry Forces does not favor total prohibition. Rather, their stated objective is to get people to limit their drinking to two drinks, or two cans of beer, a day.

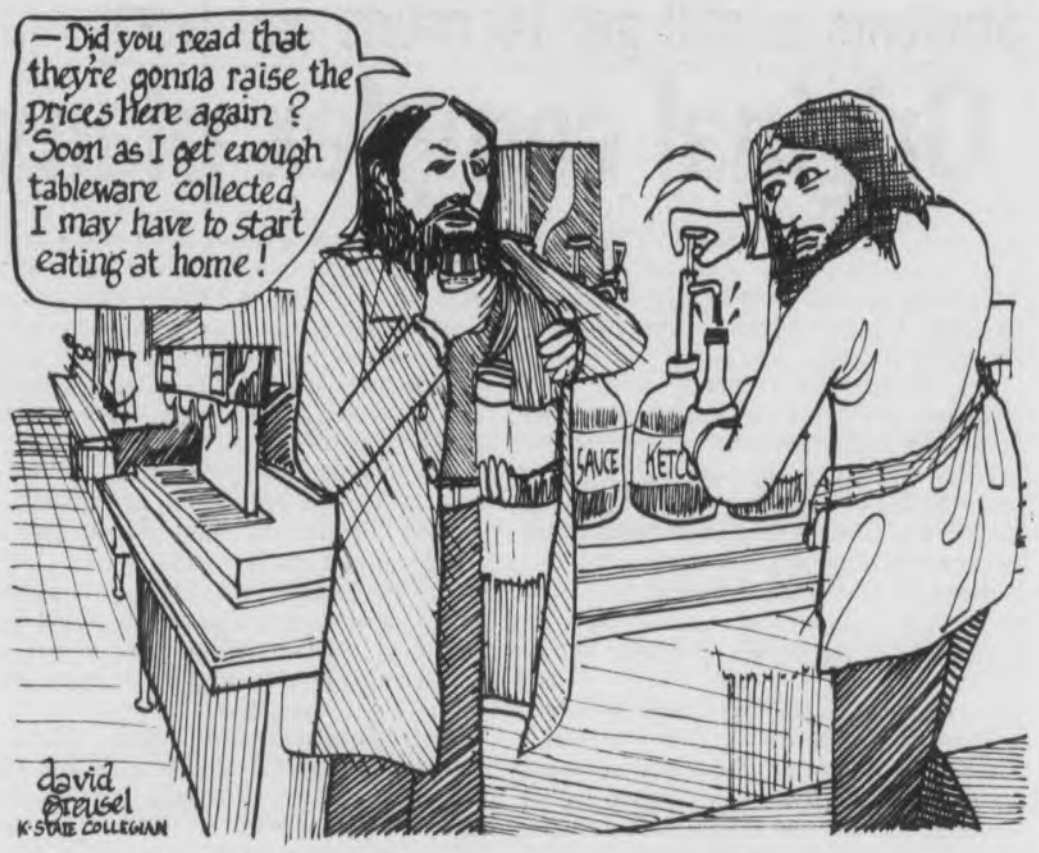
Porn films trendsetters?

Editor,



Although I was not able to attend the K-State premier of "The Opening of Misty Beethoven," I am happy to see the Union showing such popular films. The popularity was evident in the long lines of people waiting to see the movie.

If the Union were to make this kind of a movie a weekly feature, imagine some of the new trends that might be started at K-State.

People might start camping out for tickets, Forum Hall could have its own "front row perverts," and if the crowds got too large we could vote on a new theater referendum.

The cheers in the old Forum Hall would be such things as "go baby go," boos and hisses will be replaced by moans and sighs, and Aggieville just wouldn't be the same after the show.

Students to still get 16 courts and track

Original complex plans survive with interest aid

By LISA SANDMEYER
Staff Writer

Students will get exactly what they voted for when the new student recreation complex opens in 1980.

The complex is currently under construction at the L.P. Washburn recreation area south of KSU Staduim.

There was some question as to whether there would be enough money for all the facilities in the original plan, Raydon Robel, Recreational Services Director, said.

However construction began later than originally scheduled, allowing the University to put money gathered into an interest-bearing account, said Daniel Beatty, vice president for business affairs.

Robel said construction bids were for a complex with eight handball courts, instead of the 16 courts originally planned for the building. He said the extra funds, bringing the total to $3.5 million, plus an add-on option with construction bids, made construction possible for 16 handball courts and an indoor track as originally planned.

Money is also now available for land scaping.

Income from student fees is about 30 percent more that what the University expects to pay back any year, Beatty said, but revenues are dependent on enrollment. If full-time enrollment and, therefore, income from student fees drop any year, the excess from other years can offset the loss, he said.

If enrollment stays at or above the 12,000 full-time student mark, the bonds can be paid off as early as 1995, Beatty said. If outside interest rates are lower, it would be better to pay bondholders off early. If the outside rate is higher, keeping the money and investing it could gain more interest than is being paid out.

When the debt to bondholders is paid, the student fee charge could be applied to another project, or the charge can be stopped, Beatty said.

The referendum was set up to collect $3,175,000 in student fees over a period of 25 years, $3 million will be used to pay off construction bonds and the remainder goes directly to construction.

Bonds were sold in May 1977 to collect $3 million, and a $6 increase in student fees during the 1976-77 academic year was put into a building fees account to be used toward construction of the facitlity. The $6 per full-time student was to raise "at least $175,000," Beatty said.

That building fees account, which was in the state treasury, like all student fee money, couldn't gain any interest. Only the state can invest money in the treasury, Beatty said.

After bonds were sold, the money from that sale was invested. Beatty said the University is allowed by law to invest bond money until construction begins.

Beatty said the bonds were not sold with the intention to invest that money, but the interest rates were good that summer.

In the fall of 1977, student fees were raised another $6, and that money, $12 per semester, went into a bond interest sinking fund to pay interest to the bondholders.

K-State began paying back bondholders last year and the scheduled date for retirement of the bonds is 2001.

Bond proceeds (from investment) plus the initial fee increase ($6 in 1976-77) plus the $3 million from sale of bonds goes to construction of the facility.

Marching band to play 'over there, over there'

"Over there, over there," may become part of the K-State Marching Band's musical repertoire as they travel "over there" in May 1980.

Phil Hewett, University band director, said the K-State Marching Band and the Concert Jazz Ensemble have accepted an invitation to play at the Football Association's Wembly Cup Championship in London next spring.

"The original cost of the trip amounts to $180,000," Hewett said. The band plans to raise $80,000 through artwork sales, candy sales, and a state-wide drive to sell marching band and jazz ensemble records.

The K-State Endowment Association is considering an allocation of excess of $100,000 to pay for the remainder of the expenses, Hewett said.

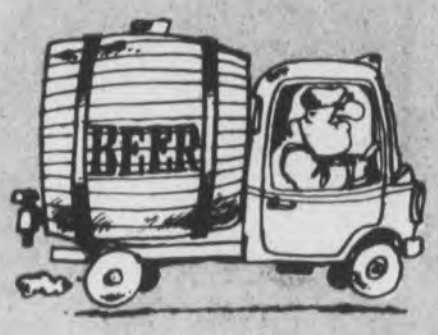
ALTHOUGH THIS is the first time the entire marching band will be traveling to Europe, it is not a new experience for all of the members.

"The Concert Jazz Ensemble has made the trip twice within the past three years," Hewett said. In 1976 the 25 piece ensemble was the feature band at the Montreau Jazz Festival in Switzerland, he said.

"The ensemble gave us exposure," Hewett said. "People began to get familiar with our name; this is one of the reasons we have been invited to play in London next May."

"The man in charge of getting the band for the football championship (the Wembly Cup), George McKay, wanted the best marching band from a large university," Hewett said. "At that time he was in St. Louis and the Big 8 film was being aired on television. He saw our marching band on the film and decided we were the band he wanted."

The band, which will be in London for 10 days, will give five performances—the longest being 45 minutes long, he said.



"We are the first and only American band to play at this event," Hewett said.

Consumer Sleuth

By MELANIE STOCKDELL
Contributing Writer

CHINA HAS been forced to pull out of Vietnam, according to embassy spokesmen, because the U.S. offered a warhead that seems to be ineffectual against the tiny eastern country. It's a Pinto equipped with Firestone Radial 500s!

SO YOU'RE going to Padre or Jamaica for spring break. And you're hoping to return as a bronzed god or goddess. Unless you take one or two precautions against the harsh rays of the sun, however, you could return as a dried up prune.

So, take heed lovers of the sun, and return from spring break with your status in tact! If you are using drugs...let me be more specific, you are more susceptible to a nasty sunburn. That includes such medication as tranquilizers, treatments for diabetes and estrogens.

You also will be more susceptible on a Colorado mountaintop or the sandy beaches of Padre than on the roof of Ford Hall. The best preparations when you're planning a full day in the sun are lotion and cream types.

Using the ever-popular baby oil is absolutely no protection and acts like bacon grease when an egg is dropped into the hot stuff. YOU FRY.

Another thing...if you are a little hefty, you can end up with sunburned fat pockets...very very tacky, so protect your skin. Zinc oxide completely blocks the sun's rays while emollients offer no protection.

And remember, no product on the market can make you tan FASTER. Those "fast tanning" preparations usually end up turning your skin a urine-yellow...also very tacky.

A HUGE number of inquiries have been received by the Consumer Relations Board (CRB) about photographs which were taken last fall and have not been received. The company who took the pics was Stevens Photography out of Bangor, Maine. They told the CRB that the reason for the two-to three-month delay was the weather...at least they could have used a more original excuse.

Nonetheless, the proofs are beginning to dwindle in to irate students, although most still have not received their merchandise. The CRB suggests that you call Stevens at 1-800-341-1570 and put a little fire under them. You are more likely to get your proofs sooner if you let your displeasure be directed to someone who can do something about it.

THE GAS gougers, according to Art Buchwald, haven't had the opportunity to really stick it to the American public since the Arab embargo of 1974. But the recent revolution in Iran has presented the rationale for oil companies to raise prices again to exorbitant and unwarranted levels.

The gas station down the road from my house has increased its prices 5 cents since last Wednesday. I called the Department of Energy who explained that the gouging probably should be investigated but may not be a violation.

But it was encouraging to know that at least they are investigating! So if you're suspicious of massive gas price increases at your favorite station, there's something you can do...get the name, address and phone number of the station and call the DOE gas gouging hotline 1-800-424-9246 and make a report.

Every station is required to display on the pump a decal which indicates the maximum price level at which they are authorized to sell their product. If there is no decal or if the price is higher than the decal authorizes, call the DOE hotline and get some action.

State Senate approves Tort bill; amendments expected in House

TOPEKA, (AP)—The Kansas Senate gave half-heart approval Wednesday to a complex bill abolishing traditional doctrines of governmental immunity and providing procedures which citizens can use to sue state or local governents for damages.

The so-called "Tort Claims Act" is the final product resulting from an interim study and weeks of labor by the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The measure was approved, 23-15, and sent to the House, where amendments are virtually certain, lawmakers agree.

As it left the Senate, the bill establishes various standards of liability for cities, counties and the state—depending on the type of act which results in damage to citzens.

A maximum financial liability of $300,000 per occurrence is set in the bill, regardless of how many persons are injured by a single act of a government worker.

In effect, the bill creates three different types of actions which may result in liability for a governmental body, depending on whether the act is classified as intentional, "gross and wanton" negligence or simple negligence.

It is this complex distinction between various acts which has disarmed supporters of the bill.

The Legislature is considering tort claims legislation this session because of what lawmakers see as clear signals from the state Supreme Court that traditional legal doctrines which have protected government from most lawsuits for damages are quickly eroding.

Greek majority leads Senate representation

By ANNA BARTON
Collegian Reporter

If one is male, lives in Greek housing or a residence hall, and is a sophomore or junior he is well-represented by Student Senate.

Representation for off-campus, female and graduate students as well as seniors and freshmen is poor when compared to total University student statistics.

Greeks are well-represented in senate comprising 54 percent of the 40 senators. In contrast, Greeks make up 14 percent of K-State's student body.

Residence hall residents also are represented well in senate. The 29 percent of K-State students who live in residence halls are represented by 32 percent of senators who live in residence halls.

Only 14 percent of the senators are off-campus residents, although 53 percent of all K-State students live off-campus, according to statistics from the Office of Admissions and Records.

Although 42 percent of K-State students are women, only 23 percent of student senators are women.

GRADUATE students comprise 3 percent of the senate but make up 22 percent of K-State's total enrollment.

Seniors and freshmen also are under-represented. Seniors occupy 8 percent of senate's seats but 20 percent of the University's students are seniors.

Sixteen percent of the senators are freshmen, although freshmen make up 26 percent of all students.

Most of K-State's student senators are Kansans, but out-of-staters are represented in senate. Non-Kansans comprise 11 percent of the senate and 16 percent of all K-State students.

Two student senators are not students. Marilyn Trotter and Dent Wilcoxon have all the privileges of "student" student senators but they are faculty members. Trotter, assistant director of the Center for Student Development, and Wilcoxon, professor of history, were appointed by Faculty Senate and serve as student senators indefinitely.

Two senate seats are vacant. Senators for these positions, representing the College of Veterinary Medicine and the Graduate School, will be selected by appropriate councils.

Antelope discover what Kansas is like

LYONS, Kan. (AP)—Agents of the Kansas Fish and Game Commission renewed their search Wednesday for imported antelopes that were chased from Kanopolis Reservoir by a pack of dogs last month.

The agents made an aerial search of central Kansas in an effort to locate small groups of the 23 missing animals. They plan a roundup of the missing antelopes Tuesday.

George Carson of the commission's Ellsworth office said agents hope to obtain the use of a helicopter to help herd the animals back onto rangeland around the reservoir.

A herd of 75 antelopes was transported by commission biologists in January from Wyoming to Kansas as part of a project to restock Kansas areas with antelope, originally a native species in the state.

Commission officials have been tracking the antelopes since a dog attack scattered the herd a month ago and 23 of the animals were reported missing.

"We will drive them slowly to the north until we get them out of cropland country," Carson said. "We will probably close U.S. 56 and Kansas 4 highways temporarily."

THERE HAVE been frequent sightings of antelopes in neighboring Rice County during the past two weeks, and one was killed by a vehicle on a highway near Lyons last week.

Other problems have beset the herd since its arrival Jan. 20. Carson said seven of the animals have been killed—four by dogs, two in traffic accidents and one by a poacher. A hunter, who was stopped at a roadblock by police following a bank robbery at Lorraine, was convicted of poaching.

'Not a Pretty Picture' offers lesson in aspects of rape

By DAVID GREUSEL
Collegian Reviewer

There are two kinds of movies in the world: those that offer escapist entertainment, and those that have more important things to do.

"Not A Pretty Picture", this week's UPC Kaliedescope film, is one of the latter type, and it succeeds on several levels.

The first level of its success is as an educational film, a goal that one of the actors makes reference to in one of several "behind the scenes," interviews that occur at various points during the film.

The lesson for today is rape: it's motivation, its rationale, and its consequences.

Both the director-producer, Martha Coolidge, and the actress who plays Coolidge in this autobiographical film, are themselves victims of real-life rapes, and this is the source of its second level of success.

"Not A Pretty Picture" serves both these women as a cathartic outlet for their pent-up rage, fear, and shock at having been raped, and the viewer is made to suffer along with them as the action progresses.

It is not necessary to be female to be completely caught up in the dramatization of rape that is the substance of this film.

The most difficult part of making a film about rape has to be how to show a rape without being obscene, sensational, maudlin, or soapy in portraying the event itself. This is the third level of success of this remarkable film.

The rape is not presented as an actual event, but as the filming of a rape scene. In fact, the whole movie bounces in and out of a "film within the film" format constantly, but rather than distracting from the action of the plot, it helps clarify the actor's intentions and feelings for the viewer.

Because of its skilled construction, and superior improvisational scenes, one tends to overlook the few faults of the film. Those scenes that are shot from scripted dialogue tend to seem forced and obvious in contrast to the "cinema verite" technique of the rest of the movie.

Also, there is a basic problem with the motivation of the rape in that it is described more as an act of passion that one of violence.

Indeed, Curly, the antagonist, comes off more as a horny but misguided schoolboy than as a societal reject who responds to his dissatisfaction with his lot by forcing himself on a woman.

The modern concept of rape is that it is a violent act, not the result of a runaway sexual appetite

Another serious problem I had with the film was the statement by the victim that "He (the rapist) stole my life force," therby equating virginity with some kind of cosmic power, or taken to its logical conslusion, that rape is equivalent to murder. Rape may deprive a woman of her dignity and purity, but not her "life force."

"Not A Pretty Picture," is a terribly wonderful film, coming to grips with the most difficult of all issues human sexuality, and dealing with that issue in an original, interesting, and thoroughly engrossing manner.

Senate to select 7 for committee chairs

Approval of Student Senate standing committee chairmen, a new Tribunal member and a bill to establish an "open meeting" period during Student Senate meetings, will be discussed by senate during its meeting tonight.

Senate will consider approval of the following committee chairmanships: Dana Foster for academic affairs, Cheryl Hart for communications, Patrick Miller for finance, Mark Zimmerman for personnel selection, Clark Ruttinger for senate operations, Isaac Turner for state and community affairs and Eileenn Eggleston for student affairs.

Senate will consider approval of Ann Bunck to fill a vacancy on Student Tribunal created by the graduation of a member.

Thirteen groups seeking senate funding will each make five-minute budget presentations before senate.

Senate will discuss and vote on the establishment of open meeting periods when students could have speaking privileges to ask senators questions and present ideas. These open periods would be held before business would be considered. Senate will meet at 6 p.m. in the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

House stops debating; Carlin gets district bill

TOPEKA (AP)—The Kansas House, in a surprise move, voted Wednesday to sent the bill reapportioning its 125 districts to the desk of Gov. John Carlin.

Approval by the governor would clear the way for a Kansas Supreme Court review of the plan.

Controversy over the reapportionment bill stemmed largely from objections by Democrat representatives in the Douglas County area to boundaries proposed in their area.

In the end, Rep. Fred Weaver (D-Baxter Springs) leader of the Democratic minority, made the motion to accept corrective amendments made by the Senate rather than send the bill to a conference committee. The motion was approved on a 98-19 vote.

Weaver said the House Republican leadership offered a compromise on disputed boundary lines in the city of Lawrence that he personally accepted, but that the proposal was rejected by Reps. Mike Glover and John Solbach, both (D-Lawrence)

"They indicated they liked the bill the way it stood better than the proposal that was offered, so I made the motion to accept the Senate changes and send the bill to the governor, Weaver said."

SPEAKER WENDELL Lady said it had been agreed initially that the apportionment bill would be sent to a conference committee to make changes in the boundaries between the Lawrence districts.

Lady said he had a promise from Weaver that the Democratic leader would urge the Democratic governor to sign the apportionment bill.

IRONING OUT THE WRINKLES...A leaking roof in Ahearn Gymnasium put a few wrinkles in the intramural program when the water warped the maple boards of the gym floor. John Kent, University Facilities employee, replaces the warped boards with plywood, which will temporarily repair the floor until the roof can be fixed.

Wilson, Giles enter Hall of Fame

TAMPA, Fla. (AP)—Hack Wilson, one of baseball's top sluggers in the era of Babe Ruth, and Warren Giles, who had an illustrious career as an adminstrator, were named posthumously Wednesday to baseball's Hall of Fame.

They were chosen by the 18-member Veterans Committee, impaneled to review the careers of players bypassed by the Baseball Writers Association of America during their period of eligiblity and executives, umpires and Negro leaguers.

Wilson, who played for the New York, Chicago, Brooklyn and Philadelphia National League clubs, was a heavy drinker who died broke on Nov. 23, 1948 at age 48.

Giles, who served as president of the National League for 18 years after successful operation of minor league franchises and the Cincinnati Reds, died Feb. 8 this year at age 82. He retired from the NL post in 1969.

Wilson and Giles were chosen from a list 20 players and officials who received votes.

Intramural basketball slowed

Leaks warp Ahearn Gym floor

When it rains it pours. But in Ahearn Gymnasium?

Leaky roofs have damaged many K-State buildings and now Ahearn Gymnasium can be added to the list.

Sports

With Friday night's rain, water leaked into the gym on the floor, causing it to warp.

Mark Bonjour, Ahearn complex manager, said the roof was known to be leaking three weeks ago and was patched to prevent the water from leaking into the gym.

The gym floor, which is made of maple, has been torn up in the warped areas and replaced with plywood.

"As soon as the roof is redone we will try to replace the floor," Bonjour said.

WITH THE LEAKY ROOFS causing a shortage of courts, the intramural playoffs were slowed down. But Bill Harms, intramural coordinator, said some games were played on the main floor of Ahearn, thanks to Athletic Director DeLoss Dodds.

"Intramural sports usually don't get the floor until 8 p.m. but Dodds released it early to make up for courts which could not be used because of the warps," Harms said.

The courts, which are being repaired by physical plant and carpenters, are roped off to prevent people from using them.

"We played around the warps, which were mainly on the sidelines and about three feet on to the center court," Harms said.

The gymnasium courts were expected to be in full use by Wednesday night if repairs were completed, Harms said.

The finals of the fraternity, residence hall and independent divisions of intramural basketball are being completed this week.

The all-University playoffs will begin after spring break.

Riley County runners hit the road; several races planned for March

Competition may help cure the loneliness of the long distance runner in Riley County, as several races will be run in the next two weeks.

Starting Saturday at 2 p.m. is the 10th annual Flint Hills Twenty Kilometer Road Race. The runners will start in St. George, go around Manhattan and return to St. George. Other events will be the Missouri Valley AAU Men's and Women's Championship races and the Ten Kilometer Jogger's run.

The Twenty Kilometer Road Race is sponsored by the KSU-Manhattan Track Club, with assistance from the K-State athletic department, the Missouri Valley AAU Long Distance and Road Running Committee and the Mid-America Masters Track and Field Association.

Deadline for entry at a $1.50 rate is tonight. Last-minute entries may phone Arne Richards at 532-6516 until 10 p.m. or 539-6478 until midnight. Late entries will be accepted, but the entry fee will be $5.

The St. Patrick's Day Road Race and Shamrock Run, which is Saturday, March 17 at 9:30 a.m., will start in Aggieville. The road race is for all ages.

DEADLINE to sign up for the St. Patrick's Day Road Race is Monday. There will be 10 divisions each, for men and women runners.

In the St. Patrick's Day race trophies will be awarded for the first three places and medals for the fourth, fifth and sixth-place finishers. In the Shamrock Two Mile Run, medals will be awarded for the first three places and ribbons to the next seven places in each of the men's and women's divisions.

'We learn beyond our books...' Chinese Culture Night tonight

A paper cutting demonstration, exercise game and native refreshments will be featured at Chinese Culture Night, 7:30 tonight in the International Student Center.

The evening's activities will be led by the Chinese Student Association, said Dave Brown, president of American Students for International Awareness, the organization sponsoring the program.

The students, who are all from Taiwan, will also show the film "Masterpieces of Chinese Art." demonstrate how to use Chinese teapots and teacups, explain their written lanuage and culture, and display artwork.

The program's sponsored by American Students for International Awareness, promote interaction and friendships between American and foreign students, Brown said. Membership is open to all students.

"We can learn beyond our books and majors," he said. "We can learn about people."

Farms and politics: Manhattan dairy farmer isn't limited to just milking cows

By STANTON JANSSEN
Collegian Reporter

The alarm goes off.

It's 4:30 a.m. Time for the morning chores on a dairy farm west of Manhattan.

The sun hasn't touched the cluster of red-roofed buildings anchored to the side of a hill, but David Schurle, 59, is already working his Jersey cows into the barn for morning milking.

Schurle, a dairyman for 30 years and counting, has his morning chores done before most people even think of work.

"I'm usually back in the house by 7:30," he said.

But dairy farming is more than just milking cows, so Schurle's day is just beginning.

"There's always something to do around a dairy," he said. "I do most of by own building. I built a tin shed last fall, and I'm remodeling a small house to rent out."

Schurle also has served three years on the Kansas State Board of Agriculture, and was recently elected president.

"I was treasurer, then vice president, and now president," he said.

"Kansas is only one of three states where members are elected by the people," Schurle said.

IN MOST states, at least some of the board positions are appointed by the governor, he said.

Schurle described the board as an administrative body, overseeing efforts to inspect meat processing facilities, dairy facilities, checking elevator scales and authorizing water permits for irrigation. It also participates in insect and weed population surveys.

The board hires directors for these divisions to check on complaints and make spot checks to see if government standards are being met, he said.

If a violation is found, the business is notified and given a certain amount of time to correct it, or else the business will be closed.

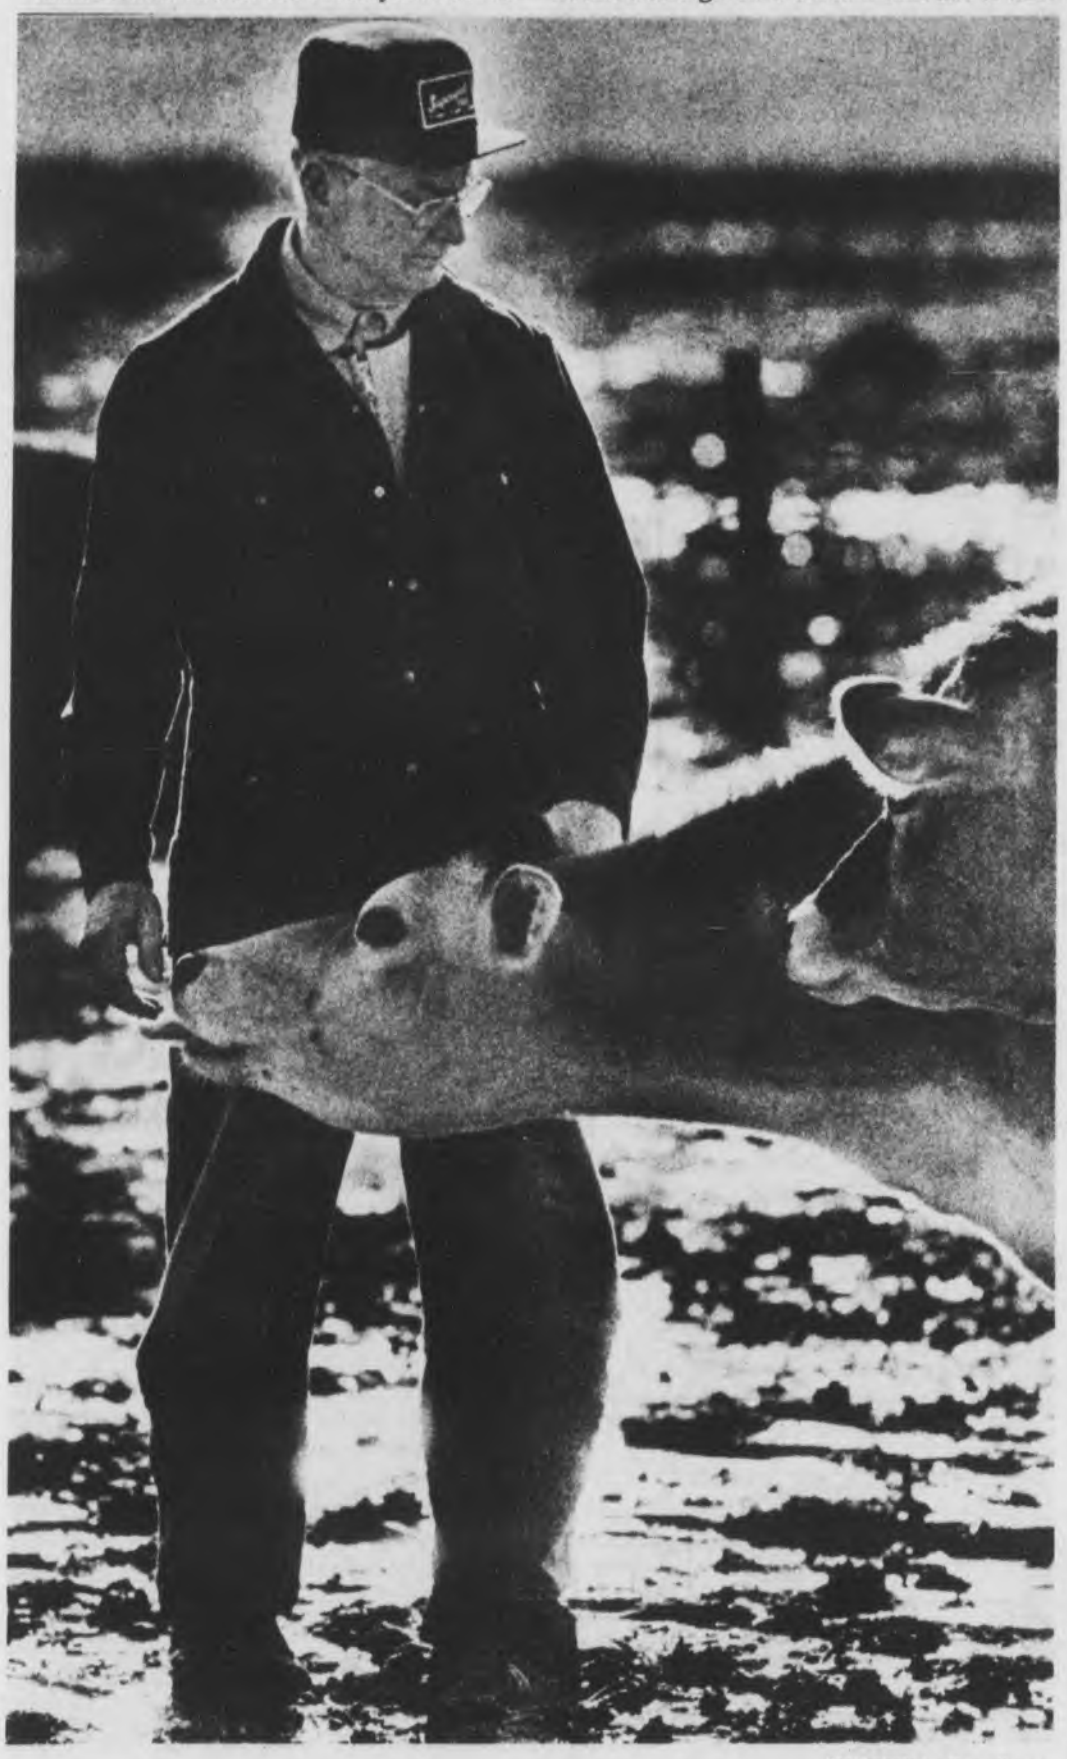
"They don't do that very often," Schurle said.

"We're (the board) at the head of it, and all these divisions go out and do the work," Schurle said.

As president, Schurle conducts the board's quarterly meetings, hearing and discussing reports from the division directors, and discussing current legislation.

SCHURLE OCCASIONALLY attends hearings on agriculture-related bills as well as attending the state boards' national meeting.

Schurle's interest in dairying began in 1949 when he bought his first Jersey calf as a 4-H project. He moved to his present farm in 1951, when his father retired.



"I didn't inherit the farm," he said. "I had to pay for it."

Besides farming 280 acres of sorghum, wheat, alfalfa, and soybeans, Schurle milks 30 cows, and is doing a good job of it.

"We ranked 10th in the nation last year in butterfat for a herd our size," he said. "We've been first in Kansas four out of the last five years."

Schurle also has won several awards at the Kansas State Fair.

"We win our share," he said. "Last year, we had several firsts, but didn't have any champions."

Parents mimic image of their childhood

By MARY BICHELMEYER
Collegian Reporter

The only way to learn how to be a parent is by being a child, according to Fred Bradley, associate professor in administration and foundation in the College of Education.

Bradley, who has worked with parents and teachers for the last 10 years, spoke Wednesday on parenting and the way one learns to be a parent.

The speech, sponsored by the Women's Resource Center, is one of several being offered through the semester as part of the centers' lunch time series.

"The parenting practices we take on are a mirror of our own childhood," Bradley said. "The most notable example of this is the fact that almost all parents that were abused as children also abuse their children. With something as dramatic as that you would think it would be the opposite. This tells us that training for parenting does grow out of being a child."

AFTER BECOMING a parent, one is given a lot of advice from friends, neighbors, books and magazines, Bradley said. Parents are too often worried about whether they are doing the right thing with their children in certain situations.

"I believe very strongly that there is probably nothing a parent can do on any single occasion that will irreparably damage the child save physically maiming him," he said.

Bradley said the three methods of child rearing include autocratic, anarchial or democratic.

The first method, autocratic, is used by the parent who gives his child little, if any freedom. The relationship between the parent and the child is so structured the child is not given enough freedom to develop a sense of responsibility, Bradley said.

"There is also not enough freedom for the parent because he is always watching over the child," he said. "I do not prefer this method because the child doesn't even learn to think by himself, in some cases he never gets a chance to do anything on his own."

THE ANARCHIAL type of child rearing is laissez faire in that no rules are established and the child is given almost total freedom.

"The irony of this is that kids are in the midst of freedom but because there is no guiding force to help them develop they don't know how to assume responsibility," he said. "Besides, they don't even think that their parents care."

The democratic method is the combination of order and freedom based upon mutual respect between the adult and the child.

"It is important to treat children with the respect that is due them by giving them the consideration of having an equal value," he said.

Senate opens forum to students-at-large

By BILL LIPPOLD
Collegian Reporter

A bill establishing an "open meeting" period at the beginning of each Student Senate meeting and a resolution for approval of new standing committee chairmen were passed by senate in its meeting last night.

"It (open meeting) would be like informal discussion is at the end of our meetings," Lori Bergen, arts and sciences senator, said. "I think we should make it as easy as possible for communication to exist."

"Let's make the students realize that we want to listen to them," Cheryl Hart, business senator, said. "We haven't given them the chance to."

The open meeting period provides a time for any student to speak before senate. The bill sets a time limit of 30 minutes for this period unless the Student Senate chairman, Rich Macha, believes more time is needed.

Student Body President Greg Musil spoke in favor of the bill and said students don't know who their senators are and "senate communications is a two-way street."

Steve Arnoldy, education senator, said he didn't think the bill is necessary because senators should take more responsibility for getting themselves known to their constituents.

"It's our job to go to them—they don't need to come to us," Arnoldy said.

SENATE APPROVED chairmen for the seven Student Senate standing committees. Fourteen students applied for the seven positions.

Finance Committee will be chaired by Patrick Miller. Miller, arts and sciences senator and sophomore in sociology, was appointed to chair the committee earlier this semester and has been organizing senate allocations and budget hearings for groups requesting senate funding.

Other new chairmen and their committees are: Dana Foster, junior in political science, for academic affairs; Cheryl Hart, junior in marketing and business senator, for communications; Mark Zimmerman, junior in marketing and business senator, for personnel selection; Clark Ruttinger, sophomore in pre-medicine and arts and sciences senator, for senate operations; Isaac Turner, sophomore in general and arts and sciences senator, for state and community affairs; Eileen Eggleston, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine and agriculture senator, for student affairs.

Senate also approved Ann Bunck, junior in agronomy, to complete a term as a member of Tribunal. Tribunal is the highest student appellate court.

Two new senators, recently appointed by their college councils, were introduced. Debby Dougherty, junior in family and child development, is the new home economics senator and Marty Levy, graduate in statistics, is the new graduate senator.

Thirteen groups seeking senate funding made five-minute presentations prior to senate's regular meeting.

Baker plans to run in 1980

By SALLIE HOFMEISTER
Staff Writer

Sen. Howard Baker (R-Tenn.) said Thursday he will seek the Republican nomination for president in 1980, although he didn't officially declare his candidacy.

"Yeah, I plan to," Baker said in response to a question during a Landon Lecture in McCain Auditorium. "I'm not going to announce here today, but yeah, I plan to do that."

Baker joined fellow Republican Kansas Sen. Robert Dole in a quest for the White House. Dole has announced he will seek the nomination in 1980.

Baker, Senate minority leader and the highest ranking Republican in government, became the first Republican senator elected from Tennessee in 1966. He served as vice chairman of the Senate Watergate Committee.

PUBLIC ISSUES was the subject of Baker's lecture, and he commented on issues ranging from his support of a Constitutional amendment to limiting spending in Congress to foreign policy and defense.

The Tennessee senator said he favors the Luger Amendment to limit Congress' spending power. The proposal doesn't mandate a balanced budget, but it requires a two-thirds vote of Congress and approval by the president before Congress can deficit spend, he said.

"I'm convinced a Constitutional amendment is necessary," he said.

Baker said to maintain a strategic balance with the Soviet Union, the United States should develop a new missile system employing high-powered bombers.

Baker said he doesn't "see the need to match every machine made by the Soviet Union," but believes the U.S. should maintain its national strength.

"Odds are slightly against the (SALT II) treaty right now," Baker said at a press conference held prior to his lecture. The Senate opposes President Carter's treaty because it immoderately yields to the Soviet Union, he added.

BAKER SAID the Russians are militarily outbuilding the U.S. Since the SALT I treaty, which Baker supported, the Soviet Union has developed four new missiles compared to the United States' single MX missile.

Also, the U.S. has reduced its navy ship production by 50 percent. President Carter "made a terrible mistake" when the high performance B-1 bomber, included in SALT I, was cancelled, the Republican leader said.

"I sometimes have been critical of the president, and I no doubt will be critical again about his treatment of foreign policy," he said.

Baker predicted more unrest in Iran. Stability in Israel and the Middle East could be threatened as a result of Iran's alliance with the Palestinian Liberation Organization (PLO), Baker said.

"The strongest force in Iran is Marxism," he said. Marxists will eventually come to power in Iran, which will stir up more dust in the Middle East, he said.

CLAIMING GOVERNMENT has a "stultifying effect on productivity." Baker said to stimulate the productivity of our free enterprise system, federal intrusion should be reduced and taxes cut, he said.

Each citizen should do his part in the political process, he said. It is a shame the obligation and ability of self-government is not used by the people and that the public forum in the political arena is not used, he said.

"The arbiter will be the elector," he added.

Egypt cheers Carter, boos treaty

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—President Carter launched his personal peace mission Thursday among tens of thousands of cheering Egyptians and conferred for 2½ hours with President Anwar Sadat.

But a U.S. official said Egypt's leaders were "not too happy" with American compromise terms for a peace treaty with Israel.

Egypt presented its own counter-proposal, but the terms were not disclosed. Nor was there any word as to the substance of the Carter-Sadat talks at Cairo's Tahra Palace.

The White House said only that the two leaders discussed "unresolved issues" in the quest for an Egyptian-Israeli peace accord.

"You can assume the Egyptians are not too happy," the U.S. official said after the talks.

It was understood that the United States would be very reluctant to modify the compromise suggestions. The Israelis made a request to that effect and were turned down.

Shortly after the arrival of the American party, Egyptian Prime Minister Mustafa Khalil presented counter-proposals to Secretary of State Cyrus Vance detailing Egyptian response to U.S. compromise suggestions to break the negotiating stalemate.

Afterwards, Carter and Sadat met alone for 30 minutes and then with advisers.

THE U.S. official, who did not wish to be identified, said the issues remained unsettled after the discussion, but did not provide details.

"We'll leave it in the middle," the official said, noting the problem with compromise was that neither side gets so much as it wants.

Thousands of enthusiastic Egyptians waved palm fronds and placards as the president and Sadat rode in an open car from Cairo International Airport to the ornate Kubbeh Palace, where Carter will stay.

At the palace, the American president and Sadat appeared on the balcony with their wives. Carter said he and Sadat pledged themselves not to disappoint those, including Palestinians, who hope for "the long-unrealized but deeply desired state of peace to this region."

The long journey by the American president is being viewed by Egyptian and Israeli leaders as reviving prospects for a peace treaty that has so long eluded the region.

Sadat has insisted on a timetable for the civil autonomy for Palestinians that Begin has promised. Begin, in turn, has opposed linking the Palestinian problem to the treaty. A reported compromise would set a target date for implementing autonomy, but no hard deadline.

Potholes

Crews hit the streets to rid Manhattan of axle-benders

By JEFF MYRICK
Collegian Reporter

"Look out, there's another one!" Wham—the potholes are back.

Repairing potholes is a major project all over the Midwest since most snow has melted, and in Manhattan the roads are beginning to get some attention.

"It's basically all the street crew is doing," Jerry Petty, city engineer, said. "I've been with the city since 1975 and this is the worst pothole problem we've ever had."

The most common problem caused by potholes is damage to a car's alignment, Ken Soupene, local auto mechanic, said.

"We've even had a couple of cars in with bent suspensions, but that doesn't happen very often.

"Now that tires are beginning to wear out, we're getting more cars in to have their wheels aligned," Soupene said. "As far as damage to tires goes, radial tires will get their belts knocked around and the belts will shift, causing the car to pull to one side or the other."

Until the potholes are fixed, Soupene advised motorists to "take it slow and miss what you can."

So far, street repairs have been only temporary, just to keep cars out so the holes don't get any bigger, Petty said.

BECAUSE SNOW removal costs were so high and pothole repair is running way ahead of what was anticipated, the maintenance budget has been depleted, Petty said.

"We're just getting started filling them, and quite honestly, we don't even have a good estimate on what it's going to cost us yet because we're just in the process of surveying what we've got to repair," he said.

According to Petty, there are two theories on the cause of potholes. One theory is that water gets into pavement cracks, freezes and widens the crack. This allows water to go deeper. It freezes and starts the process over again.

The second theory is sub-grade moisture freezing. The same process as in the first theory occurs, only it happens in the material under the pavement.

"Some people will contend that sub-grade freezing is a worse problem than the other type of cracking.

"In minute measurements, frost heaves the pavement," Petty said. "Frost in one place heaves more than in another place, so you've got differential movements and that causes cracks."

SOME AREAS in Manhattan have been affected differently than others mainly because traffic is heavier in some areas. Those streets will be treated first, Petty said.

"We don't have a severe pothole problem on Poyntz, but Bluemont and Anderson are high on the priority list," he said. Streets such as 11th, 17th and 3rd—the ones that carry a large volume of traffic—are repaired first. From there repairs are made according to a priority list based on the volume of traffic.

The procedure used to fix potholes is to clean out the hole, put in a bonding agent to form a seal and then fill it with the proper material, either concrete or asphalt. Some of the streets hardest hit by potholes are included in resurfacing plans the city has for this summer.

Collegian, Union, Farrell to get vacation, too

The Collegian will not publish next week in observance of spring break, and K-State Union and Farrell Library operating hours will be reduced during the break.

The library and most of the Union will close today at 5 p.m. The recreation area in the Union basement will be open until 11 p.m.

Both the Union and the library will be closed Saturday and Sunday, except for the Union recreation area, which will be open from 2 to 10 p.m.

The library will be open 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday, but will be closed Saturday, March 17. Farrell reopens Sunday, March 18 at 2 p.m., and will be open until 11 p.m. The basement will be open from 2 p.m. to 1 a.m.

Most of the Union will be open Monday through Friday from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. The recreation area will be open from 8:30 a.m. until 10 p.m. Recreation area hours will be 11 a.m. to 11 p.m. on Saturday, March 17, and 2 p.m. to 10 p.m. Sunday, March 18.

The Union Bookstore will close Tuesday and Wednesday for inventory. It reopens Thursday morning.

Operating hours for both the Union and Farrell will return to normal on Monday, March 19. The Collegian will resume publication then.

Union courtyard and Catskeller hours will be extended after spring break. The areas will be open until midnight for students wishing to use it, Walter Smith, Union director, said.

He said hours were extended because an average of about 50 students were using the area at closing time.

"This will put a burden on our night crew, but we can do it," Smith said. "Vending machines will be there with coffee and sandwiches for those who want them."

The Union is considering opening the courtyard until 2 or 3 a.m. during dead week and finals week, Smith said.

"If the extension of hours is abused, we will go back to the regular closing of 10:30 p.m., but I don't anticipate any problems," Smith said.

He said students who use the area during the late hours would have to enter through the south or east doors.

Space shuttle creeps toward fall launching

EDWARDS AIR FORCE BASE, Calif. (AP)—The space shuttle Columbia, first of the U.S. fleet of reusable spaceships, inched across 38 miles of desert on a mammoth trailer Thursday, to be joined with the jumbo jet that will carry it to its Florida launch site.

The Columbia arrived here after being towed at 5 mph through nearby Lancaster, where its towering dimensions drew hundreds of spectators, including children, dogs and souvenir hucksters.

It was being mounted on the back of a Boeing 747 jet at the National Aeronautics and Space Administration's Dryden Flight Research Center in the middle of this sprawling base. After a brief test flight early Friday, the jet and shuttle, joined like mating insects, will leave for El Paso, Texas, first of three stops en route to Cape Canaveral.

Columbia, designed to make at least 100 roundtrip flights into space, will be blasted into orbit on the back of a rocket and then glide back to Earth like a plane to be refitted for more flights.

Its first space flight, already postponed several times, is scheduled for November, if engine and other technical difficulties are cleared up.

SURROUNDED BY spotlights, Columbia rolled before dawn from the Rockwell International hangar near Palmdale, where it was assembled.

Five stories high and 122 feet long, it dwarfed its retinue of security vehicles, trucks and a fire engine.

The shuttle was mounted on a giant, 90-wheeled trailer. Los Angeles County sheriff's cars, their lights flashing, paced the procession while Rockwell security men walked along the sides.

The Enterprise, test version of the shuttle which was named for the space vehicle of television's "Star Trek," traveled the same route two years ago for its test flights aboard a 747 at Edwards. The Enterprise, not scheduled for a space mission, drew larger crowds.

Chinese withdrawing under shellfire

TOKYO—The first contingent of Chinese troops has returned home from fighting in Vietnam, and China accused the Vietnamese of shelling its withdrawing soldiers, the official Chinese news agency Hsinhua said Thursday.

China said the first returning troops crossed the Sino-Vietnamese border and were given a heroes' welcome at Friendship Pass just north of the border.

Hsinhua did not say how many troops had returned or to what units they belonged. It said, "Vietnamese troops have time and again bombarded and harassed withdrawing Chinese frontier forces" over the past few days.

It was the first official announcement by Peking that Chinese troops have returned home following its proposal for cease-fire talks at the ministerial level.

Vietnam has said it would be prepared to negotiate once a total withdrawal of Chinese troops took place.

Women march for rights in Iran

TEHRAN, Iran—Chanting "at the dawn of freedom we have no freedom," more than 8,000 Iranian women, defiantly dressed in Western clothing, paraded through Tehran on International Women's Day on Thursday to demand preservation of their rights under the new Islamic regime.

Some tried to enter the offices of Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan but were dispersed when guards fired over their heads.

The Iranian demonstration followed a rally at Tehran University. Marchers were harassed by groups of young men and by one group of women dressed in chadurs, head-to-toe Islamic veils worn by many Iranian women.

During Iran's revolution many women adopted the chadur as a sign of solidarity with revolt leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, then cast it off in favor of Western dress after the revolt succeeded. They now worry that the rigid Islamic state Khomeini envisions will plunge them into second-class citizenship and leave them worse off than they were.

Ford says he'll sit and watch it

NEW YORK—Former President Gerald Ford said Thursday that he is not a candidate for the Republican presidential nomination in 1980.

In New York to speak on national energy policy, Ford was asked at a news conference if he was a candidate for the nation's highest office.

"I certainly am not," he replied. "We've got a lot of good candidates in the Republican fold...I'm going to sit and watch it and enjoy it."

Ford had not previously said he would mount a campaign to regain the presidency, although he has continued to be an active public figure.

Potential candidates for the Republican presidential nomination are former Texas Gov. John Connally, Illinois Congressman Philip Crane, Senate Minority Leader Howard Baker of Tennessee, Kansas Sen. Robert Dole, the 1976 GOP vice presidential nominee; George Bush, former congressman and former GOP national chairman; Rep. Jack Kemp of New York, former pro football quarterback and co-author of a bill that would cut federal income taxes by one-third; and former California Gov. Ronald Reagan.

Grain dust used as feed ingredient

MANHATTAN—Grain dust, that potentially explosive and wasted byproduct of grain handling, is being tested at K-State as a feed ingredient for livestock and poultry.

Tough federal grain-dust emissions laws instituted after a series of fatal grain elevator explosions in 1976-77 are responsible.

Elevators now are required to collect and remove the dust with expensive equipment, increasing grain production costs.

Initial testing of grain dust on swine and poultry as a feed additive in the form of pellets or powder indicates it can reduce hose costs, and possibly meat prices as well, said Keith Behnke, associate professor of grain science.

A herd of 60 beef cattle steers at a University feedlot will be fed to choice grade in the next 120 to 140 days on rations that include 25 percent or more grain dust.

"If tests are successful," Behnke said, "they should help limit the losses that must be absorbed by the grain producers."

Weather

Hot damn—spring break has arrived! As soon as classes end today, you can breakaway from this zoo for a whole week. Hallelujah! Drive carefully as you blast free of K-State's gravity belt today, because freezing rain is forecasted. Highs today are expected to be in the low 40s, and temperatures should drop into the low 20s tonight. Well, that's it from us until Monday, March 19. Be there...aloha.

An ounce of prevention... Center educates campus

By SUZANNE SCHLENDER
Collegian Reporter

The Drug Education Center is pushing prevention of all drug abuse including alcohol, according to Dave Neuhaus, senior in psychology and the center's director.

"If you walk down the streets of Aggieville on a Friday or Saturday night, I think you'll agree with me that we have a problem with alcohol," Neuhaus said.

The Drug Ed staff is considering a change in the center's name to Kansas State University Drug and Alcohol Services because most people who use their services have problems with licit rather than illicit drugs, Neuhaus said.

"A lot of people are taking pharmaceutical drugs and then going down to Aggie to drink. That's a dangerous habit," Neuhaus said.

The battle against licit drugs is more difficult than against illicit drugs because most people don't consider prescription drugs or alcohol to be potential problems, he said.

Drug Education Center has been in existence since 1971 to educate and counsel people about drugs.

Neuhaus said about 75 educational presentations were given last year to living groups and campus classes by Drug Ed. Presentations are available for any group by request to the Drug Educaton Center, he said.

Drug Ed has an educational program series on Cable Channel 6 but Neuhaus said he doesn't think this program reaches the audience he would like to reach.

NEUHAUS SAID he is trying to get a weekly 15-minute show on KSDB, K-State's student radio station. This show would more closely reach the audience at which he is aiming, he said.

Much of Drug Ed's counseling is done by telephone, and the center received about 1,000 phone calls last year, Neuhaus said.

As an expansion of their counseling services, the center formed an encounter group two months ago. This group is for people who want to stop using drugs but need moral support, Neuhaus said.

To successfully quit using drugs, a person often must give up some of his friends who are drug users, Neuhaus said. The encounter group provides a new set of friends for this person, he added.

Drug Ed Center is sometimes called by FONE to intervene in drug usage crisis, Neuhaus said. Of 14 crisis calls received last year, most were in connection with LSD and two persons were hospitalized, he said.

DRUG ED provides a probation service to the court system, Neuhaus said. The program, established last year for people convicted on drug-related charges, has 25 clients, he said.

Of the 25 clients, 75 percent have been convicted for driving while intoxicated and 25 percent have been convicted of possession of drugs.

Drug Education Center is managed by about 30 student volunteers who run the office, help with the probation program and counsel, he said.

Senate kills abuse bill

The headline told the story.

"Elderly lose out."

The Kansas Senate passed a measure Wednesday allowing doctors to prescribe contraceptives to minors without parental consent.

The same day, the Senate killed a measure requiring nursing home workers, medical personnel and professionals working with the elderly to report suspected cases of abuse or neglect.

The contraceptive measure was needed, according to its supporters, because fear of lawsuits by angry parents keep many clinics from advising teenagers about contraceptives. The result: more unwanted pregnancies.

The abuse measure was needed, according to its supporters, because fear of lawsuits keeps involved personnel from reporting elderly abuse cases. The result: more abuse and neglect.

By passing one and killing the other, the Senate is placing more importance on protecting those working at the prevention of a life than those working at improving the condition of a life.

The measure would have extended the same legal recourse from abuse for children to elderly who are dependent on others and unable to care for themselves. It would have provided a way of reporting abuse cases without the fear of reprisal that keeps many from doing so.

It "would have" done many things "if" it had been passed.

The abuse bill was said to have failed, according to some senators, because it was too broad as it applied to all persons over 60.

This objection must mean these senators think abuse can be justified and does not need reporting for certain ages. Or maybe they are caught in the trap of thinking chronological age is the way to determine a person's physical state.

But chronological age isn't important, it is the condition of the aging person. The over 60 stipulation allows for the wide difference in the aged and their ability to care for themselves.

Children have no control and are dependent on others—who may abuse them. Abused children can hope for the end of their mistreatment through protected reporting of their abuse.

An aged person can lose control and become dependent on others—who may abuse them. The Senate has killed the aged's hope for an end to their mistreatment.

Lies, not lines, key to success

In my many endeavors as a single man, I was prompted to use whatever I could to pick up members of the opposite sex. I can count the number of times a girl has agreed to dance with me on one hand.

I can count the number of times a girl I didn't know went out with me on one fifth of one hand.

So, for you single men out there (where is out there?) who are at a loss for sure-fire lines which lure a girl up to your dorm room or apartment to see your collection of rare fish teeth, I am going to let you in on some lines that never worked for me.

—"Of course, I'll respect you in the morning." I always thought this was a good line. But, after 117 tries, it seems the women of the single world don't want respect.

—"Gee, your hair smells terrific." I got this one from TV. I thought it was excellent because it was so obscure. Nobody ever thinks of smelling a girl's hair. They always think of smelling the places where they put perfume—like necks, ear lobes and wrists.

—"Gee, your wrist smells terrific," didn't work. So, when I saw how well it worked on TV, I decided to try the hair affair. I very carefully came up behind the person whose hair looked like it would smell terrific. I pushed my nose to the nape of the neck and uttered the line. The person calmly turned around and asked if I would like a whiff of his beard.

AFTER THIS, I resorted to the macho image and tried something crude. —"Hey, I'm really good in bed." After the stitches were removed, I decided a more subtle approach was in order.

I decided to seek professional help. I had seen an ad in the back of one of my favorite magazines which claimed I could meet girls through the fine art of hypnotism.

The thing only cost $9.95 and was guaranteed to arrive in a plain brown wrapper. And, since the company was in my home town, I thought I would get speedy delivery. I got the material—a plastic pocket watch and a book on how to hypnotise. I went to the nearest pub to give it a try.

I found a couple of girls, sat with them, bought them beers, and started to swing the watch chanting, "You are getting sleepy, very sleepy."

One of the girls began to laugh and said, "Hey Judy! Look, another dud who answered our ad." I was embarrassed beyond words.

FINALLY, (remember the one fifth of one hand?) I decided to try something completely different. I decided to lie.

"Yea" I said. "I'm an advertising account executive (ad salesman) with a large newspaper chain. I make about $74,150 annually, not including the dividends from my Amoco and Eastman Kodak stocks."

Anyway, the girl bought the whole hokey story and before I could tell her the truth, we got married.

On our wedding day, I told her all my money was spent to pay off my Las Vegas gamblng debts, and I would have to quit my job with the newspaper chain because I had just received a drastic cut in pay due to the inflationary cost of newsprint.

She must have bought that whole hokey story too because we're still married. So, don't anybody tell her.

Procrastination: A case history

I meant to write this earlier, but well, things crop up.

This week has been my week, National Procrastination Week.

As my editors and teachers can testify, I am guilty of the crime of (gasp) procrastination. Indeed, if procrastination was punishable by death, I would have died 115 times in the last week.

Maybe you've noticed me on campus. I am the person with dark rings under my eyes from staying up all week doing half a semester's work. I am the one with my watch set 30 minutes fast. I am the person whose car has an inch of mud on the outside and whose engine sounds like pots and pans falling down the stairs.

My editors and teachers, bless their hearts, have attempted to offset my tardiness by telling me my deadline is an hour earlier than it actually is. But I am too wily for them, I just put it off for another hour.

You may ask, "But Luke, how did you first discover you were a genuine procrastinator?"

Well, I'll tell you. It took years and years to find out I was the real thing.

THE FIRST sign came more than 21 years ago when I kept my dear mother waiting for 12 hours until I decided to be born. Late to my own birth, how's that for getting off to a good start in life?

Then I didn't start kindergarten until I was 10 years old.

During the summer, my family's lawn, which I was in charge of cutting, used to look like a scene from Daktari. We had to take machetes to get to the mailbox. Once the mailman got lost for three weeks but nobody noticed. I never could convince my parents to buy a cow. Then came the brushfire of '63. We lost everything.

During high school, I served as president of the Pa Kettle Fan Club. We never held a meeting, but were always going to get around to it. Our theme song was "Someday Never Comes."

I tried out for the freshman basketball team during my senior year, but didn't make it. I had to cremate the contents of my physical education locker after graduation because I never got around to taking my clothes home to be washed. I remember it was in PE I discovered that, if you turned them inside out, you could wear gym socks another month or two.

I GOT started dating late in life, and am still hunting for someone to take to prom. Any takers?

I still find myself procrastinating. I just got around to reading "Gone With the Wind" and am still reading Newsweeks from the last decade. Say, isn't this fellow Nixon pretty swell?

While procrastinating isn't advisable all the time, like at railroad crossings, it does have its advantages. Besides getting to know your fingernails intimately, you can buy '60s hits at a much cheaper rate.

There is much more that could be written about procrastination, but I will write more about it later...maybe.

Tallgrass Park: Change of leadership sparks struggle to establish national prairie park

By GREG HENDERSON
Collegian Reporter

National environmental organizations have renewed the struggle for the establishment of a Tallgrass Prairie National Park in the Flint Hills.

Third District Rep. Larry Winn, Jr. is drafting a new prairie park bill to be introduced in the U.S. House of Representatives later this month.

Representatives from several conservation groups recently met in Washington to discuss the bill, according to Ron Klataske, a representative of the National Audubon Society.

Winn has introduced prairie park legislation four times since 1971, but it has never been reported out of the National Parks Subcommittee of the House Committee of Interior Affairs, according to Ann Lamendola, legislative assistant to Winn.

Farm organizations in Kansas have fought the previous bills because they would have taken land out of private ownership.

But Winn's latest park bill would allow the landowner and his descendants to keep the land indefinitely, giving the government the first option to buy should the land ever be put on the market.

"Those of us who are in a position to work with ranchers believe it is very important to avoid condemnation (of land)," Klataske said.

"Many landowners throughout the Flint Hills are doing an excellent job of practicing good conservation, so I believe there is no reason why they should be threatened with eminent domain," he said.

"Surely we can develop legislation to establish a formal preservation system without condemning private lands. We want to guarantee the rights of the landowners."

THERE ARE three areas which have been determined suitable for a prairie national park by the National Park Service: part of Wabaunsee County near Alma, part of Chase County near Emporia, and an area along the Kansas-Oklahoma border that includes portions of Osage County, Oklahoma, and Chautauqua County in Kansas.

The first proposal for establishment of a prairie national park occurred nearly 20 years ago and would have established a 57,000-acre park east of Tuttle Creek Reservoir. This area is no longer suitable for preservation because of new roads, housing developments, and other construction, Klataske said.

The bill Winn introduced in September, 1977, called for establishment of a 187,000-acre park and in adjacent portions of Lyon, Butler, Greenwood and Chase counties.

However, Klataske believes that measures to establish a prairie national park have been greatly improved since then.

"Ideally, we should have established a prairie national park 150 years ago when the land was in public ownership," he said. "But we can't do that now so other methods of acquisition will have to be used."

Klataske said the Winn bill would protect the land in the preserve from intrusion by developers.

"This approach would be mutually beneficial and could offer security for landowners in the selected preserve areas," Klataske said.

"Landowners would know that their land would not be threatened for the development of power plants; it wouldn't be criss-crossed with transmission lines; it wouldn't be a prospective site for another Army Corps of Engineers reservoir, turnpike or any other scheme.

"A commitment to the creation of a Tallgrass Prairie National Park is shared by many and the campaign for enactment for one site or another will continue until something is achieved," he said.

Previous prairie park bills never made it out of committee because of opposition from former 5th District Rep. Joe Skubitz, who was the National Parks Subcommittee's senior minority member, according to Clenton Owensby, associate professor of agronomy.

"Now Skubitz has been replaced by Bob Whittaker (R-Kan.), freshman member of that committee, and he doesn't have as much influence on the issue as Skubitz had," Owensby said.

"There is a good possibility that there will be a bill reported out of committee this time," he said, "and that could be a problem for those people who do not favor a prairie national park in Kansas."

"One of the deterrents against establishment of a park is that the Kansas Legislature has gone on record with a resolution opposing the establishment of a prairie national park in Kansas," he said.

Owensby said he questions the need for a large area of prairie for preservation.

"The reason the Flint Hills are the only tallgrass prairie in the world is that the area doesn't lend itself well to types of agriculture other than pasture land.

"I believe that we can attain conservation without taking land away from the ranchers, simply by creating an ecological easement," he said.

Owensby said ecological easements are payments that would be made to landowners who agree not to destroy the soil or native grass.

He said the management goals of ranchers keep the grasslands in good condition so they can be used for livestock grazing. Because cattle production is the main source of a rancher's income, he would be unlikely to do anything that would destroy that grassland.

Professor recalls school years as war years

When Homer Socolofsky, professor of history since 1947, came to K-State, the world was at war for the second time. By his sophomore year (1941) America had joined the fight.

The war continued through his school years and in 1944 he joined the fight as a Marine. Following his discharge, Socolofsky returned to K-State where he finished his degree and later became a teacher.

Class of 1944

While he attended K-State, Socolofsky lettered in football as a center and was a two-year letterman in track.

One of the highlights of his football career was when K-State beat Nebraska 19-0 in 1942.

Homer Socolofsky

"They (Nebraska) had gone to the Rose Bowl just two years before that," he said. "They were better than we were and should have beat us."

When a junior, Socolofsky enlisted in the Marines because of World War II.

"I enrolled in officer candidate school (OCS) at Bowling Green State and received 12 hours of credit for completing the course," he said. "I was one of the first students to gain credit for military training at K-State."

Socolofsky was discharged from the Marines as a first lieutenant.

"There was a very positive attitude to join the service at the time," he said.

"We had a whole world totally involved in war. It was not like Korea or Vietnam. There we did not have total commitment from the American people.

"The University has undergone many changes since I attended," he said.

One problem Socolofsky did not have to deal with was getting tickets for sporting events.

"When we paid our fees we received tickets to all the sporting events," he said.

Another big difference between then and now is that there was no student union, Socolofsky said, and there was no formal place where people or organizations could meet.

The University and the faculty were smaller, he said.

"Back then the faculty members all knew each other," he said. There were 4,000 people going to school here in 1940, which was the largest enrollment the school had ever had. The enrollment declined with the beginning of the war, however.

"One thing that was unique for that time was that we had a girl as a student body president," Socolofsky said. "This was practically unheard of at that time."

Socolofsky said the size of the campus and of Manhattan has increased "tremendously."

Fraternities and sororities housed most of the people that lived on campus, Socolofsky said. Van Zile was the only residence hall on campus at the time.

There was greater student participation when he was in school, Socolofsky said, and more activities centered around the college than Aggieville.

Socolofsky also noted that students were less mobile than they are now.

"Most students did not have a car," Socolofsky said. "The students who did go home on weekends used public transportation."

College was not viewed as a place where students had almost total freedom from parental authority, he said.

"There was a lot greater feeling that the University would be the parent-in-residence," Socolofsky said. "There were rules that reflected this attitude. Students used to have to be in the dorm at a particular time or they were locked out.

Socolofsky also noticed that students today "do not read as much or as well as they used to," but are "more articulate and outspoken," he said.

The requirements on today's student have changed and are not as stringent as they were then, he said.

"The average person on campus was a C student," he said. "Now that student would be a mid B. We had a relatively high number of students that failed."

"If you didn't measure up that was tough," Socolofsky said. "We did not have credit-no credit or the capability to withdraw from a class halfway through the semester if you were failing it.

"The average load of a student was 18 hours," he said.

Socially, K-Staters had Aggieville, even back then.

"The buildings in Aggieville haven't changed a lot, although the businesses have," Socolofsky said.

"There used to be more of a mix of businesses in Aggieville. There wasn't as many drinking establishments then either. There were a total of three or four beer parlors."

The most unique place in Aggieville at the time was Avalon's, Socolofsky said. It was located where Flanagan's is now. Avalon's was unique because the dance floor was on springs.

Couple snatched or rescued from religious settlement?

WINFIELD, (AP)—Cowley County authorities are investigating a report that a young couple was whisked away from a small religious settlement in a rural area of south-central Kansas this week.

Prosecuting Attorney Bill Ellis said Thursday he has not been able to locate the young couple but has decided to file no charges immediately because of the unusual nature of the case.

Sheriff Fred Satterthwaite, who has spearheaded the investigation, said Michael Davisson, 22, and his wife, Janie, 21, are at an undisclosed location with their parents. He said they are all right.

Representatives of the Holy Ground Mission, which has a small settlement near Wilmot, said the Davissons were taken forcibly from a house on the grounds Monday night.

Wayne Hancock, head of the three-family settlement, said three cars pulled onto the grounds and eight men and a woman stormed into the house shouting "raid" before removing the young couple.

ELLIS SAID the sheriff's office and Winfield police made a thorough investigation of the incident and "we have not filed a complaint mainly because the alleged victims have stated through their representatives that they do not wish to prosecute anyone involved in their departure." Ellis refused to identify the couple's representative.

"If they don't complain," he said of the young people, "we won't file charges unless we find out they are being held against their will. We are trying to find out where they are and to communicate further with them to make sure they are not being harmed or being detained against their will," he said.

Authorities said Davisson was from somewhere in Indiana and his wife was from Phoenix.

Satterthwaite said the young couple's parents became upset when they learned last month that the young woman had been fasting for 18 days, drinking only fruit juice and eating only hard candy.

The mission settlement, located about 30 miles southeast of Wichita, was established about a year ago when its first pastor purchased about 16 acres of land. There are two unfinished houses on the site. Since the departure of the Davissons, there have been two couples and their nine children living there.

Senate bill would alter law for Class B clubs

TOPEKA, (AP)—A Senate committee agreed Thursday to introduce a bill eliminating the need for some private clubs to operate liquor pools and endorsed measures banning bottle rockets in Kansas and setting state safety standards for commercial boats.

The Federal and State Affairs Committee voted to introduce a bill sponsored by Sen. Ron Hein (R-Topeka) which would change the laws on the books since 1965 requiring the state's Class B private clubs to operate liquor pools.

However, the bill includes a provision that for a club to be able to legally dispense liquor by the drink, it would have to do at least half its business in food sales.

Hein's original proposal did not include the food sales provision.

Including the food sales provision is seen as improving the bill's chances of winning enough support for passage.

The committee's bill also would permit private clubs to enter into reciprocal agreements under which they would honor each other's membership cards. However, it would not eliminate the 10-day waiting period for club membership or the $10 membership fee, as Hein proposed.

The bill follows an opinion issued by Attorney General Robert Stephan which concluded a state Supreme Court's decision last November had defined an "open saloon" in such a way that private clubs do not need to operate liquor pools.

Stephan had warned in his opinion that the Legislature should exercise caution in how far it went and how fast in changing the private club laws.

'Cats enter regional against Gophers

K-State women's basketball is down to the crucial time of the season—"if you lose the first game (of regionals), that's it," Coach Judy Akers said.

The Wildcats are entering Region VI competition in Minneapolis, Minn. tonight against the Minnesota Gophers in a matchup which is next to impossible to predict.

Early in the season, K-State crushed Minnesota 100-62. But, only six games later, the Gophers beat the 'Cats 68-66 in Ahearn Field House during the K-State Classic.

Eileen Feeney had 26 points for K-State in the first meeting, and Minneosta's Elsie Ohm hit 20 in the second meeting.

"Minnesota wouldn't give up and we just didn't get out before the buzzer went off," Akers said. "They definitely play like veteran ballplayers. They can handle the pressure situations."

If the 'Cats can get past Minnesota, they play Saturday afternoon against the winner of the Drake-Central Missouri State game.

THE WILDCATS are seeded No. 2 in the tournament. Missouri is the No. 1 seed, Drake is seeded No. 3 and Kansas is the No. 4 seed.

The Wildcats beat the Lady Jayhawks 92-91 in their last game nearly two weeks ago.

The winner of the tourney advances to the Central Sectional Playoffs at Carbondale, Ill. March 16-17. The second-place team goes to the Southern Sectional Playoffs at Tennessee Tech.

The sectional playoff winners advance to the national AIAW tournament, which was won last year by UCLA.

If K-State is to play KU again,it will not be until the finals. But, Akers is not breathing a large sigh of relief.

"If a person speculates that KU is a strong team because of its 26-6 record, then we're glad we're not in the same bracket. But, there are seven teams that have a good chance of taking it all."

And, Akers is not overlooking the Gophers.

"I've said all year that they would be there. If you had to pick a tougher team other than the No. 1 seed, it would be Minnesota," Akers said.

THE LONG LAPSE since K-State's last game is also a point of concern for Akers.

"The hardest thing to do at this time of year is to keep the intensity up," Akers said. "We've been working extremely hard on this area. Most teams lose the sharpness that contact and good competition with another ball club provide."

Sports

Kent Gaston

Three balls, two strikes; touchdown!!

Now that spring has almost sprung, it's time to get into the sports that draw fewer spectators than the biggies, football and basketball.

Track is not really a spectator sport, although some of the big meets draw thousands of fans. Golf is not much of a spectator sport either, except in the pros. Ditto for baseball around here.

Extra points

Collegiate baseball has never drawn throngs of people at K-State, although it has a decent tradition. However, this year, the team is ready for some big-time crowds.

Due to the high mud factor at Frank Myers Field (the backstop seems to have sunk in and disappeared), the baseball team will play its games in KSU stadium during spring break.

They could, theoretically, have 42,000 fans at their games (don't hold your breath).

And, if you've always wanted to sit in the stands at a baseball game and catch a foul ball or home run, you'll probably have a good chance.

THE RIGHT FIELD fence will be about 215 feet away from home plate. Any player worth his salt can spit Red Man 215 feet, let alone hit a ball that far.

We may be in for some interesting baseball.

The games will be rated PG (may be too intense for younger children) because the players may leave several pounds of skin on the turf when they slide.

This can be solved by wetting down the turf, but the best way to get players to slide is to come up with snow and sleet, as in the Pittsburgh-Houston AFC championship game in January. Terry Bradshaw got into the Guinness Book for the longest inadvertant slide in history during that game.

He hit the ground in true quarterback's "don't touch me, I'm worth millions" form, and slid 50 yards into the end zone, through the tunnel, onto the street and under a UPS truck. At last report (Jayne Kennedy and Phyllis George are investigating), he was still clinging to the truck's driveshaft somewhere east of the middle of nowhere.

IN CASE you forgot, the topic was playing baseball on a football field. This is indicative of a disturbing trend in K-State athletics.

Let's look at the confusion:

Steve Soldner, a basketball player, is going out for football.

Eugene Goodlow, a football player, plays basketball.

The baseball team is playing on the football field.

And, Eugene Goodlow, a basketball player, is playing football.

But that's not all. The Kansas City Royals played a benefit basketball game last month and the K-State football team played a benefit basketball game.

So, if we're going to encourage versatility, let's not go halfway.

President Acker should teach some home economics.

Jack Hartman should help out with the crew team, and the International Olympic Committee should concentrate less on sports and more on politics (Ha. That would never happen).

It's not whether you win or lose in volleyball tournament Saturday

When most teams go into a game, it almost goes without saying, their major concern is winning.

But this Saturday, during the U.S. Volleyball Association Invitational in Ahearn Field House, winning will be secondary for the K-State women's volleyball team, according to Mary Phil Dwight, K-State volleyball coach.

"This weekend will be a good opportunity for the kids to play and get some experience," Dwight said.

Eight intercollegiate and independent teams will begin round-robin play at 9:30 a.m., followed by playoffs at 2:00 p.m. and finals at 5:30 p.m.

Dwight said the tournament would also provide a chance for her to see recruiting prospects, because the Midwest Junior National team will play in the invitational.

The Midwest Junior National team is composed of high school all-stars from the greater Kansas City and Springfield-St. Louis areas.

"This will be an excellent opportunity to recruit and show off the campus since we can't pay players to come here," she said.

Baseball team's opener to be in KSU Stadium

K-State will be playing baseball in a 42,000-seat stadium with Astroturf next week.

The Wildcats open their season with a doubleheader against Wayne State Saturday afternoon in KSU Stadium, because Frank Myers Field is too wet to play on.

The 2 p.m. opener will be the first baseball game ever played in KSU Stadium.

The dimensions in the football stadium will make it heaven for left-handers and trouble for right-handers.

The right field fence will be only 215 feet away, so hits into first 20 rows of the right field bleachers will be designated as ground rule doubles. Hits above the first 20 rows will be home runs.

"Down the left field line will be 330 and probably over 400 feet to straight center," Coach Dave Baker said. "We'll put up a picket fence as a restrainer."

THE BASES will be made of foam rubber and both teams will probably wear tennis shoes, Baker said.

"Obviously you can slide, but if you don't do it properly, you'll burn yourself," he said. "For that reason, we might wet the turf around the bases."

Playing in the football stadium will probably be an advantage for K-State now, but a disadvantage later, Baker said.

"We've worked out on the turf quite a bit. So against the teams that have never played on turf, we'll have an advantage," he said. "But the more we play on turf, the more of a disadvantage we'll have back on a dirt infield. There are no bad hops on turf, so you don't have to play quite as deep in the infield."

The Wildcats will play seven-inning doubleheaders against Bellevue College March 11, Baker University March 12, Bethany College March 13, Marymount College March 15 and Creighton March 18-19. All the games next week are scheduled to begin at 1:30 p.m., except the nine-inning Creighton game March 18, which is scheduled to start at 1 p.m.

Nealy named Big 8's top newcomer

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—K-State freshman Ed Nealy, the guy who supposedly wasn't good enough to play major college basketball, has been named The Associated Press Newcomer of the Year in the Big 8.

The same panel of sports writers and sportscasters also selected senior forward John McCullough, a mainstay in Oklahoma's first conference basketball championship team in 30 years, as the Big 8 Player of the Year.

Nealy, a 6-7, 230-pound native of Bonner Springs, wasn't offered many scholarships. In fact, it came down to K-State and Yale, and Ivy League schools don't give athletic scholarships. Wildcat Coach Jack Hartman, in fact, took some good-natured ribbing from his counterparts for using a scholarship on the chunky youngster. But now, nobody's laughing but Jack.

In what was probably the most gratifying day for the Wildcats all year, Nealy canned two free throws with one second left to give K-State a 58-56 overtime victory at Kansas.

"I knew he was a good, intelligent kid with a solid family background," Hartman said.

"Some coaches got in their jets and flew around the country signing up blue chippers," said one coach admiringly. "Jack got in his car and drove to Bonner Springs and found a winner."

Nealy finished the year as the Big 8's sixth best rebounder with 8.2 per game and he also carried a 10.2 points per game scoring average. Nealy edged out Oklahoma State's Matt Clark for newcomer honors. Others receiving votes were Robert Estes of Iowa State and Don Youman of Oklahoma State.

In the last 10 seasons, a K-State player has been named Newcomer of the Year (formerly Sophomore of the Year before freshman eligibility) six times: Bob Zender in 1970, Steve Mitchell in 1971, Lon Kruger in 1972, Mike Evans in 1975, Curtis Redding in 1977 and Nealy in 1979.

Hanf: You just can't keep a good quartermiler down

K-State's Ray Hanf is ranked by Track and Field News as the fifth-fastest quartermiler in the U.S. But today, when Hanf runs in the NCAA indoor championships in Detroit, he will try to prove he's the fastest quartermiler in the nation.

Although Hanf qualified for the national meet with a time of :48.1, a foot injury during the Big 8 Indoor Track Championships Feb. 23 nearly prevented him from competing in Detroit.

After recovering, Hanf was thought to have a good chance to place high in the national meet, but injury struck again Wednesday night.

"Ray hurt his hand pretty bad Wednesday when he fell down and landed on a bolt," Assistant Coach Jerome Howe said Thursday. "Before he left for Detroit, he wasn't sure if he would be able to go."

Although Howe doesn't know the extent of the injury, he said if Hanf can run full strength, he should still be able to place high.

Some of Hanf's competition should be familiar.

Seven other Big 8 quartermilers will also be in the race, including Kansas's Kevin Newell, who has the fastest quartermile this season, :47.84.

NBA's image falls

'So many of our problems are our own fault'—Axelson

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Joe Axelson, one of the National Basketball Association's most influential executives, feels his sport has an image problem.

"We've got to do a better job of selling pro basketball generically, rather than, 'If it ain't flying in New York, it ain't flying,'" says Axelson, president of the Kansas City Kings and chairman of the NBA's Rules and Competition Committee, the group that recommends changes in the way the game is conducted.

"So many of our problems are our own fault," he added during an interview at the Kings' Kemper Arena offices. "We need to broaden our base. We've got to spend some money letting people know how good we are.

"I'm amazed at some of the remarks made by our own people. I've read where there's a white quota—well, why don't I know about it? I've been in the league 10 years and I've never heard a word about having to keep a certain number of white players on my roster.

"That sort of thing is sticking pins in our own arm."

AXELSON echoes Commissioner Larry O'Brien's view that the league's current doldrums do not necessarily mean there is something seriously wrong with pro basketball. He points to the success of franchises like Portland and Seattle and feels the league is being judged in an unfair light because of the problems of the New York Knicks.

"We did not become a major league until 1970, when the Knicks won their first championship," he observed. "People are viewing what they see at Madison Square Garden, good or bad, and judging the whole league by it.

"There has never been a better team than the Portland Trail Blazers last year before Bill Walton got hurt. They were 50-10. Had that team played at Madison Square Garden, they'd have all been canonized on the spot, encased in bronze. But that's life; we understand it."

Some have suggested the Knicks should get special treatment because of that franchise's importance to the NBA, but Axelson is adamantly opposed to that idea.

"They have every power at their disposal to make themselves better," he said. "It wouldn't be fair to any of us to give them special considerations."

DURING the course of the interview Axelson gave his opinion on a variety of other topics concerning the league.

Expansion—"It is not a get rich-quick scheme, as some have claimed. You're diluting your television income by adding more teams, and when the new teams come in to play they draw less. But there's enough talent around, and it spreads basketball to another couple of larger cities."

Television—"Ratings may be down on the CBS Game of the Week, but when you consider the incredible number of games that are being televised locally and on cable, I'm convinced that more people—not less—are watching pro basketball every week."

Mobile homes are 'good investments'

By JACKIE MARTIN
Collegian Reporter

Buying a mobile home may be a good investment for students who rent apartments or houses.

According to the Better Business Bureau's booklet "Tips on Buying a Mobile Home," mobile homes offer low initial maintenance costs.

The booklet states a typical mobile home costs about $6,000 to $17,000 and consists of a living room, a fully-equipped kitchen with a dinette or separate dining area, two to three bedrooms, cabinets and closets, automatic heating system, a water heater, free-standing and built-in furniture, floor coverings, curtains and draperies.

Ernest Downs, director of Special Services at Holtz Hall, owns a mobile home which he said is cheaper than a house or luxury apartment in terms of renting or owning.

In a college town like Manhattan, where there is a constant turnover of student population, Downs said it is cheaper for students to live in mobile homes because when they leave school a mobile home is easier to sell than a house.

THE MONEY STUDENTS use for apartment rent can be used to purchase a mobile home, said Downs. When they graduate, students can sell their mobile home for almost the same price they paid for it.

Downs said the only cost for his home is $51 a month for lot rental and about $37 in monthly utilities.

The only problem Downs said he had encountered with his mobile home was keeping it warm during periods of high winds. However, heat loss can be prevented if the trailer is properly skirted, he said.

"If mobile homes are tied down according to federal standards they can withstand winds up to 100 miles an hour," Downs said.

Federal standards for mobile homes were established by the American National Standards Institute and the National Fire Protection Association in 1970. These standards cover four basic parts of the home: construction of body and frame, plumbing, electrical systems and heating.

FOLLOWING INSPECTION by the state enforcement agency, a certificate is posted in the mobile home telling the expected performance from the heating system within a specified range of outside temperature and wind velocities.

The certificate must also include an analysis of the home's resistance to wind and snow loads.

Recommendations on the standards for mobile home safety and durability are made to the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) by a National Mobile Home Advisory Council.

Energy challenge issued by United

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Removal of price controls on domestic crude oil represents the greatest energy conservation approach America can take, the board chairman of United Airlines said Thursday.

"I know that sounds silly for an airline that spends $2 million a day on jet fuel, but we're much more concerned about supply than cost," said Richard Ferris. "Price doesn't mean much if you don't have anything to buy."

United, the nation's largest airline, is one of several carriers that have announced the cancellation of hundreds of flights this month because of fuel shortages.

Ferris said Thursday that United's cutbacks represented less than 4 percent of the airline's flights, which had been increased 12 percent over a year ago.

High prices through decontrol "is the only way to induce greater supply in the short term and to make new energy sources economically feasible in the long term." Ferris said.

House hears advice to use 'use value' tax approach

TOPEKA, (AP)—A "use value" approach to valuing single family residences for tax purposes was outlined to the House Assessment and Taxation Committee Thursday.

Tim Hageman, appraiser for Haskell and Stevens counties in southwest Kansas, proposed a "use value" plan for valuing residences as the committee opened hearings on a Senate approved bill for statewide reappraisal of taxable property.

Under Hageman's proposal, a residence would be valued for tax purposes on the basis of the income it could be expected to produce if it were rented.

This would be somewhat parallel to the "use-value" approach that has been urged has been urged by farm groups for valuing agricultural land. Such land would be valued for taxation on the basis of what it would be expected to produce in crops or as grazing land.

Marian Warriner, representing the League of Women Voters of Kansas, told the House committee that organization supports the Senate-passed bill as a measure that "will initiate procedures to bring increased fairness to the Kansas property tax system."

Expert says: traders beware

China-watching new business trend

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

Although the United States is experiencing an "emotional high on China," the latter's quest to become a modern nation has presented U.S. businessmen with reasons to be both optimistic and uncertain, according to experts on China.

"This is a key moment for China-watching," Robert Oxnam told about 80 area and foreign businessmen gathered at K-State last week for the fifth annual International Trade Conference. The conference is sponsored by the College of Business Administration and this year examined the Sino-American trade relationship.

Oxnam, director of the China division of the Asia Society of New York, said there are many uncertainties to watch for as China attempts to reach its proclaimed goal of becoming a modern industrial nation by the year 2000.

Among those, he said, is whether China can remain politically unified and motivated toward economic growth.

China plans by 1985 to establish 120 industrial projects, including oil fields, power plants, railroad lines and steelmaking facilities coinciding with its emphasis on the "Four Modernizations:" agriculture, industry, national defense, and science and technology.

OXNAM SAID China, which has always found unity difficult, may have to cope wth the "ghost of Mao Tse-tung" as it attempts to shift from a nation of idealistic revolution to economic pragmatism. The problem in maintaining unity and motivation lies with the fact that China controls more than one billion people.

"How can the Chinese propel this huge country to catch up with the West?" Oxnam said in defining China's challenge.

Both Oxnam and Norman Getsinger, director of Exporter Services of the Nation Council for U.S.-China Trade, a private Washington-based organization, agreed with China's recently instituted go-slow pace, adding that China would have to borrow much of the money needed to bring about this development.

But Getsinger said China may have little trouble borrowing enough to meet the estimated $600 to $800 billion price tag set on expansion.

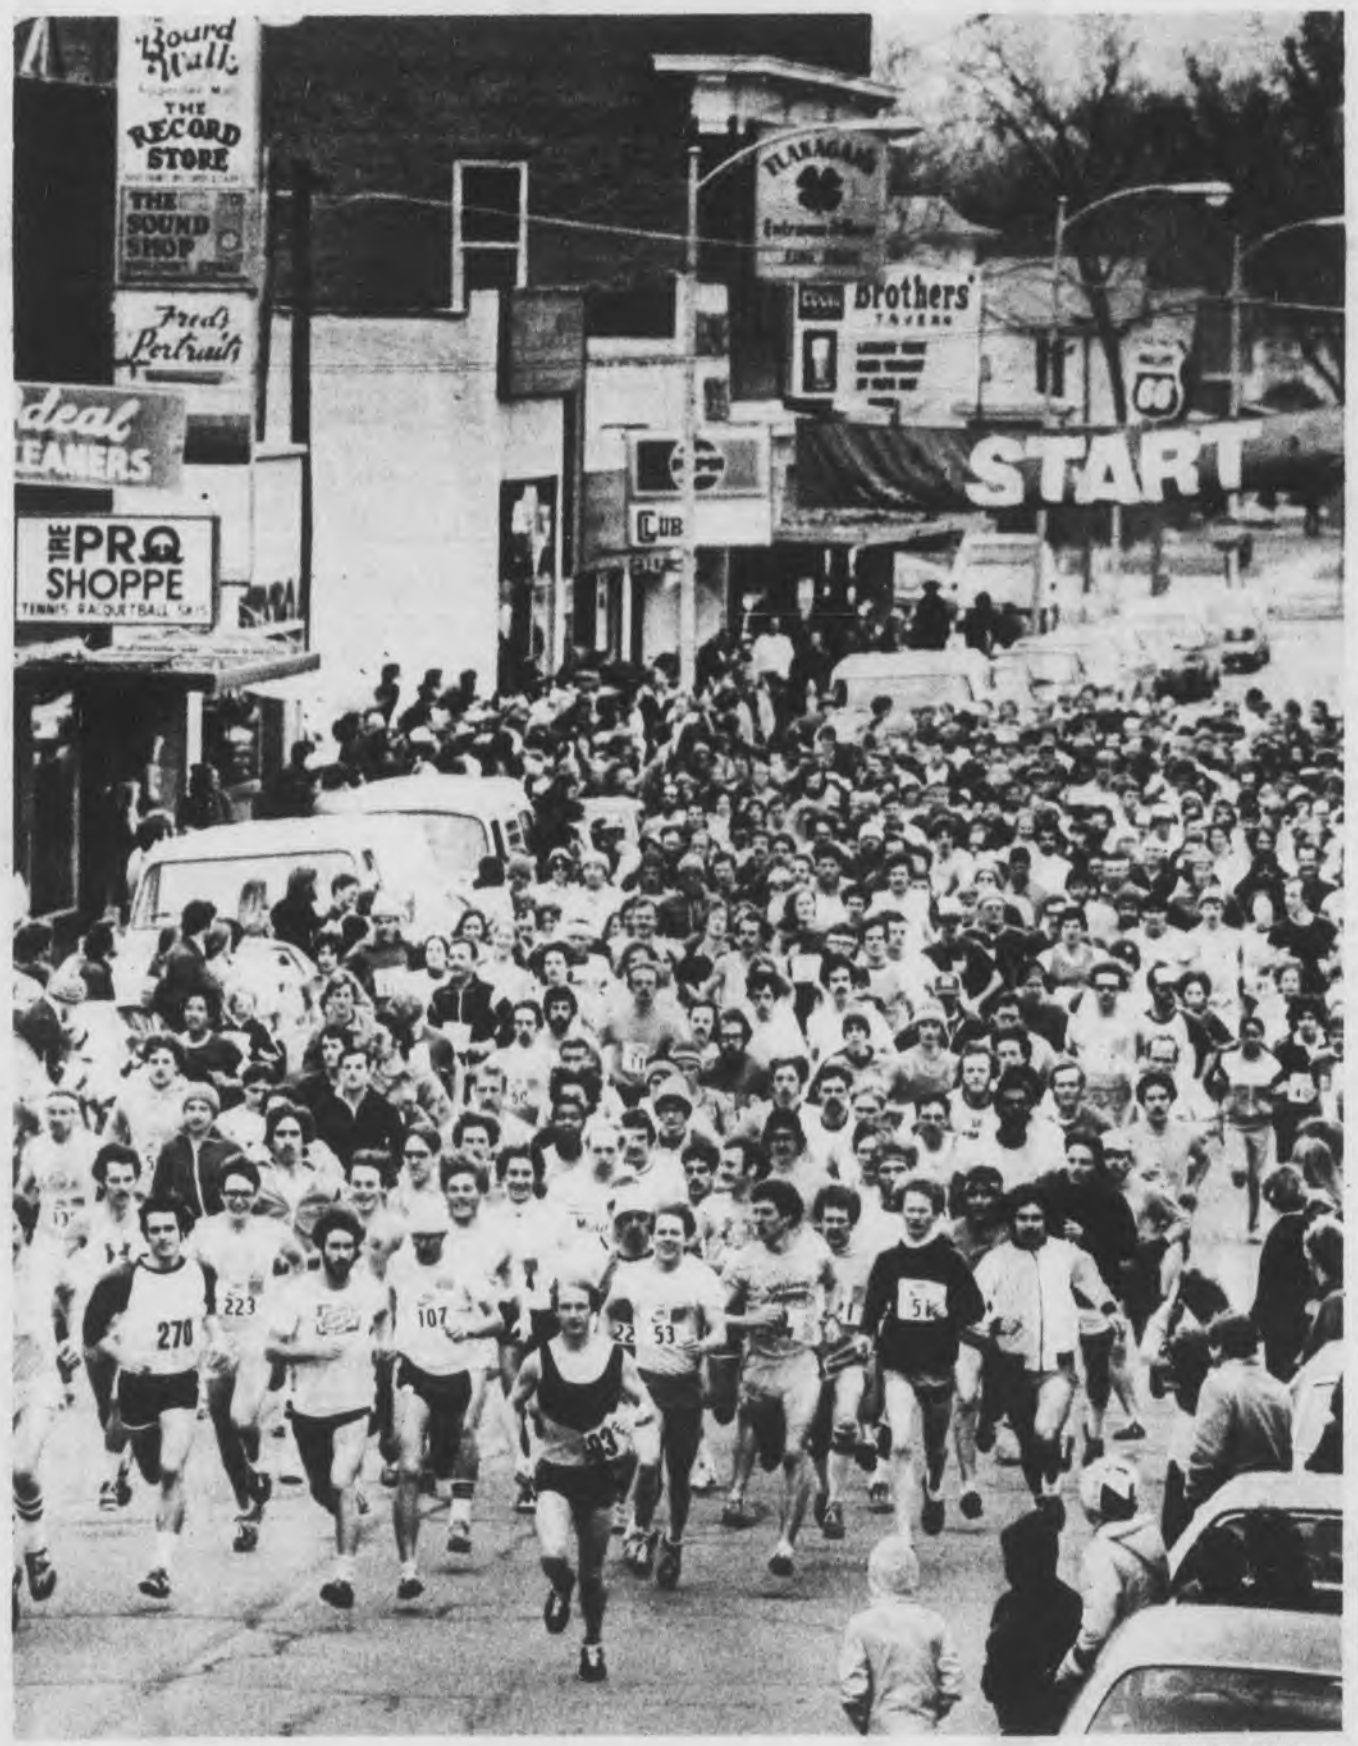
He said China was a good credit risk because the country has no debt. Private supporters will lend money to China but "we will have to see if this credit source is enough."

CHINA IS IN the planning stages of many of its projects and Gregory Tallas, a Chicago banker familiar with foreign financing, said borrowing by China will not be seen for about 18 months when the country begins implementing its plans.

Getsinger said "China will eventually be in the World Bank" and Tallas, vice president and head of the China group, Worldwide Banking Department of the First National Bank of Chicago, said if China opens a branch of its bank in the U.S. it will allow U.S. banks to open representative offices in China.

Tallas, however, disagreed wth many speakers at the conference saying there was no real slowdown in China's expansion plans.

Foreign observers had interpreted China's recent cancellations of more than $2.5 billion in project contracts with Japan as a sign of China realizing it had bitten off more than it could chew.



The cancellations, Tallas asserted, were only for the planning of projects.

"The Chinese...have never been in a mood where they will do everything quickly and all of a sudden," he said.

But Ernie Draeger, processing engineer for McNally Pittsburg, Inc., Pittsburg, said he believes his company is a victim of the slowdown.

Draeger, a 1962 K-State graduate, said negotiations with China are at a standstill for a $50

Brzezinski ends Arab tour; optimistic of Mideast peace

CAIRO, Egypt (AP)—U.S. presidential envoy Zbigniew Brzezinski wrapped up his visits to three friendly Arab nations Sunday and said he was "more convinced than ever" that an Israeli-Egyptian treaty would serve as the cornerstone for a comprehensive Mideast peace.

Brzezinski met with Egyptian President Anwar Sadat for an hour and 20 minutes at Sadat's villa north of Cairo and said he was "encouraged" by the discussion and his weekend talks with the kings of Jordan and Saudi Arabia.

"We feel we are on the eve of an important new era at this part of the world and will continue our efforts to make sure that a progress already achieved continues and widens in scope," Brzezinski said after meeting Sadat.

Brzezinski gave no clue to Jordanian and Saudi reactions to the treaty prospects and Sadat made no comment. In an earlier statement, the U.S. envoy said his talks with Saudi King Khaled and Jordanian King Hussein were "constructive and useful."

BOTH JORDAN and Saudi Arabia issued statements saying they still sought a "comprehensive" peace, indicating Brzezinski had not gained their acceptance of an Israeli-Egyptian pact.

Brzezinski said he would leave for Washington Monday.

Cairo's semi-official newspaper Al Ahram printed Sunday what it said was the text of the treaty, showing there was little change from the text published last November.

Israel said the text contained errors, but did not describe them.

Brzezinski talked with King Hussein at Amman airport for two hours Sunday after arriving from Riyadh, Saudi Arabia, where he talked with King Khaled on Saturday.

Brzezinski made brief remarks in Amman, reaffirming U.S. friendship with Saudi Arabia and Jordan and saying his talks "focused on a movement toward a comprehensive peace settlement, on common long-term regional interests and on more immediate security threats."

A SPOKESMAN for Hussein said Jordan demands Israeli withdrawal from all territory occupied since 1967, self-determination for Palestinians and a settlement including all parties to the conflict.

The statement said Hussein considered "Israeli expansionism" the most serious threat to the Arab world. Brzezinski's reference to security threats apparently was aimed at increased Soviet interest in the oil-rich Mideast.

million coal preparation plant. He told the group that after detecting a possible market for their product in China in 1972, proposals were submitted modified and accepted. Final contract negotiations began in late 1978, but China cut off communications with the company.

ANOTHER SPEAKER also hinted at a slowdown in China's "ambitious economic plans."

Taketaro Takenaka, senior managing director of Okura & Co., Ltd., a trading company in Tokyo, said trade with China will expand in the long run to benefit both China and foreign traders.

But "China's foreign trade might not necessarily keep expanding in the future so fast as last year or as we expect it would, and occasionally it might have to be slowed down for adjustments for a well-balanced trade," he said.

Oxnam assured the conferees that Taiwan will not be threatened by opening relations with China. Last week Congress passed a new American relationship with Taiwan stressing defense of the island in case of attack by mainland China.

Trade with Taiwan is growing. Last year trade between the U.S. and Taiwan totaled $7.5 billion, he said. Trade with China is expected to reach only $1 billion by next year.

Trade with Taiwan will continue to grow once the "emotion on the issue declines," Oxnam said.

Because of the amount of investment in Taiwan, "people in commerce won't put up with pressure from Peking" to break relations with Taiwan.

GETSINGER AND Takenaka offered advice and instruction to the businessmen, many of whom will soon be trading with China.

Getsinger said the Chinese want the "hard sell" pitch because they are dealing with other countries and want to compare to get the best product.

"China is playing catch-up ball and they're not interested in second best," he said.

Also, the Chinese may be more interested in reviewing the company's technology than actually buying their product, he added.

Businessmen will find it unusual to deal with the People's Republic of China because of their lack of commercial codes. Most of China's industry is government owned. Contracts will have to be very detailed to ensure conditions usually found in other countries' business laws are included. The contracts will become the law because China has no law to interpret, he said.

Takenaka said China is beginning to use new forms of trade—producton sharing, material processing and joint venture—which will help bridge the technology gap with other countries and will create new sources of employment in China.

"Industries will be required to contribute expertise such as production technology, quality control and management control, while they can benefit from low and stable labor costs which China can offer," he said.

Under production sharing, he said, a foreign supplier provides manufacturing facilities to China. The supplier is paid with marketable finished products. Ths form is preferred by China, he added.

OKURA ALSO is working on a deal to supply China with a beer brewery worth about $100 million, Takenaka said. Grinning, he extolled the virtues of Japanese beer and said they would accept processed hops and malt instead of the finished product.

With material processing, the supplier provides not only the manufacturing equipment, but the raw materials and design and packaging technology. This form of trade is especially applicable to the apparel industry.

Takenaka said businesses in Japan and France were asked last year by China to enter into joint ventures but few companies have taken advantage of this type of transaction.

"We have to keep in mind that the proposal itself of a joint venture, involving foreign investment in China, symbolizes the drastic changes in the policy of China," he said, "and this suggests to us that we will have to be flexible in our approach to the Chinese market."

'Green revolution' to come to campus

What better place for an internationally known agricultural researcher to speak than at a university dubbed "Silo Tech"?

Often referred to as the "father of the green revolution," Norman Borlaug will speak at 10:30 a.m. Tuesday in McCain Auditorium, linking civilization's survival to the production of crops. Borlaug's speech will be the 45th Landon Lecture.

His lecture is part of the Agriculturaly History Symposium "Science and Technology in America," being hosted by K-State today, Tuesday and Wednesday.

Borlaug received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1970 and recently studied wheat production problems in India and Pakistan. For the past 35 years, he has served in various research posts with the Rockefeller Foundation and the Mexican Ministry of Agriculture.

B-a-a-a-d move, Duane

TOPEKA—K-State President Duane Acker was awarded the first "Golden Fleece Award—Kansas Version" Friday by two Topeka Democratic legislators.

Charles Laird and Anthony Hensley singled out Acker because of the $100,000 spent to renovate his suite of offices in Anderson Hall, a remodeling project which brought criticism from Sen. John Crofoot (R-Cedar Point).

Acker was the first recipient of what the two representatives plan to make a weekly or bi-weekly presentation, copying U.S. Sen. William Proxmire's national Golden Fleece Award.

"It is designed to distinguish and bring recognition to those state agencies and individuals or groups of individuals who, in the opinion of the awarders, are guilty of ripping off the Kansas taxpayer," Laird and Hensley said.

Fellow legislators, lobbyists, judges and local public officials would be eligible for the award, they said. Laird said the Legislature would not be immune from the barbs.

"In my seven years in the Kansas Legislature, I have come to one overwhelming and overriding conclusion: whenever the Kansas House is in session, the state is in danger," Laird said.

Acker deserved the first award, the legislators said, because he "has brought about much notoriety to himself and his school by fixing up his office to the tune of $100,000 of hard-earned Kansas taxpayers' money."

Chinese 'professional liars'—Vietnam

BANGKOK, Thailand—Vietnam called China's leaders "professional liars" Sunday for claiming to have withdrawn invasion forces "while in fact they still maintain their troops in many areas on Vietnamese territory and close to the border ready for other acts of war."

The official Vietnamese newspaper Nhan Dan called China the "direct and dangerous enemy" of all Indochina and warned Thailand against a pro-Chinese stance.

A Vietnam radio broadcast, meanwhile, claimed that China suffered 60,000 dead or wounded in the five-week-long war and lost 100 artillery pieces and 500 vehicles.

Western analysts are reluctant to estimate losses for either side but say the Vietnamese claims appear exaggerated. They also said the Vietnamese side suffered "very heavy casualties."

Hanoi's anti-China propaganda blast came one day after it announced it was ready to open negotiations with China next Friday to settle their border dispute.

Feminist awaits deportation from Iran

TEHRAN, Iran—Iranian authorities Sunday whisked American feminist leader Kate Millett from her hotel to Tehran airport, where they held her for deportation on the next available flight because of her "provocations" against the Islamic revolution.

Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, meanwhile, urged Iranians to "join hands" to rebuild their nation, devastated by the year-long anti-shah uprising.

Moslem holy man Khomeini was the man Millett branded a "male chauvinist"—one of the statements that infuriated authorities.

Khomeini has called for Iranian women to trade their Western dress for the chador, the traditional black veil that covers a woman from head-totoe. Khomeini's new government also has abolished the family protection law, which gave women equal property and divorce rights.

Iranian women's rights groups have demonstrated against new restrictions on their freedoms, and Millett, who says she has been in Iran at the invitation of local women's organizations, has joined them.

Beware of 'demented, nude males'

PHILADELPHIA—A 65-year-old man and a police officer are recuperating from bites suffered in an encounter with what police described as a "demented, nude male."

Police said officer James Farmbry, responding to a call, found John Garrison, 65, being attacked and bitten by a man identified as Herman Gunther, 19. Garrison's wife told police the attack began when her husband answered the door.

Farmbry lost the tip of his thumb when the man turned on him in the Saturday night incident, police said. The thumbtip was sewn back on, but doctors were not certain it would stay, a police spokesman said.

Senate right in choosing life vs. death

The Kansas Senate managed a perfect balance between humanitarian concerns and practical problems by supporting an amendment substituting mandatory life imprisonment for the death penalty.

The problem was obvious: Society has a right to be protected from murderers, but many believe the government has no business killing people.

However, as crime increases, more and more states are looking at the death penalty as a possible deterrent to murder.

James Bennett, who was the director of the United States Bureau of Prisons for 27 years, said:

"Over the years, I found myself increasingly appalled by the nature of the penalty I was often responsible for carrying out. As my experience increased, so did my conviction that capital punishment was no deterrent to rape, kidnapping, armed robbery, or most homicides."

If it doesn't serve as a deterrent the first time, the death penalty does prevent the murderer from killing again.

But the morality in allowing the government to kill people puts the government (in a democracy, the people) down with the convicted criminals.

Apart from the moral implications, the chance of executing an innocent man should be considered. With a mandatory life sentence, it would be a simple matter to release him. It wouldn't be as easy to bring him back to life.

By deciding for mandatory life imprisonment and giving the jury the right to decide whether the convicted criminal deserves the life sentence, the Kansas Senate has shown good sense.

It is hoped the Kansas House will recognize this and vote for the revised bill.

All those lines a tangled mess

A colleague's manly wisdoms on how to pick up women caused me to recall some of the lines men have thrown my way.

In my few years, I have heard a wide variety of them. They have made me grow indignant, smile graciously, or double over with outrageous laughter.

After all, I think to myself, who does this imperfect stranger think he is, coming up to me and interrupting my solitude with words that he read on a bathroom wall, said to another woman or made up over a quick lunch?

Well, from my experience, he either thinks he is a synonym for God, or he is a brash youth, a derelict or just a man in need or want of companionship. Usually the latter category prevails, but need and want somehow become muddled together and the two cannot be separated.

There's no categorizing the things a man will come up with in his efforts to gain the attention of a woman. (I'm sure this is true in the opposite case, too, but the double standard in terms of aggression allows the man much more freedom to pursue whereas the woman is supposed to sit back and be pursued.)

MANY WOMEN aren't even flattered by the variable barrage of lines they are apt to hear. They just file them away in the libraries of their minds under usually forgotten call numbers. The lines probably receive consideration, but then considered as nothing more than lines; lines a playwright gives a character to subtly obtain an objective.

In the case of the male come-on, he is the character and the woman is the objective he wishes to conquer—a role most women of the '70s may not wish to play.

Which lines work and which do not is dependent on the speaker and the receiver. Each exchange is a totally different chemical reaction. Furthermore, the line needs to lead to a fish with the right fins for any woman to bother reeling in.

What follows is meant as a flicker of lightheartedness to be lightly ingested. I have gathered from my intensive journal and from my travels some lines used on me and my reactions to them.

A FEW brash lines:

"Quit everything right now and come with me." This was shouted from a car as it creeped by me.

Or, "Ooh, baby. I'm easy, try me. I'm real easy." This slid out of a character's mouth who passed my friend Connie and I as we walked though Aggieville.

At Fort Riley, men try to be inventive. They make up something on Sunday and use it throughout the week:

"If beauty was a crime, you'd be in jail EVERY day of your life, but I'd come visit you. I promise you that!"

Or, "Seeing somebody like you makes a bad day a good day instamatically." I wondered whether or not I should waste $1.95 and buy the man a paperback dictionary.

Then there are the approaches of older men. They know that you know what they are up to, especially if they are married, so they try to appear casually sophisticated:

"Tell me, how can a mere peasant like me make acquaintance with someone like you?"

Or, "I beg your pardon, but have you ever modeled before?"

"Why must you mesmerize men so, my dear?"

Or, "You're beautiful. Come with me."

THE CONFIDENT expectations and insistence is nauseating, but humorous. Of course, these aren't Kansas men. This state grows after-30 conservatives who aren't interested in approaching women, but rather in women approaching them.

My friend Allison and I used to sit around and guess what men might say. We liked to surmise what approaches men of different ethnicities would be most likely to use.

One day in Chinatown we discovered how wrong our assumptions had been.

A black man walked by and tipped his cap and a Chinese man passed by and said, "Dy-no-mite!" He was dressed like a thug and presented himself in a like manner so we combined his ethnicity (Chinese) with his occupation (thug) and invented a new term—Chug. We were accosted by many Chugs before leaving Chinatown and began wondering if they were a growing breed.

We saved ourselves by holding hands and letting all the hungry Chugs assume we were lesbians. (A good tactic for the Midwest, but it won't always work in large cities. You'd probably find 100 derelicts who are turned on by it.)

SOME OTHER lines I've heard:

"Good evening Sunshine." I head to the Ladies' Room immediately.

Or, "I'd like to be friends. Would you care to dance?" I dance and then head to the Ladies' Room.

Or, "Let's have a go at it." The ambiguity of this line is dangerous. Send him to the men's room immediately.

Humans are such creative, delicate creatures. No matter how gruff or stolid the exterior, inside we all think of love and attach our own labels, expectations and objections to it.

Lines, whether cast by men or women, are just a game we use to make life more interesting, or to cover up what we would really like to say.

Being a frank individual, I say what I feel. Honesty, after all, is what we must expect beyond the line cast by an imperfect stranger.

Lines are fun, but if two people continue to cast them back and forth at one another, somebody is bound to get terribly tangled up.

Forced retirement questioned

Editor,

In the Thursday Collegian (March 8) I read the story of Dorothy Crist who was fired because of accusations and claims that she was not able to keep up her share of the work. Quoting from the Collegain, Helen McManis, head dietitian, said "Her work volume declined."

The questions I would like to ask Helen McManis is how much did it decline? What statistical proof is there? How much volume was she suppose to maintain and by what variance did it drop? By what state standard was she suppose to maintain?

As for Phillip Immenschuh, I would like to know who appointed him Mrs. Crist's guardian when he stated—"Mrs. Crist was getting on in age and she had a better life. I thought it would be better for her to take it easy." Phillip, your statement sounded more like a son's appraisal of his mother rather than a sweatshop supervisor.

I've worked on campus for a short while and I've heard a lot of complaints about the deflated work ratings. The story I've heard is that supervisors in the departments deflate the ratings because they believe there is always room for improvement and that no one is perfect.

The question that I have for Jean Riggs, director of housing, is was Mrs. Crist released (fired) because her work volume declined or because she might have been a proponent for labor unionism of the Derby Food Center. Jean, do you or the administration of this university know about the National Labor Relations Act which forbids employers from coercing employees from joining a labor union?

Helen, Phillip and Jean, I would like you to know that the taxpayers of Kansas appreciate what you did for them. However, when you turn 65 and you slow down just a bit I hope your superiors are just as considerate towards you as you were toward Mrs. Crist.

Now remember all you state employees when you receive another rating that you believe is lower than you should get—appeal it. I'm sure Mr. Gordon, head of the Kansas Association of Public Employees will be able to help you.

Dismissal decision appalling

Editor,

Ladies and gentlemen, upon reading the article "Learning 'cruel' lessons at 65, Derby dishwasher told to resign" in the Collegian (March 8), I was appalled by your decision in the dismissal of Dorothy Crist. Your reasoning—insufficient work. Is this the "naked" reason?

For a staff that works in a university which promotes higher education, I am ashamed of being connected to your uneducated behavior and lack of knowledge of gerontology which this university endorses and I am studying.

Is your excuse of insufficient work by Crist because today's society lets our senior citizens out to pasture? I'm sure, Derby Food, you've heard this reasoning before. It's old history.

However, old history has a way of repeating itself and you are living proof. Beware workers of Derby Food! You will one day be 65. If society, as yourself, does not change its attitude toward senior citizens, it will be YOUR TURN TO BE AXED.

Visitor recalls K-State stay

Editor,

I would like to take this opportunity to say "thanks" to all of the great people I met during my recent visit to your great school.

I would especially like to expess my gatitude to those on the fifth floor of Goodnow Hall who went out of their way to make me feel welcome. Their friendliness made my stay one that I will not soon forget. Each and every person in Manhattan was warm and friendly to me, something I am not used to here in the Los Angeles area.

Special thanks to those in Ahearn's athletic department who also made my visit special. I can now say that of all the great arenas I have been to, including such as Pauley Pavillion, the L.A. Sports Arena and Allen Field House, Ahearn Field House is truly what college basketball is all about.

K-State's fans are the greatest! Southern Californians may have the sunshine, but Kansans have the warmth.

Senate needs student action

Editor,

Student Senate took a giant step toward bridging the gap in communication which exists between that representative body and the student body at large, by passing Senate Bill 79-80-3 and establishing an open meeting period at the beginning of each senate meeting.

The opportunity for any and all students to voice their ideas and concerns before their representatives is now available.

Although senate facilitates communication through visitation of organized living groups, works through liasons with senate-funded groups on campus, and maintains the SGS (Student Government Services) office on the first floor of the Union, it is still impossible to reach every individual with a concern, especially the off-campus students.

This new policy will open the door to easy communication between senators and their constituants, yet this communication can only exist if students take advantage of the situation.

I would like to encourage stuudents to make use of this open meeting period. Student senators have initiated the opportunity for you to speak to them; take them up on this invitaton and increase their awareness of your concerns.

Senate meets every Thursday at 7 p.m. The open meeting period will last 30 minutes and this is the first item on the agenda.

Zoo deficiencies cited by society spokesman

By DAVE HUGHES
Staff Writer

Calling Manhattan's Sunset Zoo backward, Ann Gonnerman of the Humane Society of the United States lambasted the Manhattan City Commission Tuesday for its lack of concern for the quality of the zoo.

Gonnerman, the society's Midwest regional director, presented to a commission work session results of an inspection by Keith Sherman, inspector of zoos.

The results showed nine deficiencies in zoo facilities of 123 points inspected. Most of the deficiencies were concerned with drainage, waste disposal and sanitation.

Gonnerman said she was mostly concerned about conditions in the primate and large carnivore sections. These areas are unhealthy because of the poor drainage and sanitary systems, she said.

BASED ON an investigation by the Riley County Humane Society Feb. 21, Gonnerman said Touchdown XI, K-State's mascot, should not be used for opening ceremonies for University sporting events. The checkup showed the bobcat was caused undue nervousness when keepers approached to catch it for the game that evening.

"That's cruel and unusual punishment for an animal," she said. "You shouldn't do that to that animal anymore."

She also said the fence surrounding the buffalo pen was structurally deficient, but city officials indicated a new fence already has been purchased.

Although the Humane Society can make no binding decision, Gonnerman said the society does have persuasive powers to bring the zoo into compliance with the Animal Welfare Act, which governs the running of zoos.

"The Animal Welfare Act is going to be enforced, so there's my clout," she said. The society will "see that the Animal Welfare Act is enforced and Dr. Sherman will see to it or this zoo will not be operating."

Gonnerman criticized the commission for not supporting the zoo and thereby reflecting negatively on the community.

SHE ALSO agreed with Sherman's comments in his report about increased funds to the zoo.

"Sunset Zoo is potentially a good zoo, but it shows much evidence of degeneration. Maintenance on buildings and grounds is not keeping pace with the degeneration. It will take additional money and increased staff to keep it in compliance with the Animal Welfare Act," Sherman said.

Commissioner Terry Glasscock, however, said Manhattan's citizens are reluctant to increase money to the zoo because "people don't want any more taxes."

Glasscock's comments were guarded; he said the commission could not fully respond to the report until all members could review it. Mayor Robert Linder was not at the meeting.

'Little America' deserted in Iran

ISFAHAN, Iran (AP)—A thousand helicopters lined up along runways at the airport and the empty houses and shopping center in the Shah-in-Shah suburb are all that is left here of "Little America."

Less than six months ago 10,000 Americans swarmed around Isfahan. All but a handful have been driven out by Iran's Islamic revolution.

But for many of the million inhabitants of Isfahan the ghosts of the "ugly Americans" still stalk the streets and a bitter resentment of their presence lingers.

Some Iranians here say they are determined that never again will the city play host to such a large number of Americans, although they admit it may be necessary to make use of their expertise in the future.

THEIR MAIN complaint against the American community was the fact that the majority of its members appeared insensitive to Isfahan's deeply ingrained Islamic culture. They also voiced resentment because Americans were paid far more than Iranians doing similar jobs.

"They knew nothing about our culture and didn't care. The people of Isfahan are conservative and religious in their outlook," said Reza Tabrizi, a member of Isfahan's Revolutionary Committee, which took charge of the city even before Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi was toppled.

"The men would wander round the streets in Bermuda shorts with a beer in their hand and women would wear revealing halter tops," Tabrizi said, "This is considered completely outrageous in our society."

THE MAJORITY of Iranian women here still wear the chador, the head-to-toe black veil that is a sign of modesty. Iranian residents tell of seeing drunken Americans lurching out of hotels and embracing women friends passionately on the sidewalk.

These residents and some of the Americans who stayed cited other examples of "degradation" they claimed Americans brought to Isfahan:

—A massage parlor that employed Vietnamese bargirls and did a thriving business.

—Americans offended Iranian neighbors by holding parties on religious holidays.

—An American "gay community" whose activities further offended local moral codes.

Electronic detection system snitches on Farrell book thieves

For those students who can't seem to remember that library books are to be checked out and not ripped off, Farrell Library offers an electronic reminder called "Tattle-Tale."

Because Farrell loses 1,000 of its 850,000 books each year, the library staff had the monitoring system Tattle-Tale installed about two years ago, Lucy Wilde, General Reference Librarian, said.

Tattle-Tale acts as a deterrent to book theft, Wilde said. All books and periodicals are treated so they will be detected by the monitoring system located near the exits. If a student attempts to sneak a book out, a buzzer sounds and the gate blocking the exit locks. The gate remains locked until a student security guard de-activates the system.

Initial cost for installing Tattle-Tale was between $7,000 and $10,000, Wilde said.

Wilde couldn't specifically say how effective the system has been but thinks it was a good investment.

"We have not taken a survey about book loss because we have nothing to go on, but smaller libraries that have installed the Tattle-Tale system have cut losses by 85 percent.

"We don't take inventory of missing materials, but we do have some ways of checking on materials," Wilde said. "We can partially determine the number of lost items when the books students request cannot be found."

Of the search requests the staff does per year, about one-half of the materials requested are found; another one-fourth are found later, but about 1,000 missing items are never recovered, Wilde said.

"Before the Tattle-Tale system was installed, librarians could not confiscate materials unless they had 'KSU' stamped on them," she said. "Students could easily say it was their personal copy."

Now, all books and periodicals are stamped in addition to being treated to activate the monitoring system if a student attempts to sneak them from the library.

Student caught trying to steal books are required to check them out, but no disciplinary action is taken, Wilde said.

K-State is losing more books per capita than other Big 8 schools, Wilde said, but it still loses less than one percent of its total books.

Some of the books stolen can't be replaced because they are out of print, and copies are not of equal quality, she said.

Wilde estimated that it costs abbout $10 to replace a stolen magazine or journal, including the time required to re-order and reprocess the item. The average cost of a new book is $10 to $15.

"It only costs 15 cents to get them (books and periodicals) into the Tattle-Tale system, so it is really worth it," she said.

Return of swallows: 'miracle' or 'myth'?

SAN JUAN CAPISTRANO, Calif. (AP)—According to legend, the swallows of Capistrano will repeat today their annual "miracle," completing a 7,000-mile journey from Argentina by returning to their beloved mission exactly on St. Joseph's Day.

"Chickenfeathers," retort two of California's leading ornithologists.

"It's a myth. They've already arrived," claims Thomas Howell, professor of zoology at UCLA since 1949. He is willing to bet more bird-watchers show up each March 19 than the faithful little birds with forked tails.

"This has been blown out of proportion. Some people would rather believe in folklore," said Howell, who contends the swallows are merely following a centuries-old migrating habit.

A second bird expert who agreed with Howell requested anonymity, saying: "The last guy who debunked this got hundreds of letters accusing him of being anti-Christ. It's like saying there is no Santa Claus."

At dawn today, a crowd of 2,000 is anticipated outside the rustic old Capistrano mission. Traffic leading into this coastal city will be bumper-to-bumper.

"If you're expecting a scene out of Alfred Hitchcock's 'The Birds,' you'll be disappointed," said Father Paul Martin, pastor of the 182-year-old mission. "I would certainly agree it is not a miracle. But it is a natural phenomenon that the swallows still return to the mission."

You asked for it, You got it . . .

STUDENT FEEDBACK

There can no longer be any doubt in anyone's mind as to whether or not Strong Complex Residents are indifferent to their food services. We are not.

WE WANT OUR FOOD SERVICES!

It has been argued that it is too expensive to continue operating the small hall food services. A study conducted by concerned students on expenditures for the nine-month school year of September, 1977, through May, 1978, showed that food service costs were

Derby Complex—$582.01/resident
Kramer Complex (excluding Edwards Hall)—$560.38/resident Strong Complex—$591.93/resident*

Such a big difference in cost, right? But wait, there's more! Of that money Strong Complex residents pay, $112.96 per resident goes to Derby Complex for weekend meals. And of these weekend meals manditorily paid for out of small hall funds, less than one in three is eaten, as shown by a study made last semester.

One of the goals of the KSU residence hall system is to provide alternate lifestyles. Without our individual food services, the alternatives the Strong Complex offers are unairconditioned rooms furnished with the original furniture, an antiquated switchboard system, and a shortage of social areas and recreation facilities.

Don't take away our choice of lifestyle. We think that our food services are important, and we ask the University community to join us in our effort to show that students are not apathetic about their small hall food services.

That sniffle is more complicated than you think

By ELLEN STERNER
Collegian Reporter

Common to all, yet appreciated by none, is the common cold.

Colds are usually harmless infections, but more serious diseases such as pneumonia, flu and bronchitis can masquerade as colds.

Researchers have indicated the cold can be caused by more than 200 forms of virus.

Lab studies don't confirm beliefs that a cold can be caught by not wearing a hat, getting soaked, overheating and so forth.

These factors aren't causes of the common cold, although doctors agree that physiological changes associated with stress bring on infection.

But the key question to the victim of a cold is not how the cold is caught, but how it can be cured.

A SUPERSTITIOUS curer might use a remedy like the "two hat cure." The prescription is to hang your hat on the bedpost, get into bed with your favorite bottle of spirits and drink until you see two hats. This is guaranteed to cure all symptoms until the next morning, said Sir Christopher Andrews, author of The Common Cold.

Home remedies are not to be laughed at; there is some credibility to them.

Cod liver oil is rich in Vitamin A, which the body needs to fight off infection, but cod liver oil has lost its popularity through the years.

Sweeter than cod liver oil is honey, which coats a person's throat to relieve the pain of coughing, according to an article in Parents Magazine.

Chicken noodle soup has traditionally been a hot item for cold victims. The reason is that the heat and nutritional value of the soup help keep up the cold victim's strength, said Dr. Daniel Martin, physician at Lafene Student Health Center.

Citrus fruits are another common remedy for the cold, but vitamin C is not believed by most doctors to cure the cold, Martin said.

"Vitamin C is a vital amino acid to help build up enzymes. Medically, we don't know how Vitamin C works, just that it helps repair tissues and arteries," he said.

IN THE LAST 20 years, home remedies have been replaced by modern cures.

Americans today spend more than $840 million a year on cough and over-the-counter cold products.

Analgesics, decongestants, cough suppressants, antihistamines and expectorants, while not curing the cold, do alleviate the cold's symptoms, Martin said.

Penicillin has no effect on the common cold because it kills bacteria, not viruses, Martin said. Because the cold is a virus it will not be affected by an anti-biotic.

The best treatment for a cold can't be bought in any store or prescribed by any doctor, Martin said. It is plenty of bedrest, aspirin and fluids. Aspirin cuts pain and fever, and fluids help flush out impurities and thin congestion.

"The body manufactures antibodies to kill viruses. No medication at this time can help fight the infection. It can only help fight the aches and pains of the cold," Martin said.

What are researchers doing to cure the common cold?

Some researchers think cold medicine of the future may come in the form of hand lotion.

Shaking hands with you girlfriend is more dangerous than kissing her. People catch colds by getting the virus on their hands from others who have colds, said Dr. Jack Gwaltney, chief of epidemiology and urology at the University of Virginia's department of internal medicine.

Twisty turn

Tanzanian troops capture town 50 miles from Ugandan capital

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanzania (AP)—Tanzania claimed Sunday that after a "fierce" threeday battle its troops and Ugandan exile forces had captured Lukaya, a town 50 miles south of the Ugandan capital city of Kampala.

The report in Tanzania's government-owned Sunday News gave no estimate of casualties. But earlier Ugandan radio reports said almost 1,000 Tanzanian troops and Ugandan rebels had been slain in a major battle in the area, and Ugandan exiles in Nairobi, Kenya, claimed that hundreds of Ugandan soldiers and allied Libyan and Palestinian troops had been killed.

Hospitals in Kampala and nearby Entebbe were full of Ugandan and Arab wounded, the exiles claimed.

The Sunday News, quoting what it said were informed sources, said two of Ugandan President Idi Amin's battalions were "almost totally annihilated" in the battle with the invasion army and two of his top army commanders were killed.

The News said the Tanzanian and Ugandan rebels were consolidating their poition at Lulaya "in the ongoing struggle against the fascist regime of Amin."

The was broke out last October when Amin sent his troops to occupy a section of northwestern Tanzania that he claimed as Ugandan territory.

FBI investigates $6 million Carter family peanut loans

ATLANTA (AP)—The president of the National Bank of Georgia says he knows nothing about any private ledger for the bank's loans to President Carter's family peanut warehouse.

Robert Guyton, acknowledged, though, that the FBI is looking into nearly $6 million in commodity loans the bank made to the Carter warehouse.

In its Sunday editions, the New York Times quoted bank and government officials as saying loan officer Robert Flynt—under pressure from former bank president Bert Lance—kept the separate ledger and delayed cashing checks from the Carter warehouse to avoid overdrawing the account.

"It's the first I've heard of it," Guyton said Saturday night.

Flynt, who was in Jacksonville, Fla., could not be reached for comment.

The Times also said the FBI was investigating the possibility that the information entered in official bank records on the Carter loans was inaccurate.

Agent Jim Blasingame of the FBI's Atlanta office said the bureau had sent the results of a "limited, preliminary" investigation of the peanut loans to the Justice Department in Washington.

How to get the most from the computer between your ears.

As a student, probably your biggest single task is information processing. You spend more time absorbing, analyzing, and memorizing facts than anything else. And most of that information is in the form of printed words.

Think what you could accomplish if you had your own personal computer that could digest all your reading almost as fast as you can turn pages. The time and efficiency you'd gain could make a big change for the better in your life right now.

Of course, you already have such a device — it's called a brain. But you're probably not using even a tenth of its capacity. Because just as a computer is only as good as its programs, your brain is only as powerful as the way you use it. And when it comes to reading, most of us are still stuck with the painfully slow methods we learned in grade school. Methods that are so inefficient that your brain actually gets bored and distracted between words (which is why you probably find it hard to concentrate when you're studying).

Evelyn Wood would like you to spend an hour with us to discover some of the miraculous things your brain can do with the proper training. In a single, free, 1 hour demonstration, you'll find out why most people are such poor readers, and how our new RD2 course can increase your reading speed at least 300%, with better concentration and retention. As part of the bargain, we'll show you some new reading techniques designed to increase your speed immediately, with good comprehension — after just this one free demonstration.

Evelyn Wood RD2 can open the door to big things for you: better grades, more leisure time, and a whole new positive outlook on studying.

And it will only cost you an hour of "computer time" to find out how.

Attend a free 1-hour RD2 demonstration this week:

K-State spirit heats up Minneapolis

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—It happened on a Saturday night. Outside of the Hungry Eye restaurant on South 10th Street, the wind-chill factor registered 25 degrees below zero. But inside, things were much hotter.

LeAnn Wilcox and Gayla Williams were helping the white-haired waitress serve coffee.

Kevin "Zero" Magee was swiping hash browns from Robin Moore's plate.

Elvis Presley was singing "My Way" on the jukebox and Tami Johnson was clearing chairs so she could do her Elvis imitation.

Nancy Raleigh was talking to someone from the Kansas City Star on the pay phone.

And off in the corner booth, coaches Judy Akers and Jane Schroeder were beaming. "We're in the top 16 now," they repeated again and again.

Indeed they were. The women Wildcats of K-State had just beaten Drake University in the semifinals of the Region VI AIAW tournament. Their opponent in the finals the next night would be intrastate rival KU, which they had already beaten twice.

More importantly, the win against Drake advanced the 'Cats to sectional competition in the national AIAW tournament. Win or lose against the Jayhawks, they were still one of the top 16 teams in the nation.

THE TEAM flew into Minneapolis March 7, two days before the tournament began. Plane trips don't come often on a women's basketball budget, so the team had to ride a bus 12 hours to Minneapolis earlier in the season. Immediately after their game against the University of Minnesota, the team had to hop on the bus back to Manhattan.

Flying would allow the team some time to see the city.

At the airport, freshman Jeanne Daniels was greeted by her Aunt Shirley.

"Woe, what is this?" Daniels later said. "I hadn't seen her since she moved out here four years ago. And there she was at the airport. What a surprise."

After a short rest at the downtown Holiday Inn, the team practiced at Williams Arena. The basketball court at Williams is raised three feet off the main floor and there isn't much room along the sidelines and behind the baskets before the drop begins.

"It's scary," Daniels said.

"Coach gets more exercise running up and down those three steps during timeouts," another player said. "It's really kinda funny."

THE 'CATS weren't always joking about the court, however. They were concerned about their first-round opponent, Minnesota, despite an earlier 100-62 victory in Williams. The Gophers later avenged the loss with a 68-66 win in Ahearn Field House.

As Akers expected, the regional opener on Friday, March 9 was close, especially down the stretch.

"A tough team, a tough team," Akers said after their 84-80 victory.

Eileen Feeney (16 points) and Wilcox (14 points) paced the Wildcats. But, Wilcox was the key, scoring 12 of her 14 points in the last 10 minutes of the game.

It turned out to be a nice birthday present for Wilcox's mother, one of many parents who traveled to Minneapolis to watch the 'Cats.

> 'Road trips are the best and so are my ladies...'
> —Zero

"She's so cool out there," "Zero" said, refering to Wilcox. "If I had to give the ball to someone in the clutch, it'd be Le'."

Number one Wildcat fan Zero had driven "Kipper," his '69 Chevy Impala, through rain, sleet and snow for the tournament.

"Road trips are the best," Zero said. "And so are my ladies."

"Yup. Women's basketball is more fun than men's," Corvin Alstot, senior in architecture, said.

ROBIN MOORE, graduate in geography, Julie Krasne, sophomore in pre-veterinary medicine, and Alstot accompanied Zero on the trip.

"We're almost a part of the team," Alstot said.

Whenever the Wildcats go on the road, Zero and his gang stay where the team stays and eat where the team eats.

And, after beating Minnesota, the team and its fans invaded Bridgeman's Ice Cream shop.

Zero and Alstot entertained the ladies with their Groucho glasses. Bridgeman's, usually slow on Friday nights, was now cookin'.

Two girls sitting in the booth behind Zero asked him where all the people were coming from.

"We're coming from Williams Arena and we're the K-State women's basketball team."

The girls seemed confused.

"That's Kansas State from Manhattan, Kansas. If you're ever in town, just ask for Zero."

"What a complimentary name," one of the girls said sarcastically.

Zero laughed. "Hey, it comes before number one."

The place was now hopping. Assistant sports information director Raleigh tried to ingnore the noise while talking on the pay phone. Licking a double-dip cone of Bridgeman's chocolate chip, Raleigh called in the game story to most of the major newspapers and TV stations in Kansas.

NONE of the media had sent a representative to cover the 'Cats, something that was normal for out-of-town games.

Once during that night's game, Raleigh saw someone shooting pictures underneath the basket.

"Look, it's Mike DeArmond from the Star," she said.

A closer look proved she was wrong.

"What would he be doing in Minneapolis anyway," she said.

Back on the telephone, the DJ from KMKF asked Raleigh who the 'Cats would play the next night.

"Drake," she said.

Drake University had been in and out of the top 20 most of the season. Earlier that same night, they had edged Central Missouri State, 80-77.

This was a game the Wildcats really wanted to win. Against Minnesota, the team was nonchalant immediately following the game.

But, as the buzzer ended K-State's 79-70 victory over Drake, the 'Cats went wild. Sophomore Lori Coulter exploded off the bench and hugged her fellow teammates at mid-court. It was jubilation time for the 'Cats. Even Akers was up and cheering.

WILCOX and Feeney again led the 'Cats in scoring with 22 and 14 points, respectively. And Tami Johnson, who had come off the bench against Minnesota to spark the 'Cats, did the same against Drake, scoring 10 points. Johnson would end up shooting 87 percent from the free throw line en route to the all-tournament team along with Wilcox.

But K-State had little time to savor its victory. Sunday's finals were less than 24 hours away. And KU was the foe.

Even before the tournament began, many of the 'Cats thought there was a good possiblity of playing KU in the finals.

"And if we do, we can beat them again," Daniels said two days before the opening round. "I mean by 10 or 12 points. I know we could, especially on a neutral court."

Neutral was exactly the word. Although Williams Arena is an "old barn" in its own right, it was sparsely populated with only 150 fans.

Everything else seemed right for the 'Cats, though. The 20 or so Wildcat fans had come prepared with their "Screw KU" T-shirts.

Krasne and Moore had conned a salesman at a record store to record the 45 rpm "Knock on Wood"' on a blank cassette so they could play it over the PA system before the game.

THIS WAS the 'Cats theme song against KU in reference to All-American Lynette Woodard. And as the sound of Amy Stewart singing "you gotta knock, knock, knock on wood..." echoed throughout the near-empty arena, the players went wild, jumping up and down with clenched fists.

But it was Woodard who knocked on K-State, scoring 20 of her 26 points in the first half. KU, which jumped out to a 9-0 lead, never let the 'Cats get close, despite Beth Boggs' 17 points and Laurie Miller's 12 points and 12 rebounds. The 'Hawks won going away, 75-59.

But the loss didn't seem to bother the 'Cats that much.

"Let's forget this game and look forward to Tennessee," Coach Akers said to the team in the locker room. The team would now meet top-ranked Old Dominion in Cookeville, Tenn., on Friday night.

At the Normandy Inn after the KU game Tami Johnson's father made a champagne toast to the 'Cats. "We wish you luck in Tennessee," he said.

And that's what really mattered. A season that had begun back in November was now nearing its end. And making it to the sectionals was what it was all about.

The team knew from here on in every team would be top-notch.

Back in Manhattan, preparing for their game against Old Dominion, Coach Akers said with a smile, "We're in the big time now."

National powers end 'Cats' hopes

"We're in the big time now," Coach Judy Akers said after the K-State women's basketball team won a trip to the AIAW South Area Sectional in Cookeville, Tenn.

But, "the big time" was too big for K-State, as the 'Cats dropped two straight games to end their season 20-11.

Last Friday, No. 1-ranked Old Dominion jumped off to an 8-2 lead, stretched it to 40-18 and ran away from K-State, 96-75.

"We didn't play well at both ends of the court," Akers said. "Offensively, we got off to a slow start. We didn't have enough patience and we shot the ball too fast."

Although the 'Cats could never get closer than 15 points, they were saved from total embarrassment by Eileen Feeney's 28-point performance, 16 of which came in the first half.

Inge Nissen, a 6-5 junior from Denmark, led Old Dominion with 32 points.

IN THE CONSOLATION game Saturday nght, the 'Cats were beaten 104-92 by Valdosta State.

The 11th-ranked Lady Blazers led 74-58 early in the second half and held off two K-State rallies, the second of which made the score 83-80 with 4:28 left.

LeAnn Wilcox led the 'Cats with 26 points, while Feeney had 24 points and 14 rebounds.

Susan Taylor had 38 points for Valdosta State and Carol Chason added 26.

"We didn't get the point production from our bench like we're used to having. To win against a good team like this, you need good performances from eight or more people."

"It wasn't that the girls didn't want to, they just didn't put it together," Akers said.

TIRED OUT...Chet Peters, vice president for student affairs, gets a welcome hand after finishing the 10,000-meter road race Saturday. Peters was first in the men's 55 and over age group.

Shamrock fun runners fill streets of Aggieville

The streets of Aggieville are usually less populated during spring break, but Saturday morning, the 1100 block of Moro Street was filled gutter to gutter with people shoulder to shoulder.

More than 600 donned various running attire, participated in Aggieville's first St. Patrick's Day Road Races.

The races included a Shamrock two-mile fun run, the St. Pat's 10,000-meter event and a 50-kilometer (31 mile) marathon.

Patterned after the St. Patrick's Day run in New York City, the center line down the middle of Moro was painted green to mark the starting point of the race, according to Arne Richards, co-director of the race. Richards said he expects the St. Patrick's Day races to become a tradition in Manhattan.

Although several hundred people participated in the 10,000-meter and two-mile events, only six ran in the marathon, which four eventually finished.

JIM STEWART of Topeka won the 31-mile race with a time of 3.38:01, followed by Rich Ayers of Kansas City in 3.52:30. Richards, a KSU librarian, placed third in 4.05:06.

The two-mile fun run was won by K-State senior Rex Roney.

The St. Pat's 10,000-meter race was won by Fred Torneden, a Fort Hays State track and cross country runner, with a time of 30:10.

Janel LeValley, a K-State women's track team member, won the women's 19-24 age group with a time 38:30. K-State women's volleyball and softball coach Mary Phyl Dwight won the 25-29 women's age group.

In the men's division, K-State's vice president for student affairs Chet Peters won the 55 and over age group.

K-State tracksters warm up in Texas

In preparation for the start of the outdoor track season, the K-State men's track team traveled to Austin, Texas during spring break for a meet with the University of Texas and Texas Tech.

The Wildcats used the meet to "shake some of the kinks out" before outdoor season begins, because the weather is usually bad in Kansas at this time, head track coach Mike Ross said.

Wildcat freshman Richard Buck took first place in the high hurdles while Doug Knauss won the pole vault followed by a second place performance from teammate Dana Morris.

Qualifying for the Texas Relays was K-State's Ray Bradley with a personal best of 174-6 in the discus.

In an "outstanding double," according to Ross, Tim Davis took second in the mile and fourth in the quarter-mile run. Earle Jones placed second in the quarter.

White Sox crush KC

FORT MYERS, Fla. (AP)—Chicago White Sox first baseman Mike Squires and center fielder Chet Lemon rapped a pair of hits apiece to drive in six runs on the way to a 14-0 pasting of the Kansas City Royals in exhibition baseball Sunday.

Royals pitchers Rich Gale and Marty Pattin each were blitzed for a six-run inning, and the Royals could muster only three singles in retaliation. Kansas City Manager Whitey Herzog said it might have been the worst game he has seen.

Penn, Michigan State advance to Final Four

GREENSBORO, N.C. (AP)—Tony Price of 14th-ranked Pennsylvania insisted throughout the opening rounds of the NCAA East Regional basketball tournament that he wanted respect for the Ivy League.

He got it Sunday when he poured in 21 points and James Salters tossed in two free throws with 23 seconds remaining, giving the Quakers a 64-62 victory over No. 17 St. John's in the regional final.

The victory sends Penn to Salt Lake City next week for a national semifinal battle against Michigan State, which defeated Notre Dame 80-68 in Sunday's Mideast Regional championship game.

The loss ended an incredible stretch drive by the Redmen of Lou Carnesecca, a colorful veteran coach.

"It goes down to the last ballgame and just look at the score," Carnesecca said. "There's no post-mortem on my part. That team (St. John's) walked out of there with their heads up."

After Salters hit the winning points, St. John's had three shots in the final 10 seconds in rapid succession, first by Tom Calabrese, then by Gordon Thomas and finally Ron Plair, who had hit nine straight shots until he finally missed with three seconds left.

PRICE and Tim Smith ignited the victory down the stretch by scoring 16 of the Quakers' last 19 points, 10 by Smith as the Ivy League champions overcame a 49-45 deficit in the final eight minutes.

Plair and Wayne McKoy keyed the St. John's comeback, combining for 15 consecutive points as the Redmen surged to the lead with eight minutes remaining.

St. John's, which had lost six straight NCAA games before reeling off three consecutive upsets this year, ended the season with a 21-11 record.

Plair led St. John's with 21 points and McKoy had 15, although he sat out 11 minutes of the opening half with three fouls.

Smith added 16 points for the Quakers, who extended their winning streak to six games.

Thomas cut the margin to one point with two free throws before Salters hit his free throw with 55 seconds left, giving Penn a 62-60 lead.

St. John's Frank Gilroy tied the score three seconds later by hitting two free throws, setting the stage for Salters' game-winning shots, half a minute later.

MEANWHILE, in Indianapolis, Ind., Michigan State earned a trip to the NCAA's Final Four for the first time in 22 years, thanks to the scoring and rebounding of Greg Kelser, the ball-handling wizardry of Earvin Johnson and a sticky zone defense that Notre Dame never mastered.

The 6-7 Kelser, the only senior on Michigan State's squad, scored a season-high 34 points and grabbed 13 rebounds Sunday, as the third-ranked Spartans beat No. 4 Notre Dame 80-68 for the Mideast Regional championship. Many of Kelser's points came on dazzling feeds from Johnson, an All-American sophomore who had 13 assists.

"It feels great—I can't even say how great," Johnson said during the celebration of the Michigan State locker room. "It has been a dream of mine to make the Final Four and now we're there."

Michigan State, 24-6, will play Ivy League champion Penn in the NCAA semifinals Saturday, the victor to face the DePaul-Indiana State winner for the collegiate championship March 26.

'Cats baseball team claims best start since 1976 season

Judging from the K-State baseball team's 9-0 record, maybe the 'Cats should consider playing all their home games in KSU football stadium.

The 'Cats played their first eight games of the season on a makeshift baseball diamond in the football stadium because Frank Myers Field was too wet and muddy.

The Wildcats finally played a doubleheader against Creighton University at Myers Field Saturday, with K-State winning the first game 10-4. The second game was called in the fifth inning due to darkness with the score tied 3-3.

The contest was scheduled to resume Sunday, but again the field was too muddy.

The Wildcats, who have only seven of returning players, boast their best opening record in three years.

"I've been pleased with our initial performances," K-State Coach Dave Baker said, "but we still have plenty of room for improvement in all areas. The longer we play together, obviously the more we should improve."

SO FAR this season, batting has carried the team.

Going into the contest against Creighton, outfielder Tyrone Hudson led the batting averages with .480, followed by Al Hunter with .476.

Don Hess, who is third in batting, went three for four in the first game against Creighton with a homer, a triple, and a single.

The Wildcats' leading pitcher Tom Harvey, a Johnson County Junior College transfer, is now 3-0.

The 'Cats are scheduled to play doubleheaders today against Valley City State and Wednesday against Minnesota-Morris before heading for Tulsa, Okla.

Tennis team 'reaches beyond its grasp'

The K-State women's tennis team "tested the waters and found they were pretty deep" over spring break, according to Coach David Hacker.

The Wildcats were beaten in all four matches. They lost to Illinois 9-0, Wisconsin 9-0, Iowa State 6-3 and Nebraska 8-1.

"Victories this spring will be few and far between," Hacker said. "In all of our matches we will be competing against schools that have most of their players on full-ride scholarships (no K-State women are on tennis scholarships)."

Although the other schools' players were "much better," according to Hacker, "that's the only way we can get better, too. We've got to reach beyond our grasp."

The high points of the trip included Laurie Friesenborg's victory over Iowa State's No. 1 player, and the victory over a "powerful" Nebraska doubles team by Brenda Bennett and Denise Beckerman, who had never played together before.

THE OTHER two victories during the trip were claimed by Beckerman and Nancy Duffin over Iowa State's Julie Dankle and Ellen Bartges, and Bennett and Emily Cohn over Iowa State's Mary Crimins and Tracy Rector.

Against Iowa State, the 'Cats lost three three-set matches.

"They could have gone either way," Hacker said. "We could have won the meet 6-3 just as well as Iowa State did."

The team was hampered by the loss of Candie Gwin, who chose to go to Hawaii during break, and the illness of Shelly Christensen, who had a severe cold but still played, according to Hacker.

In addition, the K-State lineup included Beckerman and Melissa Melhus, neither of whom had major college experience.

"I was impressed with Beckerman," Hacker said. "She came out last fall and stuck with the team, working hard. She wants to play."

"We let the Midwest know that K-State women are here to play tennis," Hacker said. "It was great publicity for the team and school. We had dozens of spectators at the Illinois match in Champaign-Urbana, and lots of publicity in newspapers, radio and TV in Illinois, Wisconsin and Iowa. When you're trying to build a program from scratch, that's important.

"I doubt if any women's team in the country has had a tougher schedule than we have. It's designed for the future. Next year, I don't think we'll be in over our heads."

Judge denies motions for May's new trial

Motions for a new trial for Darwin May, convicted kidnapper of 5-year-old Gary Thomason, were denied March 12 in Riley County District Court.

May, the last of three convicted of the Oct. 4 kidnapping, was found guilty Feb. 16. Marlon Holum, 21, a Fort Riley deserter and Stephan Werle, 21, Junction City, both pleaded guilty to the charge before May's trial began.

District Court Judge Jerry Merrshon separately rejected the seven points of the motion filed Feb. 23 by defense attorney Jim Morrison.

The main error the court made in conducting the trial, Morrison alleged, was that it did not suppress the confessions of Holum and Werle and that May was unable to participate in the suppression hearings.

Mershon, answering the charges, said the confessions were not suppressed because they were obtained legally. Besides, he said, the testimony and not the confessions of Holum and Werle was used.

Also, May and Morrison were present at the hearings to ensure May's rights were not injured.

Other allegations in the points of the motion denied were:

—The defendant was denied a fair and impartial trial because he was not granted a change of venue.

—The court's error in not instructing the jury on reaching a verdict on the lesser charge of unlawful restraint.

—The jury decided the issue on insufficient evidence.

—The court erred in denying a Bill of Particulars which enumerates the laws the defendant is supposed to have violated.

—The court erred in allowing the prosecution to endorse witnesses immediately before the trial.

May will be sentenced after a presentencing investigation.

Coal ash disposal won't affect study

An area north of The Top Of The World will not be used for the disposal of coal ash from the University's proposed coal-fired power plant, according to K-State President Duane Acker.

Acker made the announcement during his press conference in Anderson Hall last Wednesday.

According to the Manhattan Mercury, concern about the site, recommended by Lutz, Daily and Brain, the engineering consulting firm for the power plant study, was first voiced by University faculty and students at a public meeting in late January.

The University-owned land, purchased by the Kansas Legislature more than 30 years ago for range management studies, is still being used for research. Members of the University community have said monetary value can't be placed on the research.

At last week's press conference, the Manhattan Mercury quoted Acker as saying he was sure the University wouldn't use a site that would interfere with range management studies.

University officials are now considering another site for ash disposal located north of the new dairy research center off Marlatt Avenue.

Court to determine freedom of reporter in protecting source

RICHMOND, Va. (AP)—David Chandler, a Pulitzer Prize-winning reporter, will attempt in court Monday to avoid going to jail for the second time in his career for refusing to reveal news sources.

"There is no reasonable punishment they can impose, including jail, that will make me reveal the names," Chandler said.

Chandler, a reporter for the Norfolk Ledger-Star, received an indeterminate jail sentence and a $100-a-day fine last Tuesday from Richmond Circuit Court Judge James Wilkinson.

WILKINSON HELD Chandler in contempt for failing to reveal news sources before a special grand jury investigating reports of corruption in the state Division of Purchases and Supply.

Chandler, 42, wrote a series of articles for the Ledger-Star in which he quoted unnamed sources as saying division employees had accepted expensive gifts from vendors seeking to do business with the state.

A Virginia Supreme Court justice has agreed to hear arguments Monday on whether Wilkinson's order should be suspended and Chandler allowed to remain free until a full court hearing can be held on the matter.

There is a strong possibility, however, a decision will not be handed down in time to keep Chandler from going behind bars.

A FEDERAL court cannot intervene until Chandler has exhausted all his state legal remedies.

In 1962, Chandler spent "a couple of days in jail" in Panama City, Fla., for refusing to identify sources in connection with a series of stories on governmental corruption that won the Pulitzer Prize. He was a reporter for the Panama City News-Herald at the time.

Sinai return planned; more U.S. aid wanted

WASHINGTON (AP)—Egypt and Israel discussed on Sunday accelerating the pace of Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai as a good will gesture after a peace treaty is signed.

Israeli Defense Minister Ezer Weizman said the two sides were talking about an early return of El Arish, the principal city of the Sinai, to Egyptian control.

Weizman and Egyptian Defense Minister Kamel Hasan Ali met Sunday to work out the details of the withdrawal plan.

Weizman, appearing on NBC's "Meet the Press" said he hoped to be able to complete the talks with Ali shortly. He also said he wanted to reach an understanding with Secretary of Defense Harold Brown about American aid for the evacuation.

Israel is asking for $3.4 billion in American assistance, to build new airbases and supportive facilities in the Negev desert to replace bases being returned to Egypt. So far, the United States has offered only $2.5 billion, according to American sources.

Weizman said the aid dispute would not affect Israel's willingness to sign the treaty.

"If I come out of here a little less happy than I think I should, this will not affect the signature next week.

"Nobody's saying that the U.S. has to foot the bill for everything. We shall tighten our belts and do our bit, too," Weizman said.

MEANWHILE, Secretary of State Cyrus Vance said on another interview program that U.S. embassies in the Middle East have been warned to take precautions against possible violence after the treaty signing.

"We cannot rule out that there may be some violence after the signing of the peace treaty," Vance said.

Vance said his reference to violence did not refer to the potential for attacks on Israel or Egypt or their leaders.

The secretary of state was interviewed on CBS' "Face the Nation." On ABC's "Issues and Answers," the chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee warned that U.S. aid to Saudi Arabia and Jordan may be re-examined if the two countries work to undermine the Middle East peace treaty.

Sen. Frank Church (D-Idaho) said he was not asking the countries to embrace publicly the Egyptian-Israeli peace, but that he would ask that they "at least not undertake to sabotage" the treaty.

Israeli statesman attacks peace plan

TEL AVIV, Israel (AP)—To Geula Cohen, the Israel-Egypt peace treaty is a doomed document, an invitation to war and a personal betrayal by the man she supported for 30 years.

As a member of Israel's Parliament, the Knesset, she has led right-wing opposition to the peace process for 16 months, carrying her message from the hills of the Israeli-administered West Bank of the Jordan River to the halls of the Knesset. Approval of the treaty appears imminent, but Cohen says of her fight against it, "I'm only beginning."

President Carter got a personal earful of her protest earlier this month. He sat at the Knesset rostrum and smiled weakly as the raven-haired Cohen, tears in her eyes, repeatedly interrupted Prime Minister Menachem Begin's speech on negotiations with Carter.

THE EMOTIONAL outburst got her expelled from the chamber, a repeat of her ejection during last September's debate on the Camp David accords.

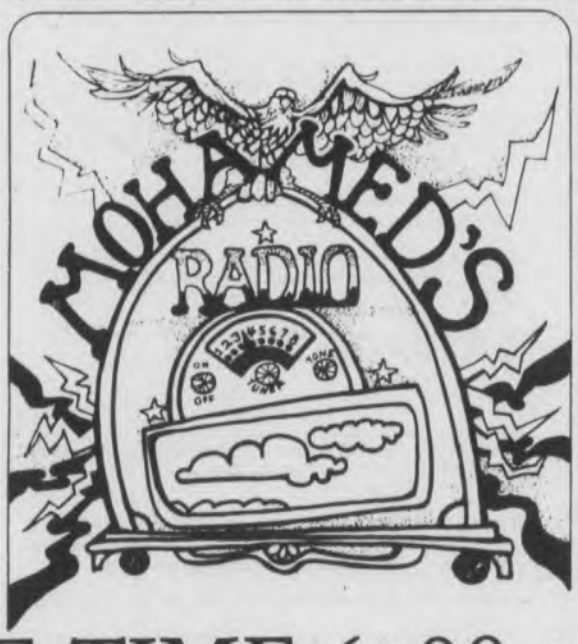
Cohen, 52, was widely criticized for marring the Knesset's reception of Carter, although others heckled Begin after she left.

But she said she thinks Carter will understand. "He's a politician and it was a political action," she said.

Her shooting began more than a year ago when President Anwar Sadat of Egypt broke the stalemate in the Middle East and came to Jerusalem, and Begin responded by agreeing to return the entire Sinai Peninsula to Egypt. Cohen, a member of Begin's Likud Party, opposed the move and attacked Begin in party forums.

She said Begin should resign. Likud ostracized her and Begin pointedly ignored her.

The peace treaty's dangers, Cohen argued, are "obvious."



"It will bring a Palestinian state and encourage a new war," she said, "because Begin won't accept a Palestinian state and would send the army against it. And giving back Sinai is giving back the conditions, the temptation to war."

Her conclusion: "I'm sure the treaty will collapse, not 'if' but 'when.' The question is if Sinai will be in our hands or their hands when it does."

Kurd fighting ends in Iran by cease-fire

TEHRAN, Iran (AP)—An uneasy cease-fire settled over northwestern Iran Monday night after a day of battles between Kurdish rebels and forces of Iran's new revolutionary government. Reports from the scene said at least 170 people were killed and that rebels held the radio and television station.

The cease-fire in the town of Sanandaj, scene of most of the fighting, was announced by Radio Tehran. The radio said it was arranged by the military and leaders of the rival Sunni and Shiite Moslem sects.

The tough Kurds, who have dreamed of their own nation for centuries, overran the military headquarters in Sanandaj 250 miles west of Tehran and captured its commander, Col. Safari. In street-to-street fighting the Kurds seized police headquarters and the radio and television station.

It remained unclear what sparked the 24 hours of fighting.

Some reports said military and Shiite Moslem leaders had refused to issue arms and ammunition to Kurds, most of whom belong to the rival Sunni sect, but had issued them to Shiites.

ANOTHER REPORT said the town's Islamic revolutionary council, loyal to Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini and Prime Minister Mehdi Bazargan's government, had appointed Shiites to top civil posts in the heavily Sunni region.

Khomeini earlier Monday broadcast an appeal to the warring factions to stop fighting. He accused "foreign-inspired agents" of creating disturbances in "dear Kurdistan."

About 4 million Kurds along the Iraqi and Turkish frontiers in western and northwestern Iran have modified their demands for a separate state and now say they will accept an autonomous region within Iran.

Prime Minister Bazargan has promised to give Kurdistan's problems top priority, but other issues have kept him from dealing with the matter.

American feminist leader Kate Millett arrived in Paris after being sent packing by Iranian officials who objected to her feminist activities.

Millett, who arrived in Paris after being kept under guard in Tehran overnight, denounced the new government as "an insult to Islam" and said the revolution, which she supported initially, had been "co-opted" by religious extremists.

She had arrived in Iran two weeks earlier to take part in demonstrations for women' rights.

Borlaug: It's a curious, curious mentality on food

EDITOR'S NOTE: Norman Borlaug will deliver the 46th Landon Lecture at 10:30 this morning in McCain Auditorium.

By JULIE DOLL
Editor

Norman Borlaug's journey from a 56-acre farm near Cresco, Iowa. to a 1970 Nobel Peace Prize spanned 56 years of agricultural involvement.

In that span, the face of agriculture has changed drastically, Borlaug said. What was once a family enterprise is increasingly a corporate venture, and Borlaug sees danger in the change.

"It would be very unfortunate if the entire agriculture scene went that direction (corporate)," he said, hinting that such a move might eventually give rise to widespread violence.

"If it (land) all gets gobbled up in the hands of too few, who can say what might happen in 50 years."

IF HISTORY is any indication, the next 50 years on the farm will be filled with changes.

When Borlaug left his parents' farm for the University of Minnesota in 1933, about 30 percent of Americans farmed. In 1970, that figure dived to 3 percent, and Borlaug thinks the 1980 census will show a further decline in the number of farmers.

Farmers are leaving the land for economic reasons, he said. With the high cost of land and equipment, young farmers are finding it financially unfeasible to make a profit.

Efforts by farmers to improve their plight have fallen short because Americans don't understand or appreciate farmers, Borlaug said.

"It's a curious, curious mentality on food by a country who has never been short of it," he said.

At the end of World War II, Americans were spending 26 percent of their money on food, Borlaug said. In 1970, that number dropped to 16 percent and is still less than 20 percent, he said.

"Americans get upset with rising food prices, but not with the increased costs of color TVs and radios. They take agriculture for granted."

SURPLUSES OF grain between 1950 and 1972 are at least partially to blame for the public's attitude, Borlaug said. But then droughts in the early '70s devasted crops throughout the world; availability of grain declined, and grain prices rose.

Optimistic farmers borrowed money to expand; grain prices began to fall, and many farmers "got caught in the squeeze," he said.

Many of those "caught in the squeeze" are attempting to loosen the grasp of financial disaster by advocating a government-guaranteed profit.

If reasonable, Borlaug thinks government subsidies of agriculture are "merited," but added that "political pressures" from farm and public sectors often keep subsidies at unreasonable levels.

MEANWHILE, more ambitious agricultural businessmen are trying to establish a wheat cartel that would include the U.S., Canada, Argentina and Australia. The cartel would be patterned after the oil cartel and would attempt to set uniform, international grain prices. Borlaug doubted the economic effectiveness of such a cartel.

Because of the interchangeable nature of grains, countries could substitute soybeans or corn for wheat, he said. Another minus is the Soviet Union, a large exporter of wheat. Unless the Soviet Union also joined the cartel—and Borlaug doubts that it would—world wheat prices could not be uniform.

Eventually, though, grain prices will rise, Borlaug said, because of increasing energy and fertilizer usually produced with petroleum costs.

"The farmer isn't going back to the hole," he said, "food prices will have to go up.

"What I can't understand is that the American people still don't realize there is an energy crisis in the offing. Whether or not the United States will survive it depends on whether the American people have the toughness that made this country," Borlaug said.

AAM seeks ag dollars; 'save the family farm'

By CHRIS MCKEE
Collegian Reporter

"If we can save our farms, we can save our country," said Carol Ebert of St. George. "Our goal is to save the family farm."

Ebert, a member of the American Agricultural Movement (AAM) , was distributing information in the K-State Union yesterday during the National Appreciation of Agriculture Day. The primary purpose of the occasion was to make the non-farming consumer aware of American agriculture and the problems facing the farmer.

"Today only 4 percent of the American population farms. Food is taken for granted," she said.

"You hear about the farmer getting a 40 percent increase in farm prices, but this amount brings the farmer's average income to $6,000," Ebert said.

"The ag-dollar turns over seven times after it leaves the farmer. For every dollar we're cheated, the consumer pays seven times as much."

EBERT SAID she volunteers about 40 hours a week to support the AAM. She has spoken in several Kansas counties to gain support for the movement.

She said her husband has cut back production of crops in protest of low farm prices. "We are also cutting back on the use of fertilizer because we can't afford it," she said.

According to Ebert, the AAM is backed by small businessmen because they know the farmer's purchasing power declines when he can't get an increase in the price of his farm products.

Ebert places the blame for the farmer's woes on the "Trilateral Commission."

THE TRILATERAL Commission comprises members of business, banking, government, media and labor in the tthree democratic areas of the world—the U.S., Western Europe and Japan, according to a pamphlet distributed by the AAM.

The pamphlet says the objective of the commission is "permanent coordination of the entire free world and eventually the establishment of a loosely knit socialistic world government."

According to Ebert, the Trilateral Commisson is out to control the nation's energy supply, farms and food supply.

"If you control those, you control everything," she said. "They want to control the rest of the farm land," she said.

President Carter is a member of the commission, according to the pamphlet.

"We thought Carter was a farmer, but he's not," Ebert said.

Ebert said that at the recent AAM farm protest in Washington, police wore overalls over their uniforms and infiltrated the farmers to cause trouble.

She said because of pressure from the government the rent was raised continuously in the building the AAM had rented.

"We were backed by the AFL-CIO, the rubber workers, the NAACP, the textile workers and the truckers," she said "We're all in the same boat."

And on their farm they had a...

WASHINGTON, N.J. (AP)—And on their farm they had—a llama? While their neighbors tend the usual cows, horses and chickens, Carol and Steven McAuliff rely on less orthodox animals to pay the bills on their farm.

Llamas and deer graze alongside sheep and donkeys on the eight-acre Animal Actors farm, where the barnyard is a training ground for stage and screen. Daily lessons work on getting wild animals to respond calmly to humans, Mrs. McAuliff said. "We train them to be in a whatever situation they may be in," she said.

Appeals court vacates Bell charge

NEW YORK—A contempt of court order against Attorney General Griffin Bell for refusing to identify FBI informants was vacated Monday by the 2nd U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals.

The appellate court directed U.S. District Judge Thomas Griesa, who cited Bell for contempt in July 1978, to impose some sort of "issue-related sanctions" as an alternative measure.

In its unanimous ruling, the three-judge panel did not specify what sanctions could be imposed, but the government had suggested in its arguments that a partial cash settlement might be one option.

In its unanimous ruling, the three-judge panel did not specify what sanctions could be imposed if the government continued to refuse to identify its informants. But the government had suggested in its arguments that a partial cash settlement might be one option to settle the lawsuit.

The appellate case was considered a significant first test of the government's contention that it had a right to default in certain court actions and pay monetary or other penalties rather than disclose the identity of its informants and endanger their lives and national security.

The current dispute arose in a case before Griesa in which the Socialist Workers Party seeks $40 million damages for alleged illegal acts by the government during FBI surveillance of its members since 1938.

There was no immediate comment from the Socialist Workers Party or the Justice Department.

Sinai withdrawal details 'settled'

WASHINGTON—Israeli Defense Minister Ezer Weizman said Monday "everything is settled" on details of an Israeli withdrawal from the Sinai, and he predicted the peace treaty between Israel and Egypt will be signed next Monday.

Weizman made the announcement after his second meeting since Friday with U.S. Defense Secretary Harold Brown and extensive discussions with Egyptian Defense Minister Kamal Hasan Ali during the weekend.

Weizman said he and Brown have agreed that the United States will provide about $3 billion, mainly to finance construction of two new air bases in Israel to replace two other bases which the Israelis will give up in the Sinai.

Weizman said he would have a final meeting with Ali at a downtown hotel "to finalize everything."

Kennedy affair? Trudeau says it's true

TORONTO—Maclean's magazine says in its cover story Monday that Margaret Trudeau, separated wife of the Canadian Prime Minister, confided that she had a brief liaison with U.S. Sen. Edward Kennedy.

The weekly magazine reports in its March 26 issue that her reported affair with the Massachusetts senator was one of the factors in the disintegration of her marriage to Pierre Elliott Trudeau.

Tom Southwick, Kennedy's press spokesman in Washington, said, "It's completely untrue. It's a statement by the author of the article. It doesn't quote Mrs. Trudeau directly."

Trudeau, 30, could not be reached for comment on the article by Judith Tinson.

The magazine, which has a circulation of 670,000, did not give a date for the alleged liaison. It says Trudeau, who has three children, confided in 1977 that she had earlier had the affair with Kennedy.

Weicker's up to his 'duff' in controversy

WASHINGTON—Though his campaign for the 1980 Republican presidential nomination is barely a week old, Sen. Lowell Weicker is already in trouble with some voters over his choice of words.

The Connecticut senator received this letter of complaint:

"If you persist in the slogan 'Get off your duff,' you are going to lose one large bloc of voters from this family. I have five sons of voting age, and a large group of in-laws. I respectfully suggest you drop the use of this four-letter word....

"Sincerely, Daniel V. Duff, Garden City, N.Y."

The author, incidentally, proposed that Weicker use a three-letter word instead.

Harsh pot penalties hard to believe

It's hard to believe in Kansas possessing an ounce or less of marijuana is punishable by up to a year in prison or $2,500 in fines.

The understanding of this comes with a little history but not the justification for continuing this legislation of marijuana.

It all began in the 1930s.

During this decade, Americans were exposed to an educational campaign against marijuana labeling it as the killer weed which triggered crimes of violence, sexual excesses and drove normal persons into fits of madness. It was, in short, a "satanically destructive" drug.

Following this campaign, the Congress in 1937 passed the Marijuana Tax Act which led the way for state legislatures to enact similar punitive laws.

In the years since, a rational examination by scientists and federal agencies, and through studies of long-term users, marijuana has been cleared of these exagerrated charges.

As a result, some states have questioned having such harsh penalties for small amounts of marijuana leading to reduced penalties or even decriminalization in these states.

Two years ago the Kansas House approved and sent to the Senate a bill reducing the penalty for possession of up to an ounce of marijuana to a $100 fine. The Senate turned it down.

Last year the bill was tabled.

This year a bill to reduce marijuana possession penalties has once more been introduced in the Kansas legislature. This time it faces passage in the Senate first.

It's hard to believe anyone could be against legislation to reduce such harsh penalties for such a small amount of marijuana.

In fact, decriminalization has been endorsed by such organizations as the American Bar Association, the National Council of Churches, the National Education Associaton and the Governors Board of the American Medical Association. A nation-wide survey, Public Experience with Psychoactive Substances, found 86 percent against putting minor drug offenders in jail.

If penalties are reduced it will benefit these minor offenders who are busted for marijuana amounts intended for personal use only. The penalties for more than an ounce, which implies trafficking, will remain the same.

But there are people who still insist on the punitive approach to marijuana legislation.

At a recent Kansas Senate hearing on reducing criminal penalties these people argued that marijuana is bad for one's health, that it leads to harder drugs and that tough penalties deter its use.

These arguments are nothing but leftovers from the scare campaign of the 30s backed by prejudiced, misleading information.

The director of the National Institute of Drug Abuse has admitted marijuana is a less serious health hazard than alcohol or tobacco.

As far as leading to harder drugs, there is no conclusive evidence of such a cause-and-effect relation. Usually it is tobacco or alcohol which precedes any other drug use.

For those who have tried and are using marijuana, harsh laws prohibiting its possession have little value as a deterrent. The National Commission on Marijuana agrees such laws' main effect is to prevent marijuana users from smoking openly.

Such a law either is not or cannot be enforced.

To continue with an unfair and openly-violated law only promotes a feeling of disrespect for all laws.

The recent Senate hearings were full of the contradictions, confusion and prejudice surrounding marijuana for so long. The legislature must now wade through the conflicting arguments to the passage of this much needed bill. Penalties must be reduced for the possession of small amounts of this most misunderstood drug.

And the winner is...

Holy sheepskin!

K-State President Duane Acker has received the first Golden Fleece Award-Kansas Version from two Topeka legislators. The dubious honor was made because of the $100,000 spent to remodel a suite of offices in Anderson Hall.

What does Acker win for the distinction? The two legislators never said; but because it is called the Golden Fleece, I suggest hard labor at the sheep barn for six weeks.

And as long as people are handing out awards, there are a few I'd like to make.

To the University employees who painted over the mural on Waters Hall: The Michelangelo Award. The prize is two semesters of art appreciation classes at K-State.

The Ink Fish award goes to the committee studying curriculum and their rationale of why we must all complete English Comp. I and II:

"No matter what his major, a student in Arts and Science degree program can expect to do a great deal of writing in his academic career, especially in upper-division courses. The reason is not merely that writing assignments are often the best way to test the sort of understanding that college instruction aims to convey but that they are a proven teaching strategy for getting the student to get himself to arrive at an adequate understanding in the first place..."

NEED I go on?

For its use of clear and concise writing, the committee is awarded 15 Kerrigan themes.

The housing department wins the Galloping Gas Award for their wonderful way with food. No explanation is necessary for you who have experienced the culinary delights of dorm food. The recepients of this award will receive two weeks worth of six-layer dinners.

To the City of Manhattan: The Dr. Do-Little Award for allowing Sunset Zoo to deteriorate into a substandard facility. The prize is a 14-hour tour of the zoo in mid-January.

For installing windows in Kedzie Hall without making provisions for air conditioners, the Department of University Facilities wins the Bureaucratic Blooper Award. The department installed energy-efficient windows which will have to be partially torn apart to put the air conditioners in. The windows were installed to save energy—tearing them down negates the purpose they were installed for.

For this foresighted move, the department wins 27 tickets to the 1973 World Series.

THE FINAL award goes to the designers of K-State's bike paths. About $40,000 was spent in its design and construction, and all there is to show is a couple more one-way streets. The winners will receive eight wisk brooms and nine weeks to sweep the sand from the gutters.

Happy sweeping, guys.

And to the rest of the winners, congratulations and don't let it happen again—please.

Open meetings no big step

Editor,

So you think Student Senate has made a great step forward by having the first half hour of senate meetings open to students, Miss Bergen?

I have a question: What do you people discuss that is so vitally important that we students can't be trusted to know about? Since "senate" and "decision-making" are mutally exclusive, I'll help you out by giving you four choices:

a) NATO strategy.

b) what to do about Billy Carter's peanut business.

c) what to do about inflation.

d) how to waste time by engaging in worthless bickering.

That's ascorbic not amino

Editor,

It was reported in Monday's Collegian (March 19) that vitamin C is a vital amino acid. I would like you to note that vitamin C is not an amino acid.

It is a sugar acid known as ascorbic acid. Man can synthesize ascorbic acid only to a little extent from glucose and other simple precursors. Hence, ascorbic acid is needed in the diet of man.

Ascorbic acid is especially abundant in citrus fruits and tomatoes. Ascorbic acd in food is largely destroyed by cooking. Though vitamin C is involved in several metabolic functions in the body, its exact role in curing common colds is not known.

No room for rudeness while watching TV

Editor,

Ever since I've come to K-State I've noticed with much irritation that a certain group of black students like to congregate in the TV room (in the Union).

This is fine, but the noise and disturbance you create is ridiculous. You seem like a bunch of grade school kids out for recess except you are inside among a variety of other people who are doing a variety of things such as studying, reading, relaxing and watching TV.

You can be so insensitive, inconsiderate and uncouth. At times—much to my disgust—I've listened to your conversation and if the majority of what you say had any substance the agriculture department could consider a new source of fertilizer. Anymore, I dread being in the Union during the noon hour.

As a fellow student you embarrass me. By the way, don't bother going to the Black Student Union or minority affairs office or think hating or ostracizing me will change what I think and feel (and what I suspect many do) because I'm black too.

I don't care whether you like or dislike me—you're not paying my tuition, my rent or filling my refrigerator. I think whatever changes that occur must be made within yourselves.

In other words, grow up!

Andre Quinton

You're wasting your time reading this newspaper.

Not because it's not worth reading.

You're wasting your time because you could be reading it three to ten times faster than you are right now.

That's right — three to ten times faster. With better concentration, understanding, and recall.

The problem is, most of us haven't learned anything new about reading since we were 10 years old. So we're still stumbling along at a fraction of our real capacity. In fact, most people read so slowly that their brain actually gets bored and distracted between words (no wonder you have trouble concentrating when you read!)

The new Evelyn Wood RD2 reading program.

Over 20 years ago, Evelyn Wood's research with natural speed readers discovered reading techniques that could be learned and used by virtually anyone. Since that pioneering work, over a million people — from students to presidents — have put the Evelyn Wood method to work for them.

RD2 is Evelyn Wood's latest, updated reading improvement system — designed to be more effective and flexible than ever. With it, you should easily be able to cut your reading and study time by at least two thirds. That means if you're now studying 20 hours a week, you'll save roughly 400 hours — or almost 17 full 24 hour days — in this school year alone!

Spend an hour and check us out.

We know you may have trouble believing what you've just read. That's why our people are on campus now giving free 1 hour demonstrations of RD2. If you can spare an hour, we'll answer any questions you may have about RD2, and prove that you can unlearn your bad reading habits and start saving two thirds of your study time. We'll even demonstrate some new reading techniques designed to increase your speed immediately, with good comprehension.

This short demonstration could start you on your way to better grades, more free time, and a whole new outlook on studying.

It only takes an hour, and it's free. Don't miss it.

Attend a free 1-hour RD2 demonstration this week:

Government-sold planes provide smugglers cheap transportation

WASHINGTON (AP)—Fire engines screamed onto the runway of a small airport near Miami as an ancient workhorse of a plane sputtered toward an emergency landing. There was engine trouble, and the pilot had called for help.

As the plane touched down safely, the pilot radioed that the problem was "under control" and gestured frantically to the puzzled firefighters to stay away.

"It was clear that he didn't want anyone to get near that plane," recalled a law enforcement official familiar with the incident.

The pilot taxied to the ramp, parked, hopped out and fled. Airport spectators thought this odd, and someone called the Customs Service. When agents arrived, they found 4,000 pounds of marijuana neatly packaged in three-foot cubes wrapped in plastic and brown paper.

After the plane and its cargo were seized and the records checked, the agents found another surprise.

THE SAME PLANE, again with a full load of marijuana, had been seized a few months earlier at a small airport on the west Florida coast.

But that's not all. Last spring, customs agents seized the plane a third time at an airport north of Miami but were too late to find anything more than crumbs from the latest marijuana load. "And we're looking to seize it again," said a law enforcement source who requested anonymity.

The checkered past of this twin-engine DC3 illustrates a peculiar situation that allows drug smugglers to look to the U.S. government as the unwitting supplier of some of the planes they need to haul marijuana and cocaine from South America to the United States.

The DC3, a military model at least 20 years old, is a favorite in smuggling because of its ample cargo space. Smugglers can buy military cargo planes directly from the Pentagon which sells its surplus property to anyone who wants to bid and can pay the price.

Or they can buy at public auctions conducted by several government agencies, including the Customs Service itself.

"If you've got the price and you're the successful bidder at an auction, you're entitled to the aircraft," said Jim Dingfelder, spokesman for the Customs Service's Miami regional office.

OFFICIALS of Customs and the Drug Enforcement Administration (DEA) say they aren't certain how often government-sold planes fall into smugglers' hands, and they doubt that the sale procedure could be changed in any way to prevent the situation.

Nor do they believe it would make any real dent in the drug traffic even if smugglers could be shut out of the government sales.

Freshmen pitchers lead 'Cats to 7-0, 5-1 victories

The K-State baseball team continued its winning streak Monday afternoon at Frank Myers Field as it dominated Valley City State College in a doubleheader.

The Wildcats, now 11-0-1 for the season, defeated the Vikings 7-0 in the first game and 5-1 in the second.

The games Monday were the North Dakota team's first action this season and only the second time it had played outdoors since last fall.

In the first contest, K-State freshman pitcher Doug Hoppock increased his winning record to 2-0. Hoppock pitched the first four innings without giving up a hit. He had eight strikeouts and gave up only one walk before sophomore Doug Able took over in the fifth inning.

The Wildcats had five hits and two errors in the first game.

K-State's left-handed catcher, Bob Dubek, led the Wildcats' batting, connecting two of three times at the plate. Tyrone Hudson, the only Wildcat senior to play Monday, hit a triple and knocked in two runs during the first game.

VALLEY CITY STATE opened the scoring in the second game with a run in the top of the second inning, but K-State's Cal Alexander evened the score in the same inning with a home run over the left field fence.

The 'Cats continued to dominate the scoring with two more runs in the third inning and one run in both the fourth and sixth innings.

K-State's freshman Don Waller pitched the entire second game. He threw nine strikeouts and gave up five hits and three walks.

K-State had nine hits in the second game. Al Hunter, Ken Dickerson and Mark Nordyke each went two for three.

The Wildcats face their first opponent away from home today when they meet Oral Roberts in Tulsa, Okla.

Home action resumes Monday as they take on Missouri Southern.

TIED UP...Kappa Alpha Psi's Curtis Lee (right), senior in marketing, gets tangled up with Shop Quik's Mark Lutz, sophomore in finance.

Nightmare, Shop Quik advance to finals

Two free throws by Marc Felts with 15 seconds remaining secured a 48-45 victory for Welcome to Your Nightmare over Haymaker Three in the All-University intramural basketball semifinals last night.

Nightmare will meet Shop Quik in the championship game tonight. Shop Quik defeated Kappa Alpha Psi 30-29 in the other semifinal game last night.

Nightmare's high scorers were Steve DeChant with 12 points and Stan Bollig with 10 points, all in the first half.

Jackie Robinson led Shop Quik with 12 points to offset Darryl Winston's 17-point effort for Kappa Alpha Psi.

The Kappa Alpha Psi's advanced into the semifinal bracket over 27 other fraternity teams while Shop Quik outlasted 72 teams in their independent division.

In another 82-team independent division, Nightmare emerged the victor, while Haymaker Three took the top spot in a 32-team resident hall division.

Earlier this month, Double Jeopardy defeated the Chi Omegas to win the women's league and the B.B. Bunch won the co-rec final game over P.T. Hotshot.

Go west, young man... or is it east?

Some interesting goings-on are going on in the NCAA basketball tournament. In fact, they may be approaching government-level logic.

Sports Illustrated enlightened its readers last week to the fact that the Midwest Regional was played in Cincinnati, Ohio and the Mideast Regional was played in Indianapolis, Ind.

That means the Mideast Regional was 104 miles west of the Midwest Regional. Oops.

Weber State, of Ogden, Utah played in Lawrence. If they had beaten Arkansas, the Wildcats would have gone farther east to play in Cincinnati. All of this saved them from having to go all the way to Provo, Utah, to play in the West Regional.

SURE, some of those smaller schools avoided playing national powers like UCLA and San Francisco in the West Regional, but it sure would have been cheaper to stay in state and get smeared, rather than go all the way to Kansas.

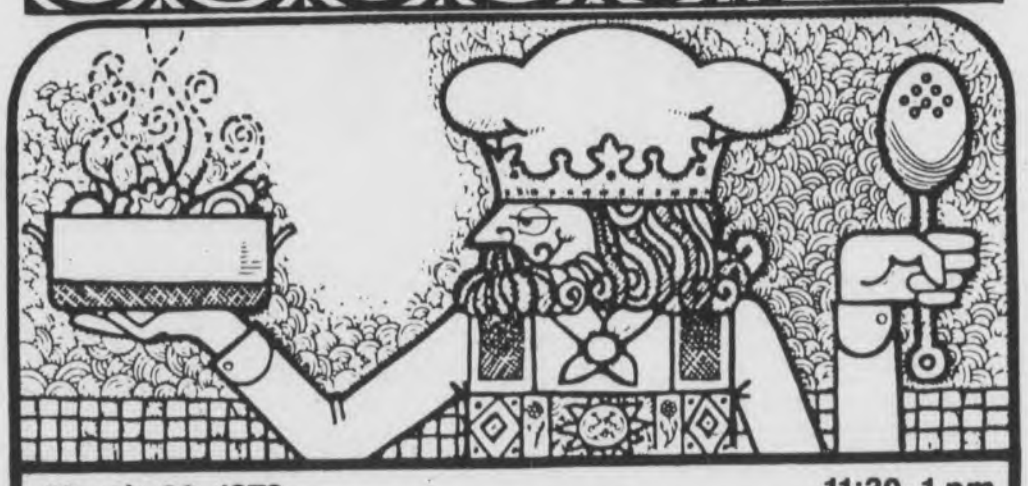
DePaul of Chicago had to play even farther away from home. The Blue Demons played their first game in Los Angeles, then traveled to Provo, and now have earned their way into the Final Four in Salt Lake City.

A great injustice also was done to DePaul's first-round opponent, Southern Cal. The Trojans had to go clear across town (which may take longer than coming from Chicago).

My favorite development in the tournament was the scheduling of the finals of the East Regional in Greensboro, N.C.—right in the middle of Atlantic Coast Conference country.

This was the only placement that made sense—a perfect set-up for the ACC fans to see North Carolina and Duke battle in the finals.

Oops. They were beaten in the second round by eventual finalists Penn and St. John's.



So, the almighty ACC was humbled by the lowly (yuck) East.

In fact, although the ACC gets tons of press and everybody worships at its feet, the Big Ten proved itself to be the class conference.

Purdue, Indiana and Ohio State are in the semifinals of the NIT and Michigan State is in the semifinals of the NCAA.

EARLY MORNING BLAZE...The remains of a mobile home disintegrate into flames during a Tuesday morning fire at Iseman's mobile home sales.

Fire damages mobile homes

Early Monday morning fire damaged Iseman's mobile home sales lot located 2 miles west of Manhattan on K-18 highway.

At approximately midnight, the Riley County Fire Department received a call for assistance from the Ogden township, and sent one unit to help, Riley County Fire Chief Del Petty said.

"We had the fire under control in a couple of hours," Petty said. But because of winds and the threat of the fire spreading, they stayed on until 3 a.m. just to make sure. After the Manhattan firefighters left, the Riley County Police observed the site during their regular patrols, Petty said.

A double-wide trailer used as an office was destroyed, along with several other trailers, a truck and many spare parts, tools and tires.

"The damage was quite extensive, a whole lot of stuff was destroyed," Petty said.

An estimate of loss was not available. The cause of the fire has not been determined. Petty said a special investigator from the state fire marshal's office in Topeka was being sent to investigate.

The damage was so extensive, Petty said it was unlikely a cause could be established.

Lantern explosion lights trailer home

The mobile home at Lot 55 of the Colonial Gardens Trailer Court was half destroyed last night at about 9:45 when Rocky Tyler, a resident of the trailer, filled an empty camping lantern with fuel and it exploded when he tried to light it.

The 14 foot by 75 foot mobile home, owned by Susan Weighouse, also a resident of the trailer court, was only six months old. Tyler said all the furnishings inside the trailer were also brand new.

The fire started in the kitchen in the front of the trailer, Del Petty, Riley County rural fire chief, said.

"Here's the culprit," Petty said as he picked up the remains of the lantern from the kitchen floor after the fire was brought under control. It took volunteer firemen from the rural fire company, aided by Manhattan firefighters, about 10 minutes to stop the blaze. Because the insulation in the trailer continued to smolder and put off dense clouds of smoke, firemen had to enter the trailer wearing oxygen masks to extinguish the glowing embers.

Wayne Moseler, a next-door neighbor, injured his hand on some broken glass assisting firemen.

Deported feminist condemns regime

PARIS (AP)—American feminist leader Kate Millett, shaken by what she called a terrifying deportation from Iran, arrived here Monday and condemned the new regime in Tehran as "a parody of Islam, an insult to Islam."

"I've never been so afraid in my whole life," the 44-year-old author of "Sexual Politics" told a news conference at Orly Airport after arriving on an Air Iran flight.

Though not physically harmed, Millett said she and her companion Sophie Keir, a freelance journalist from Vancouver, B.C., were held overnight in a guarded locked room before being deported for "provocations" against Iran's new Islamic republic.

Iranian authorities were particularly miffed by her remark that Ayatullah Ruhollah Khomeini, the architect of the Iranian revolution, was "a male chauvinist."

MILLETT said the revolution had been "co-opted" by the religious hierarchy. She said Khomeini's Islamic republic "is not a republic at all but virtually a dictatorship...a parody of Islam, an insult to Islam.

"People are flogged for sex. There is a reinstitution of the most brutal and stupid measures of the past," she said. "People are flogged for having a glass of wine. Is this a revolution?"

She said, "We are afraid for our sisters there. The Iranian women are afraid of being arrested and for them it won't be someone saying: 'Please take an airplane and get out of here.'"

She said she arrived in Iran two weeks ago at the invitation of women's groups. She said she served seven years on a committee against what she called "the dreadful police state" of deposed Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi.

Jesuits will resume mission in China

VATICAN CITY (AP)—Jesuit priests, expelled from China in the early days of Communist rule, will return to Shanghai to teach in a medical school, the leader of the order announced Monday.

The Rev. Pedro Arrupe, who heads the Society of Jesus, or the Jesuits, said that China recently contacted the society in France and asked that the once Jesuit-operated medical school of Aurora in Shanghai resume its activities.

China also said it would welcome back former professors, said Arrupe, but he did not say when the order, known as the Pope's "Black Army" would return to China.

"The Jesuits would be happy and wish to serve China as they used during the last 400 years," said Arrupe, recalling the mission of St. Francis Xavier, the closest companion of 16th century Jesuit founder, St Ignatius of Loyola.

"Today there are more and greater opportunities than before and it is our responsibility to take advantage of them," said the 71-year-old Spaniard.

Ten Jesuit missions with about 1,000 members were thriving in 1949 at the establishment of the People's Republic. Jesuits were running parishes, high schools and two of the three Catholic universities in China, Aurora in Shanghai and Hautes Etudes in Tien Hsin.

After the communist takeover, foreign priests and bishops were expelled. Some were jailed on various charges. The most prominent case was that of American missionary Bishop James Edward Walsh, 88, of Cumberland, Md.

Telenet seeks balance of housework, careers

By CAROLE SPEER
Collegian Reporter

Planning finances, communicating effectively on the job and balancing housework with career growth are topics to be included in a Telenet program beginning April 18.

The program, "Lunch and Learning for Kansas Wommen," is directed at working women, especially secretaries, said Jan Kruh, coordinator of Telenet.

Classes will be taught by Naomi McCarty, assistant professor of accounting, and Barbara Ballard, counselor in the Center for Student Development.

"We are very excited about this program," Kruh said. "We are installing a special facility at Ft. Riley so the women at the base can participate in our program," she said.

The lectures will be available in Umberger 311B for Manhattan residents and at any Telenet station in Kansas.

T3lenet is an amplified telephone communication system sponsored by the six state universities in Kansas. Since 1970, it has offered additional learning opportunities to high school, undergraduate and graduate college students.

According to Kruh, two microphones and one speaker were installed at each of the 28 Telenet sites in Kansas. Students listen to the lectures via the speaker and then are free to ask questions over the phone.

"This is a good system, especially for those who live in the western part of the state," Kruh said. "The people who live there don't have much of an opportunity to take any form of graduate classes—Telenet makes it possible," she said.

Telenet classes are each worth two hours of college credit, Kruh said.

"The science program works amazingly well," said Charles Hathaway, head of the physics department and coordinator for the Telenet science program. "It gives high school students a chance to interact with high-level people in the science field."

According to Hathaway, the 1979-80 program will deal with life in the universe. Instructors will include Carl Hynek, director of the center for studies of UFOs; Alexander Rich speaking about the Viking mission to Mars; geologist Ron Greeley, on the effect of geology on the evolution of life; and Sidney Fox, director of the institute of molecular evolution.

"We haven't had that many students participate in the program at our school, but those who do have enjoyed it," said Kendall Hay, assistant superintendant at Wellington High School.

"This program adds a lot to our program for gifted students, and I feel it has been invaluable to those who have participated," he said.

The theme for the humanities program is "Arts in the Environment." One speaker for this program is entertainer John Denver.

Programs for college graduate and undergraduate students are taught by K-State professors. Classes have included concepts in basic nutrition, teaching exceptional children, biochemistry and personal finance.

According to Kruh, these classes are conducted during lunch breaks and evening hours.

"We conduct our classes during these times because most of these students work during the day," Kruh said.

"We try to arrange our classes so as many people as possible can attend," she said.

Faculty Senate awards March graduate degrees to 55 students

K-State has released 55 more graduate students from its protective clutches.

Faculty Senate awarded three master of art, 37 master of science and 15 doctor of philosophy degrees in their March 6 meeting.

Faculty Senate awards advanced degrees five times a year. Undergraduate degrees are awarded only three times a year, said Robert Kruh, dean of the Graduate School.

Graduate degrees can be awarded in August, October, December, March and May so the graduate student can receive his degree as soon after completing the requirements as possible, Kruh said.

Only graduate students who have completed the requirements will be allowed to go through commencement exercises on May 18, he said.

For the academic school year 1978-79, 468 master's degrees and 79 doctor of philosophy degrees have already been awarded.

There are 65 major fields at K-State which offer master's degrees and 29 areas which offer Ph.D. degrees. The March graduate list shows that master's degrees were given in 20 fields and doctoral degrees were given in 11.

Taming the 'monster'

Borlaug on food

By JULIE DOLL
Editor

Sunday, Norman Borlaug will turn 65, an age when most people begin to think about retiring.

But to those listening to Borlaug at Tuesday's Landon Lecture, it was apparent that the gray-haired agricultural scientist isn't about to slowdown his war against world hunger.

Borlaug, who won the 1970 Nobel Peace Prize for his work in increasing grain production in underdeveloped countries, told an audience which nearly filled McCain Auditorium he was shocked with the complacent attitude Americans have on issues such as energy.

Living in Mexico for the last 35 years has given Borlaug a different perspective of the United States, he said.

"Sometimes when I come back to this country, I am fearful—so much complacency and so many things taken for granted," Borlaug said.

BORLAUG HAS WORKED with the Mexican government and the Rockefeller Foundation since 1943.

From the end of World War II to the early '70s, Americans could afford to ignore agriculture because of grain surpluses, Borlaug said. But four years of worldwide crop disasters between 1972 and 1975 wiped out the surpluses, which have just recently been replenished.

"We muddled our way through that crisis," Borlaug said. "We didn't plan our way through; we just muddled. Now we're back in this complacency attitude again."

Although many nations have wheat stored away, hunger and starvation continue, he said.

Many developing nations can't afford to import wheat to feed their populations, Borlaug said. Even if a country, like India, has adequate amounts of grain, the poor can't afford it. The problem is not only production but distribution, he said.

Borlaug said he has been "prodding" the Indian government for years to set up public works programs similar to those used in the United States during the 1930s. Under the program, irrigation and drainage ditches could be dug; farm-to-market roads improved; rural schools built, and laborers could earn money to buy food.

THE BIGGEST PROBLEM agricultural scientists face is neither production nor distribution, Borlaug said. It's uncontrolled population growth.

"Whenever you talk about food, you have to talk about food for how many. The population problem impinges on the progress of civilization."

"We have to tame that population monster before he kills us.

"When stomachs go hungry, patience wears out, and anger flares. Let's never forget what it was like here in the mid '30s," Borlaug said.

When food or other resources run low, countries face the possibility of political strife and violence, he said.

"I saw this country's way of life almost fall apart (in the '30s). Don't think that it can't happen here."

Borlaug predicted future energy and food shortages throughout the world and said the United States is ignoring the impending crisis.

THE ABILITY of the United States to survive the crisis will depend on whether it's "tough enough to give up some of the nice things. Are we tough enough as a nation?" Borlaug said.

Food production must double in the next 40 years just to keep pace with the population, he said.

Borlaug criticized the President Carter's stand on human rights.

"It (human rights) can never be achieved as long as there are hundreds of millions starving people.

"Who are you giving human rights to, the elite?" he asked.

Borlaug's goal is to provide every person with the "necessities," including food, housing, a job, medical care and schools for his children.

In the effort to achieve his goal, he continues to work at improving grain production throughout the world. Borlaug, head of the Wheat Improvement Program of the International Program of the International Maize and Wheat Improvement Center in Mexico, trains scientists and travels to countries encouraging them to adopt new grain varieties and farming techniques.

Special counsel appointed to look into loans

WASHINGTON (AP)—Paul Curran, a Republican New York lawyer who was a federal prosecutor during the Nixon and Ford administrations, was named Tuesday to head a special investigation into bank loans involving President Carter's family peanut business.

Attorney General Griffin Bell appointed Curran, 46, as a special counsel to continue an investigation that was begun by the Justice Department.

Acting under mounting pressure, particularly from Republican members of Congress, Bell said that "because of the unique combination of circumstances in this matter, it is in the best interest of the administration of justice and the public's perception of the fairness and impartiality of justice that an independent special counsel be appointed."

Curran's powers will stop short of those of a special prosecutor, like the ones appointed during the Nixon administration to investigate the Watergate scandal. Decisions in the Carter business inquiry on such matters as whether to seek an indictment ultimately will remain with Assistant Attorney General Philip Heymann, who heads the Justice Department's criminal division.

BUT CURRAN said at a news conference he was "satisfied I have all the powers" to conduct a thorough and impartial investigation.

"I'm going to call the shots as I see them as best I can and I'm going to finish its investigation as quickly as I can," he said.

His job will be to investigate the handling of $6.5 million in loans made to the Carter family's peanut warehouse in Plains, Ga., by the National Bank of Georgia in 1975 and 1976 when Bert Lance was bank president.

Kurds agree to retreat from siege on barracks

SANANDAJ, Iran (AP)—Kurdish guerrillas agreed to a new cease-fire Tuesday and ended a bloody siege against an Iranian army barracks, but by late evening gunfire and mortars were still exploding in the city.

State radio announced the Kurds around the barracks agreed to pull back from their positions and rebel sources said a civilian delegation went to the surrounded barracks in an effort to persuade the trapped soldiers to surrender.

The government said since fighting erupted Sunday, 86 people have been killed and 200 wounded as Kurds battle to win their centuries-old dream of autonomy.

One resident told a reporter Tuesday: "We are Iranians and we love our country. But we want to govern ourselves."

Kurdish fighters manned roadblocks throughout Sanandaj and were still in control of most of the Kurdistan provincial capital as night fell and the cease-fire went into effect.

THROUGHOUT the day military helicopters made low sweeps over the city and fired on residents of the area. Hospitals were jammed with injured and doctors working round-the-clock appealed for medical supplies.

Deputy Prime Minister Abbas Amir Entezam vowed to crush the insurgents and announced the government was sending reinforcements to the city.

No troop movements were seen by reporters driving to Sanandaj, 300 miles west of Tehran, but 10 helicopters landed at the local airport, apparently loaded with soldiers.

Fighting erupted Sunday, some reports said, when the Kurds were denied ammunition by army officials.

There was a brief cease-fire Monday night but it was shattered early Tuesday by rebels who opened fire on helicopters dropping food supplies to soldiers in the barracks in the west of the city.

Both Marxist Fedayeen and Islamic Mojahedeen guerrillas, who played key roles in fighting that toppled Shah Mohammad Reza Pahlavi, appealed for the government to work out a peaceful solution to the rebellion.

Theatre may obtain extra City Hall space

By LARRY RIBORDY
Collegian Reporter

The Manhattan Civic Theatre may be given the use of an unused room in the basement of City Hall.

Manhattan City Commissioners discussed the possibilities last night after hearing pleas from the theater group and the Manhattan Recreation Commission for the space.

Cost of work needed to bring the room up to building codes will determine when and if the theater group can move in.

William Lala of the Civic Theatre spoke of the necessity of moving to a larger facility and what construction would be done to the space. Lala said the Theatre needed more room and the museum room provided better service access. He said the room would require $5,000 to bring it up to code standards, $5,000 for wiring and sound and another $5,000 if additional rest rooms are to be installed.

Lala said the theater group is requesting a three-year agreement to justify the cost and would like the option to leave the museum room if a new site becomes available.

Clifford "Pinky" Busick, superintendent of the Recreation Commission, said they wish to make use of the museum room to expand the arts and crafts courses. He said there is an overload and the future is looking stronger and there is a need for expansion to accommodate people. He said the old museum room would provide for 44 classrooms.

Lala said the two groups had not been able to compromise because of time conflicts. He said the Recreation Commission had proposed 12-day slots, but that wasn't enough time to prepare for a play.

Terry Glasscock, mayor pro tem, and City Commissioners Ed Horne and Russell Reitz felt the Recreation Commission would be hurt the least and went in favor of the Civic Theatre.

Power plant gets go ahead from House

TOPEKA— The House passed, 106-17, and sent to the Senate Tuesday a bill giving a qualified go-ahead to construction of a new coal-fired power plant at K-State which is estimated to cost $25 million or more.

The bill includes appropriations for construction and renovation projects at the state universities.

Included is $900,000 in final planning money for the proposed K-State electrical generating plant which can be spent in the current fiscal year, plus construction funds for each of the next three years.

However, the bill includes a provision that none of the money can be spent without permission of the State Finance Council. That stipulation says K-State officials must answer certain environmental and financial questions about the plant to the satisfaction of the council before getting approval to spend the money.

The new plant has been a subject of legislative controversy, with some arguing its construction should be delayed until questions about its environmental and economic impact can be answered. Others argue that to delay its construction will only add to its cost and that it is needed.

Also included is money for a new physical education and student services building at Wichita State University and renovation of Lindley and Marvin halls at the University of Kansas.

Gas price controls may be dropped

WASHINGTON—President Carter plans to announce next week a new energy plan that may remove controls from crude oil prices and tax excess oil-industry profits, it was disclosed Tuesday.

Members of Congress who participated in a leadership breakfast with Carter at the White House quoted the president as saying he still had not made up his mind on many details on the new plan.

House Speaker Thomas O'Neill (D-Mass.) said Carter intended to consult further with key lawmakers before delivering his energy speech to the nation on March 29.

Meanwhile, a congressional staff study suggested lifting price controls from crude oil could cost consumers from $5 billion to $14 billion a year in higher fuel costs.

Sadat, Begin clash over Jerusalem

Egypt and Israel locked horns over the future of Jerusalem and the Palestinians Tuesday in their first public clash since President Carter's breakthrough visit to the Middle East.

The clash was triggered by Israeli Prime Minister Menachem Begin's vow in Parliament never to divide Jerusalem or permit a Palestinian state in the West Bank or Gaza Strip.

In Cairo, Prime Minister Mustafa Kalil said Begin's vow "spoils the atmosphere" of the treaty but said he doubts it will prevent it from being signed.

Iraq announced it had called Arab League members to an emergency meeting in Baghdad March 27-29 to discuss sanctions against Egypt for signing a treaty "with the enemy Israel." There were signs that two moderates, Jordan and Saudi Arabia, would join in the sanctions.

Mondale stumps for mayor candidate

KANSAS CITY, Mo.—Vice President Walter Mondale brought his ceremonial best to Kansas City Tuesday night in support of the candidacy of Bruce Watkins, who could be the city's first black mayor.

Mondale, at a news conference preceding a $1,000-a-ticket cocktail party fund-raiser, characterized Watkins as the man who could most effectively make federal programs work in Kansas City.

The vice presidential visit has been one of the livelier issues in an otherwise low-key campaign by Watkins' opponent, Republican Richard Berkley.

The Berkley camp has said the visit would backfire for Watkins, provoking local resentment of outside political involvement, rather than support for the Democrat.

But Mondale insisted he was not worried about any backlash.

"I thought that over for about 30 seconds, then decided to come. What America needs is not less involvement in controversy, but more," Mondale said. "I am not here to tell the citizens of Kansas City how to vote. They'll make up their own minds."

Lows tonight will be in the low to mid 40s. There's a 60 percent chance of rain today and 80 percent tonight.

Profit jump puts businesses 'on trial'

WASHINGTON (AP)—Corporate profits increased 26.4 percent last year, the biggest annual jump in nearly three decades, and the Carter administration said the leap puts the nation's businesses "on trial in the eyes of the American people."

"The very large increases in profits of American corporations will strengthen the widespread belief that many American businesses aren't assuming their full responsiblity to fight inflation," said Alfred Kahn, the administration's chief inflation-fighter.

Lyle Gramley, a member of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, said, "It makes us wonder if the business community is taking seriously the guidelines we have put into place to hold prices in check."

Call a bomb a bomb; not an energy solution

When the 1979 budget pie is divided, the Department of Energy (DOE) will be forced to take 23 percent of its allotted slice to feed the Department of Defense's (DOD) pet—nuclear weaponry.

This slice will go to pay for three national nuclear laboratories, a Nevada underground test site, and seven weapons-production plants—putting DOE in the business of building bombs.

There is an entire section of the DOE called the Atomic Energy Defense Activities (AEDA). In this section, there is funding for various programs such as weapons production, inertial confinement studies and naval reactor development.

This section received $1,050,967 in 1978, and is estimated to receive an increase of $44,000 this year.

Energy needs were rarely mentioned in the AEDA section of the "The Budget of the United States Government Fiscal Year 1980," which lists the estimates for 1979 and explains the purpose of the major programs.

In one of the few AEDA programs mentioning energy, it listed the purpose of an "energy program" as:

"The objective of this program is to develop and demonstrate inertial confinement fission in order to utilize it as an aid in nuclear weapons development, testing and simulation, and as a potential inexhaustible energy source."

The purpose was defense; the afterthought, energy.

The government's rationalization is the research eventually leads to new technology but priorities are messed up when DOE is responsible for programs not having anything to do with energy.

Bomb building is a strange job for the DOE to be involved in—strange, unless somebody wants to make it look like the defense budget is being pared down, while the energy budget receives a boost.

Last year, military expenditures by the DOE amounted to 21 percent of its budget, this year it is 23 percent—leaving 77 percent of "energy's budget" to spend on energy.

Who knows how long it will be before DOE has half of the "energy budget" to spend on energy? Already, almost a quarter of the "energy budget" goes to defense.

Instead of trying to fool the nation by shifting funds to different departments, it would be more honest to call a bomb, a bomb, and give it to the department in the business of bomb building.

Procedures vital to work

Editor,

I recently recieved a copy of the Collegian article by Luke Brown (March 8) on the controversy surrounding the resignation of Dorothy Crist from her dishwashing job at Derby Food Center.

The article prompts me to respond with the following observations:

A dismissal in this manner points out the neccesity of each state employee's being aware of what type of information is placed in his or her file. Richard Gorden is correct in that she should have appealed the ratings if she felt they were incorrect.

More importantly, an employee should be willing to pursue the matter fully through the var8ous steps as set forth in Civil Service regulations until the matter is settled.

Even though Crist was not a KAPE (Kansas Association of Public Employees) member, a campus representative for the association volunteered much time and effort on her behalf to initiate the beginning steps of the greivance procedure. In the end, it was Crist's decision to not appeal.

Also, Gordan was until recently the president of chapter 11 of KAPE, and not the head of the association as reported. Chapter 11 is the maintenance and service employees unit of K-State and is part of a statewide network of KAPE chapters.

Float 'fleece' down river

Editor,

Re: The Associated Press release from the Collegian (March 19) concerning the "Golden Fleece" award presented to President Acker.

I felt the personal attack on our university president by the two legislators from Topeka to be in poor taste. Democratic representatives Charles Laird and Anthony Hensley appear to me to be attempting to attain media notoriety at the sake of an important state official.

I would not disagree that $100,000 seemed to be an extravagant amount for several office renovation projects. What does in fact upset me is that the award was not shared with Chancellor Archie Dykes of the University of Kansas for his $70,000 air conditioning system placed in his university-owned dwelling.

If we're in the process of discussing taxpayers' wasted funds, I wonder how many bids were taken prior to starting that project in Lawrence. I also would submit that I think far more people, whether students, staff or faculty, will benefit from our Anderson Hall offices than from what must be a more than adequate cooling system in Mr. Dykes' home. I think the "Golden Fleece" should be floated down the river.

Looker learns long-lived lesson

There was this old sage, who lived in the shabbiest cave in the neighborhood. This sage had four dogs that barked constantly day and night, keeping the neighbors up until the wee hours.

The sage had a really crummy looking lawn. Where there were no rocks, there was only crab grass. All the other neighbors had fine lawns of bermuda and blue grass.

The old sage would play his drums on every other Sunday, which also left the neighbors in a lousy mood.

The sage was a real slob. All the neighbors hated him. They tried to get him to move. They tried to kill his barking dogs. They tried to get him to clean up his yard and plant bermuda or blue grass. They begged him to give up his every-other-Sunday drum concerto.

But the sage was set in his ways. He said he was perfectly happy living the way he was.

He said he only lacked one thing in his life—the companionship of a woman. He was lonely—most sages are, you know.

The neighbors decided to seek professional help. But this was a time when there were no professions.

FINALLY, A young woman who had not slept in 14 days due to the barking dogs and the pounding drums, went to the shabby cave of the sage.

"Please!" said the woman, who was really a looker. "I haven't slept in two weeks. Can't you shut those damn dogs up long enough for me to get a good night's sleep?"

"They are my dogs and they are in my yard. They can bark if they want to," the old sage replied.

"Please!" the looker said. "I'll do anything—anything you want."

"Anything?" the lecherous sage said.

"Yes, just let me get some rest."

The old sage went out in the yard and killed the four dogs. He then returned to the cave and threw his drums into the fire and told the looker to get into bed with him.

After it was all over, the neighbors were so happy with the woman they convinced her to return and offer herself in return for a handsome lawn and a refurbished cave. The sage agreed.

He planted bermuda, killed the crabgrass, cleaned the cave and sought his reward.

News of the looker's success with the sage traveled swiftly and soon she was contracted to clean up several neighborhoods. Within a few weeks, the looker was cleaning up neighborhoods full time.

And, this is where two proverbs have come from:

—Love thy neighbor.

—Prostitution is the oldest profession.

Outsider amazed, confused

Editor,

The editorial concerning marijuana was a well-investigated, timely piece of journalism. Ever since I've come to K-State from the fun and sun in Texas, it is amazing—as well as difficult to comprehend—that Kansas is such a backward state.

What is even more surprising is the people of Kansas generally endorse the political pondering and legislative decisions of this police state.

Ask any other "outsider" and as an objective observer he or she could easily list the strange contrasts and even stranger inconsistencies in Kansas. Pot and liquor laws (ridiculous!) head the list.

Thanks Sharon. It's about time someone made an honest, well-meaning attempt at opening a few eyes and ears to the issue. Good grief. You might have opened a few minds too.

But then again, I'm in Kansas now...

Men, women benefit from WRC services

By RAYMOND QUINTON
Staff Writer

Changing sexual roles in our society are issues to which the K-State's Women's Resource Center (WRC) gives particular attention.

Men as well as women benefit from the services offered by the center. It offers programs and resources for students who have problems adjusting to the educational environment while pursuing a degree.

Margaret Nordin, associate director of the Center for Student Development, set the framework for making WRC a reality in the spring of 1973.

"It (WRC) started out as two bookshelves in Fairchild 212 and the total work force included one graduate student," Nordin said. "At that time, the roles of men and women were changing and more women were going to work after they graduated from college."

Nordin said the change would have a definite effect on the expectations of women when relating with family, friends and spouses.

AN EXCERPT from the WRC volunteer handbook reinforced the idea of the dilemma women face in accepting "non-traditional roles."

"Certain social changes, too new to show up in income statistics, may eventually reduce the effect of this disadvantage. One is the rise in educational levels for women. Studies show that the more education a woman has, the higher the salary and attachment to the workforce."

Related to the rise in education is the preference for smaller families and consequent shorter interruption of careers, Nordin said. As shown by the rapid increase in working mothers, especially those with children under the age of 6, many women now take little time from their jobs when they have children. In addition, there is now a trend toward later marriages, which is either a cause or effect of increased work experience and career commitment.

"There was a lack of realization on the part of the younger students that anything was wrong at all so at that time (1973) we decided to survey freshman women's attitudes toward school and careers," Nordin said.

Nordin discovered through her surveys that most of the students were not career-oriented and most of them settled for "traditional" majors such as home economics or pre-nursing.

ANOTHER SURVEY conducted in 1976 showed women were breaking away from "traditional" roles. Nordin said in the short time WRC has been in existence, there have been some major changes.

"We thought that we would attract the women who were more traditionally minded and concerned about some of the changes. Interestingly enough, we seemed to attract the "non-traditional" minded women," she said. "These women had discovered in their living group situation there were very few others like them. They needed to get together with a few others like themselves so they wouldn't think they were crazy."

Over the years, WRC has developed an extensive resource library of magazines, books, pamphlets and newsletters. All deal with current issues that confront women.

Volunteers for WRC ae required to familiarize themselves with the referral list and spend some time in the center in order to take phone calls and walk-in clients. Training workshops are sponsored by WRC to teach skills to volunteers which might be needed prior to referring a person to someone else.

Nordin described WRC's resources and referral services as places where people can get help.

"We want WRC to be a place where people will feel comfortable and also feel that we better understand the problems that people have, especially women," she said.

"We try to make referrals more of a personal matter instead of just giving out a name and number and sending the person on their way."

Nordin said volunteers are trained to sit down and talk to walk-ins and find out about the situation, and then make a referral to the best possible source.

IN 1973, WRC's first programming consisted of sending volunteers to classes and group discussions in residence halls to learn about different issues. Over the span of six years, WRC's programming increased considerably.

During 1978, WRC sponsored 67 programs attended by approximately 1,300 people. One main objective of the programming is to cover as many concerns and issues of women, and appeal to as many populations of the campus as possible, according to the WRC volunteer handbook.

A few of the programs held in the past year are, "Men's Awareness," "The Black Woman," assertiveness training sessions and group discussion on women and their sexuality.

In order to maintain its standard of programming and services, WRC relies on two important campus sources for funding.

WRC is located in the Student Government Association office and is funded by Student Senate and the Center for Student Development. Each year, Student Senate allocates money to WRC according to their appropriate needs and functions on campus.

ALLOCATED MONEY pays for work-study positions, additions to the resource library, office supplies and advertising.

Nordin said she believes because of the support WRC receives, it has succeeded in raising the level of awareness of women in the community.

"I would hope that in about 10 years K-State would no longer need WRC," Nordin said.

"By that time this should be a campus aware of men and women in the classroom and outside of the classroom," she said.

"I hope that the atmosphere between men and women would be such that women would not be questioned if they go into the so-called "non-traditional" areas of study just as men would not be questioned for going into nursing or home economics."

Committee against preferential primary

TOPEKA (AP)—The House Elections Committee voted overwhelmingly Tuesday to kill the presidential preferential primary eleotion scheduled in Kansas in April of 1980.

The vote was 11-4 for a motion by Rep. James Gillmore (R-Newton) to amend a Senate-passed bill. The amendment would repeal the 1978 law creating the presidential primary election for 1980 and each four years after that.

The bill now goes to the House for debate. If passed, it goes back to the Senate for concurrence in the amendment. That concurrence is certain to be challenged.

The Senate-passed the bill, which makes technical amendments in the law which were requested by Secretary of State Jack Brier, by a vote of 40-0.

Sen. Mike Johnston (D-Parsons) a major supporter of the primary, said he was "quite disappointed" at the House committee action.

"I would hope that the full House would show the wisdom to reject the House committee repealer and restore the bill to its original form," Johnston said.

ASKED IF he thinks the House will reject the committee's action, Johnston replied, "I would say the issue is relatively close."

However, Johnston said he was "very confident" he has the votes in the Senate to stop the repeal.

In addition, Gov. John Carlin is a supporter of the presidential primary. Democrats believe he will veto any bill repealing the law.

Rep. Belva Ott (R-Wichita) said a majority of the committee felt potential benefits for Kansas in holding the primary were inadequate to justify the cost and to offset the potential for diminishing the role of the major political parties, who now select Kansas delegates to the Republican and Democratic conventions.

SHE ALSO said the majority didn't like the way delegates would be prorated among presidential candidates depending on the vote they got in Kansas, and the fact they were bound to vote that way only on the first ballot at the national conventions.

There have been reports that supporters of U.S. Sen. Bob Dole, an undeclared contender for the Republican presidential nomination next year, either wanted the primary eliminated or wanted it to be made a winner-take-all affair.

However, Ott said she had not been contacted by anyone on Dole's behalf.

She said she voted for creating the presidential primary last year, but thinks it was a mistake and now opposes it.

Spring Break!

Cloudy skies shade island adventure

By NANCY ZOGLEMAN
Collegian Reporter

South Padre Island became the spring break hideaway for K-State students who went to Texas for the sun, sand and surf.

But when 50,000 arrived to South Padre from colleges throughout the Midwest, all they found was sand, surf and cloudy skies.

With the cloudy and cool temperatures many students' only alternative was to hit the bars or beaches for some heavy partying.

Sunday night, 1,500 paying persons and numerous others who sneaked in by the women's bathroom window packed themselves into The Pavillion which has a capacity of 750 people. The cost was $3.50 a head for the music of Mr. Boogie and the Disco Factory from Wichita.

Other nights were spent in the Quarterdeck Club, Louie's Backyard or just by the pool at any of the many motels packed with students.

Students who didn't bring tents or recreational vehicles to camp out on the beach tried to find rooms in the motels.

Most of the motels had been booked up for months so many students roomed with friends.

"We had two rooms for six people and ended up with six in one room and seven in the other," Matt Purcell, sophomore in general business, said.

Many of the motels required a deposit before students moved into the rooms so if damage was done to the rooms the deposit was forfeited.

"We had to pay an $84 deposit. We haven't heard if we will get it back yet," Purcell said.

Purcell said that his group went to South Padre in two vans with 47 cases of beer. But with cloudy weather there, 38 cases were gone in the first two days.

Many other K-State students went to South Padre on the Union Programing Council (UPC) trip. The UPC chartered four buses for 130 K-State students.

Karen Smith, junior in elementary education, said the trip to South Padre Island took 24 hours.

"I got so tired trying to sleep sitting up that I climbed underneath the seat and stretched out," Smith said.

The K-State UPC group had many activities for their stay in South Padre with parties and a trip to Mexico, but many more activities were needed to replace the hidden sun.

"After spending $144 on a trip you would think you could at least get three days of sun out of it," Smith said.

Smith said after a week in "Sunless South Padre" many of the UPC group were ready to get home.

"Our bus driver tried to get us home in-a hurry, but got a ticket in the process," Smith said.

Carlin, Acker to honor employee of the year

Gov. John Carlin and K-State President Duane Acker will honor the classified (civil service) employee of the year at 3 p.m., today in McCain Auditorium.

The winner, chosen by the Classified Affairs Committee, will be awarded $500 from the KSU Foundation during the Classified Recognition Ceremony.

Nominations for employee of the year began last fall when the committee sent out notices asking for nominations, said Pat Brown, the committee's publicity coordinator.

Employers made nominations and wrote letters to the committee giving reasons for the nomination, Brown said. Of those nominated six finalists were chosen.

Finalists are Betty Bailey, Helen Johnson, Lloyd Manthe, Mildred Moore, Shirley Olsen and George Slagel.

Recognition for continuous service includes seven people receiving 25-year pins, 28 receiving 15-year pins and 690 receiving five-year pins, she said.

The University currently has about 1800 classified employees.

THE END OF CRAMMING

Would you like to:
- Raise your grade average without long hours over texts
- End all-night cramming sessions
- Breeze through all your studying in as little as 1/3 the time
- Have more free time to enjoy yourself
- Read 3 to 10 times faster, with better concentration, understanding, and recall.

Evelyn Wood's new RD2 reading system makes it all possible.

Evelyn Wood works — over 1 million people, including students, executives, senators, and even presidents have proven it. A free 1 hour demonstration will show you how to save hundreds of hours of drudgery this year as well as how to increase your speed immediately with some simple new reading techniques.

It only takes an hour, and it's free. Don't miss it.

Public pays tab for fishy meeting

TOPEKA (AP)—The state Fish and Game Commission must answer to the Legislature for a controversial meeting the agency sponsored last week in Pratt at public expense, Gov. John Carlin said Tuesday.

Since the Fish and Game Commission, which operates on on licensing fees, is not as directly under his control as most other state agencies, Carlin told his news conference, he did not become directly involved in the controversy.

However, he told reporters, he was unaware of the meeting and concerned about it, adding, "I was not realy excited about it. I did not approve.

Critics of the agency saw the meeting as a blatant lobbying effort to build support for the commission's pending budget before the Legislature.

"They made their decision and took their action and will have to defend their action before the Legislature for what they did."

The Fish and Game Commission's budget has passed the House but still faces hearings in the Senate Ways and Means Committee.

THE COMMISSION invited all 21 former commissioners to Pratt for the two-day session last week. Nine persons accepted the invitation, and were presented with plaques of appreciation for their past service.

Jerry Conley, the agency's director, has defended the honoring of the former commissioners and contended "the agency's entire staff benefited from the meeting."

Conley estimated the costs of lodging and a dinner honoring the former commissioners at about $270. The bills were paid from hunting and fishing license fees.

On another subject, Carlin said he is not alarmed over reports of low morale among Kansas Highway Patrol troopers, because Col. Allen Rush, superintendent of the patrol, has assured him there is no problem.

During recent floor debate in the Kansas House of Representatives, Reps. Ward Ferguson (D-McPherson) and Jack Rodrock (D-Leoti) told of morale problems they had heard about within the patrol's ranks.

Carlin said he had talked with Rush about it, adding, "We're not concerned at this point that changes are needed. Col. Rush fees the morale is quite good, and I have no reason to believe otherwise."

On other matters, the governor said:

—He expects to have "very shortly" the appointment of a new member of the Kansas Corporation Commission to replace G.T. Van Bebber, whose four-year term expired Monday, probably by the end of the week.

—He does not yet have his appointees to the Kansas Adult Authority and the state Building Commission to offer in place of three of former Gov. Robert Bennett's appointees—J.C. Tillotson, John Harrelson and Benjamin Blair. He said he objects to Harrelson's being on the building agency, because he is a lobbyist for the Associated General Contractors of Kansas.

Popcorn: it's not all the same

By ANNA BARTON
Collegian Reporter

The sound of popping corn is not unusual to the ears of college students, but most students don't realize that not all popcorn is the same.

A K-State professor has been interbreeding popcorn for many years trying to improve its quality. Elmer Heyne, professor of agronomy, breeds and sells popcorn hybrids in the Manhattan area.

Although working with grain is his job, his experiments with popcorn hybrids are only a hobby, he said.

"It's been a life-long interest so it's hard to give reasons why I do it," Heyne said. "I can remember experimenting with corn as a kid growing up in Iowa."

Heyne, who works with his brother on the popcorn hybrids, said their major objective in breeding is quality.

Heyne is trying to improve the popcorn by differing the amounts of moisture inside the kernels and experimenting with the absence of hulls.

"We use a breeding procedure called recurrent selection," he said.

This procedure deals with the interbredding of selected plants to make genetic recombination possible.

The process of interbreeding is no different than any other corn breeding, he said.

"We come up with small kernels with almost no hulls—the part that gets stuck in your teeth—and no hard centers," Heyne said. "We don't think they (the hulls and hard centers) can ever be completely eliminated."

New charges filed against nuclear power protestors

BURLINGTON (AP)—The Coffey County attorney has replaced criminal trespassing charges against five nuclear power protestors with three other misdemeanor charges.

County Attorney Phil Fromme dropped trespassing charges last week against the five arrested during an anti-nuclear demonstration in front of a train carrying a nuclear reactor vessel to Burlington in January.

Fromme then filed new charges against Jeanne Green, Salina; Leslie Davis, Topeka; Beverly Couch, Kansas City; Christopher Mechem, Lawrence, and Bill Brow, Lawrence.

The new charges include temporary deprivation of property, a Class A misdemeanor; failure to walk on a roadway in a proper manner, a Class C misdemeanor, and failure to obey a police officer, a Class C misdemeanor.

If the demonstrators are convicted on all three charges they face a maximum $4,000 fine, 19 months in jail or both.

Fromme gave no reason for dropping the trespassing charges, but Ira Hawver, attorney for the defendants, said the charges were dropped because "the county attorney did not feel that he had enough law supporting him.

3Ms: men, money and material necessary for winning campaign

By CHRIS MCKEE
Staff Writer

What does it take to win a gubernatorial campaign?

Sister Jeanne McKenna, who campaigend for Gov. John Carlin during his recent bid for governor, explained her views on the subject to a political science class Tuesday.

"Perhaps a gubernatorial campaign is something of a civil war in one sense," McKennna said. McKenna is currently administrative assistant for appointments for Carlin.

McKenna said the campaign reminded her of a history course on the Civil War.

"The three Ms—men, money and materials—are necessary to win," she said.

Volunteer manpower, posters, brochures, and plenty of radio and TV advertising are all part of a successful campaign she said.

"Money—we didn't have very much of it. The experts said there was no way we could win, becasue we didn't have the money.

McKenna explained that the public relations firm that handled Carlin's campaign played an important part in his bid for election.

"I was not surprised elction night. In fact, one of the hardest things for me, working very closely with the campaign, was to cheer up the troops. As we went from place to place they had read and believed the polls and they were all moping around.

"Actually, when I read unfavorable polls it has sort of the opposite effect on me," she said. "I decide I'm not going to believe that poll and I can make that poll wrong."

McKenna, who is on leave from Marymount College in Salina where she is a professor of history and political science, said she has "always" been interested in politics.

"When most kids were probably reading the funny papers, I was reading the political pages. That kind of news interested me at a fairly young age."

McKenna said she got involved in the George McGovern presidential campaign in 1972. "Even though that campaign was a national disaster in terms of a landslide for President Nixon, it wasn't that way where I worked.

"It occurred to me that if you could get enough people working, you really could have some influence." She said McGovern's campaign was successful in Saline County.

"In politics, once you get a reputation for really getting with something, staying with it andd seeing it through, then you're going to get asked to do other things."

'If you think you're old, then you will act old'

By MICHAEL REAM
Staff Writer

Aging can be a very lonely part of life. It is misunderstood and avoided by those of us who don't have to deal with it everyday.

But someday, we will be the elderly.

"It's very easy for someone to look at an aging person and say I don't want to be like that," said Linda Stevens, director of nurses at College Hill Skilled Nursing Center.

We are a "youth oriented society," David Reyes, administrator at Wharton Manor, said.

"Youth don't feel bad at all about going in and taking a job from an older person," he said. "Anymore, it's harder for an older person to get a job than it is for a youth."

When older persons retire or are mandatorily retired, one of the worst enemies they have is inactivity, Reyes said.

"It"s very important to keep the older person active," Nita, Hunt, administrator at College Hill, said. "Once older people become inactive, they have a tendency to withdraw from social aspects."

TO PREPARE for aging, many misconceptions and myths about aging people need to be erased. These myths separate the elderly from the rest of society.

Most people believe that old persons become physically weakened, and just sit around home and watch television. It's also assumed that most older people will live in institutions, needing total care.

Physical strength does decline in old age, Richard Vicker, professor in education, said, but not to the point where most elderly persons can't do some types of athletc activity.

Actually only 5 percent of the population over 65 are institutionalized, Vicker said.

Elderly persons believe what they are told about becoming old. They believe what their capacities are supposed to be. If they believe they have limitations, they may never test themselves to discover their real limitations, said William Laaser, Veteran's Administration mental health physician.

"If you think you're old, then you will act old," he said.

"What you believe about aging can subconsciously cause you to be the way ou think you're supposed to be," he said.

NEGATIVE ATTITUDES about aging and limitations of aging start while very young, Vicker said. Most children begin to form ideas about aging when they are 6 years old. By the age of 12 or 13, their attitudes about getting old—mostly negative—are settled.

Tests show aging courses don't really affect college students' attitudes about aging. Factual information doesn't alter negative attitudes, he said.

Vicker said it is important for schools to help children develop objective appraisals of aging. This should start as early as grade school if positive attitudes are to be settled in children's minds, he said.

Many aging myths relate a decline the appetite for sexual activity in the elderly, Vicker said. It actually doesn't decline, he said.

He said most people past age 65 continue to have both interest in and the capactiy for sexual relations. They don't "lose it" as many people believe.

Even though women experience menopause, it doesn't mean they must lose their sexual appetites, Laaser said.

"The woman can stop having sexual relations only because she comes to believe 'I can't reproduce anymore, what's the use,'" he said.

This can cause her spouse to feel like he must re-prove his masculinity. He may experience rejection from his wife and begin to look elsewhere for satisfaction. He must prove to himself that he is still a man, that he can still "make it," Laaser said.

Laaser said the male does go through a menopause. This occurs when the hormone system slows down, but it doesn't quit as it does in women.

REYES SAID most older persons feel uncomfortable talking about sex.

"I feel that somehow in their value system it's still not the right kind of thing to talk about," Reyes said.

When an elderly person dates a younger person "they would be going out of their peer group and they would have to answer to their peer group," which can make dating a younger person difficult, he said.

Reyes said older persons may feel out of place, that they "have to compete in their (youth's) world, too, when really they should not have any inhibitions about that kind of dating situation."

The key to understanding older people is to "approach each (older) person as an individual," said Mark Intermill, ombudsman for the Area Agency on Aging. "Every (older) person has his own abilities and inabilities," he said.

"Take (older) people for what they are instead of having preconceived ideas of what their lives should be like," he said.

Shop Quik runs away with intramural title

Shop Quik blew away Welcome to Your Nightmare 59-37 last night to win its second straight All-University intramural basketball championship.

Shop Quik used its fast break and inside game as the two main weapons in beating Nightmare.

Jackie Robinson and Rick Weninger led Shop Quik with 14 points apiece. Les Washington had 13 while Mark Lutz and Steve Morgan added eight points each.

THE BALANCED Shop Quik attack overcame an offensive show by Nightmare's Steve DeChant, who had 26 of his team's 37 points on 11 field goals and four free throws. Nightmare's next-highest scorer had four points.

Shop Quik all but won the game in the first half as Robinson scored eight points and Lutz, Weninger and Washington had six apiece to build a 30-13 lead.

Skunked!

I had hoped to return from spring break with glorious stories of my successful fishing over vacation. I went fishing four of the nine days of vacation and came up with a big goose egg. I didn't catch a single fish. In the fishing world, this is known as getting skunked. And, it is a disgrace in the eyes of most serious anglers.

I am a serious angler, and I certainly felt disgraced. But really, the vacation was not a total loss.

While I was out at Tuttle Creek, Rocky Ford, a private pond and the Smoky Hill River, I had a lot of time to philosophize on the attributes of getting skunked. There are few.

One of the good things is that the skunkee doesn't have to worry about cleaning the catch. Cleaning fish is one of the most unpopular tasks in the world. If you don't believe me, ask my wife. She knows.

FISH have a definite odor about them. Since I didn't catch any, I didn't smell like fish—another point about the vacation which made by wife happy.

I had a good deal of time to think about promises made, but not kept. I promised the sports editor a column on how to catch fish at this time of year. But, since I didn't catch any, I don't feel qualified right now. When I start catching them again, I'll write columns on how I did it.

I promised my uncle several meals of fish. He loves fish, and I knew the thought of some juicy crappie or trout would make his salivary glands secrete.

I really hate disappointing my uncle. But, that's all part of being skunked.

Finally, I had a chance to get outdoors, I really love getting out of the house or the newsroom. This was the best aspect of my fishing venture.

HOWEVER, for those of you who spent spring break in Colorado or at Padre, the weather here was pretty miserable. Being outdoors and not catching any fish was a pretty crummy experience.

This is why getting skunked is a disgrace. Here is this fellow who professes to know about fishing and he goes out and disappoints his uncle, gets drunk, makes shabby excuses about not wishing to clean fish, and just makes an all-around fool of himself.

One would think such a fellow has learned his lesson. But, not me. I'm going fishing Saturday.

Hays crushes 'Cats 3-2, 11-0

The K-State women's softball team opened its season Tuesday afternoon by losing both games of a doubleheader to Fort Hays State University in Hays.

In the hard-fought first game which went one extra inning, Hays had five hits to win 3-2. Hays' winning pitcher was Jana Coitz, while Kay Beatty was the losing pitcher.

Beatty had a double in the fifth inning and Kathy Leonard went two for four to lead the K-State batting. The Wildcats had seven hits.

In the second game, Hays crushed K-State 11-0.

"I was disappointed in the way the second game went," Coach Mary Phyl Dwight said. "We had too many errors (five)."

K-State managed only two hits for losing pitcher Tammi Larsen, who went the distance.

The 'Cats are now 0-2 and will play Thursday in the 24-team Oklahoma Invitational in Norman.

Driver 'parks' car in the wrong garage

A Manhattan resident "parked" his car a little prematurely, and in the wrong garage, Monday night.

William Schroeder, 30, apparently lost control of his car when the accelerator stuck, and drove the vehicle through the door and side of a garage at 418 N. 5th Street, according to the Riley County Police Department.

Damage to the car and the garage was extensive, but no charges were filed.

Lack of adequate space

Funds sought to replace animal research barn

By KRISTI WALTER
Collegian Reporter

A request for $265,500 has been presented to the Kansas Legislature to replace the Animal Resource Cattle Barn that burned in late January.

The major reason for requesting funding as stated in the proposal was due to the lack of adequate space for animal research.

"The estimated value of loss at the site of the fire was $218,000," said Gene Cross, vice president for University Facilities.

The actual cost of replacing the building will be $204,947, according to James Cook, director of animal research for veterinary medicine.

Included in the $265,500 is $60,553 to replace livestock, feed and equipment, to have the area cleaned and to pay the architecture fees.

"We are in no way trying to duplicate the classic barn we had," Cook said. "We want a building that will meet our needs in modern thinking."

THE PROPOSED BARN, which would be located across from the original barn, will house 8,800 square feet while the old barn had 8,736 square feet. The destroyed barn had 720 square feet of loafing shed while the new building will have 520 square feet, Cook said.

The proposed barn wil be 220 feet long and closed at one end, Cook said. It will be partially open on the other end and one side will be entirely open.

This design is based on expert advice to minimize wind and snow accumulation, he said.

"We are going on the belief that when large animals get relief from getting wet, they will generate heat to stay warm," he said.

The barn also will have pens for small animals, Cook said. These pens will have sub-ceiling walls with electric heat.

Although the old barn had space heaters and enclosed rooms, the proposed building will be open, he said.

THE DESIGN of loafing sheds basically will be the same, Cook said, but the new ones will be "more primitive" with just a roof and a back wall.

The proposed barn also will have an advantage over the old barn in that it will be built out of fire resistant materials, he added.

The barn, if approved, will be used for research and teaching, he said.

"We are concerned with having animals for students to work with," he said.

Research will deal mainly with animal health, Cook said. Work in the past has dealt with animal defects and feed lot problems.

The proposed building will be adequate in meeting future research and teaching needs, Cook said.

University Facilities based the estimated cost of construction on a bid for $19 per square foot, Cook said. The replacement value on the livestock was based on today's market prices.

"This (the proposed cost for the barn) wouldn't build a barn like we had," Cook said. "This is a low cost way to meet our needs. The old type barn is quite a bit more expensive."

"We won't exactly replace the equipment we had," he said. "It costs more now but we do have plans to replace the necessary tack equipment.

Peace treaty wins support from Knesset

JERUSALEM (AP)—The Israeli Parliament overwhelmingly approved an historic peace treaty with Egypt early Thursday, ending a state of war that had existed since Israel's birth three decades ago.

Before the vote, Saudi Arabian and Iraqi newspapers called for all-out war against Israel, and thousands of Palestinians in Abu Dhabi demonstrated against the treaty.

The vote in the 120-member Knesset came just after 4 a.m., following more than 28 hours of debate that started Tuesday.

When the call was made for a vote on approval of the treaty, there was a show of hands to indicate overwhelming approval. Parliament clerks then counted the hands for an exact total.

They came up with 95-18, with seven members either present and not voting or abstaining.

During the debate, Prime Minister Menachem Begin again asked Egyptian President Anwar Sadat to join him in signing the accord in Cairo and Jerusalem.

Meanwhile, Saudi Arabian and Iraqi newspapers called for allout war against Israel.

THE ARAB editorial protest came as Israel's 120-member parliament appeared certain to approve the treaty by a 3-1 majority, paving the way for signing in Washington on Monday. Endorsement by the parliament, or Knesset, was expected by Thursday.

Prime Minister Menachem Begin again asked Egyptian President Anwar Sadat to join him in signing the accord in Cairo and Jerusalem. Egyptian officials had no immediate comment.

The Saudi Arabian and Iraqi press, which reflect government thinking, lashed out at the Egyptian-Israeli treaty and called for war against Israel to regain Jerusalem and occupied Arab lands.

The outbursts followed Begin's statement on Tuesday that Israel never would withdraw to its pre-1967 borders or allow establishment of a Palestinian state.

Oil-rich Saudi Arabia leads the pro-Western moderate front in the Middle East and the Saudis have pumped healthy amounts of financial aid into the impoverished Egyptian economy. Iraq has been traditionally hawkish against Israel.

U.S. National Security Advisor Zbigniew Brzezinski recently returned from a visit to Saudi Arabia where he tried without success to persuade leaders to support the Egypt-Israeli accord.

A front-page editorial in Al Jezira, a daily Saudi newspaper, said Palestinians should fight "until they turn the occupied lands into a blazing inferno for the enemy."

ANOTHER Saudi paper, Al Riyadh, asked why "anybody should want to sign a treaty with Israel after what Begin said".

In radical Iraq, the daily Al Thawra of the ruling Socialist Baath Party predicted war and said: "The Arab masses must change any war that Israel launched from a limited one, as Israel would like, to a liberation war."

Begin planned to leave for the United States Friday to join President Carter and Sadat for the signing.

Foreign Minister Moshe Dayan was to fly to Washington on Thursday for talks with Egyptian officials wrapping up the sale of Egyptian oil to Isreal.

A meeting of international 'agra-minds'

Farmers swap small-scale skills on large scale

By STANTON JANSSEN
Collegian Reporter

K-State will become a giant swap shop Saturday.

This weekend American and foreign farmers will trade ideas and techniques on farming when methane generators, steam engines, a team of draft horses and a homemade tractor are part of the first of four free workshops on what is called "appropriate technology" for small international farmers.

"They (foreign students) have skills they use every day that we don't know anything about, and we have skills we use every day that they don't know anything about," said Allan Brettell, an adviser for the International Student Center and co-director of the workshops.

"In different parts of Africa, gas sells for about $2 a gallon," said Bill Dorsett, a Manhattan resident who also set up the workshops. "They've had an energy crisis in our terms for about a decade."

"The Indians and Chinese have been working with wood and biomass as energy sources for some time, and Brazil is one of the leading countries in the world in developing gasohol," he added.

"We think international input should be in this because we have some really educated people (on campus) oriented toward small farming technology," Dorsett said.

DORSETT said there are many American and foreign individuals and groups involved in developing appropriate technology, but there's never been an effort to organize them to work together. The public workshops, financed by a grant from the National Association for Foreign Student Affairs, are planned to change that.

Dorsett defined appropiate technology as that which leads to self-sufficiency, uses local materials and expertise, is easily maintained, and leads to an agriculture which doesn't deplete the land.

"Our grant is a one-shot thing, but we're hoping to trigger interest in continuing this sort of thing (exchanging ideas)," Brettell said.

Saturday's workshop on Small Farm Mechanization and Energy will feature two speakers. Robert Miller, chairman of the energy committee of the Kansas House, will speak on small-scale energy systems. Roger Blobaum, with the Nebraska Center for Rural Affairs will give a presentation on his work with the Small Farms Energy Project in that state. The speeches will begin at 9 a.m. in Williams Auditorium.

They will also be a panel discussion on the "Economies and Social Effects of Decentralized Energy Systems."

THE EXHIBITS, which include solar collectors, a team of draft horses and a tractor built from spare parts, will be shown in Umberger Hall, Weber Hall and the International Student Center.

Three more workshops are planned.

A workshop titled Low Capital and Small Mixed Farming will address aqua-culture, bio-control of agricultural pests and organic farming, on March 31.

Iran: Kurdish rebels beseige capitol of northwestern province fighting for a separate state; 'We want our freedom now'

SANANDAJ, Iran (AP)—Revolutionary leader Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini faced one of the toughest challenges to his Islamic state Wednesday as Kurdish rebels tightened their hold on this provincial capital and threatened the military barracks after four days of bloody fighting.

Rebel forces tried repeatedly to overrun the barracks but were turned back when the government put two tanks into the battle.

Tuesday night's shaky stand-down vanished Wednesday morning as Kurdish rebels wearing cartridge belts across their chests dodged from doorway to doorway toward the garrison. Government bullets cracked back at them down the tree-lined streets.

Boys in their teens and grayhaired men helped distribute arms and ammunition and set up barriers near the beleaguered barracks.

TERRIFIED CIVILIANS huddled in doorways and ambulances and private cars took a stream of dead and wounded to the city's two hospitals. Many victims were taken to private homes for lack of hospital space. At least one ambulance driver was shot in the head.

Appeals for blood donors went out over the local radio station, which the Kurds control, and from sound trucks.

The government admitted more than 100 people were dead and several hundred wounded. Independent sources here claim at least 200 had died.

The conflict appears to have been sparked by sectarian rivalry between the Kurds of the Sunni Moslem sect and the dominant Shiite Moslems who control Iran's new government.

Fighting erupted Sunday over the army's reluctance to issue arms and ammunition to Kurds. The Kurds ousted the government's local revolutionary committee and installed one of their own shortly after the fighting started.

KHOMEINI APPEALED for an end to the fighting and sent his closest aide, Ayatollah Mahmoud Taleghani, head of Tehran's Shiite Moslems, to Kurdistan in northwestern Iran to try to arrange a truce.

Most of Sanandaj, 250 miles west of Tehran, was under the control of the rebels who received tons of food and ammunition from nearby Kurdish towns and villages.

The government said the armed forces commander, Gen. Vali Ullah Gharani, and Interior Minister Seyyed Ahmad Sadr-Haj Seyyed Javadi flew to Kurdistan to try to stop the rebellion from spreading. There are about 4 million Kurds in western Iran.

The Kurds who for centuries have been dreaming of a separate state, have been pressing the Tehran government for autonomy to retain their cultural identity. Townspeople stopped reporters covering the action and told them: "We want autonomy. We want our freedom now."

Iranian official scoffs at treaty

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Iranian revolutionary regime's chief spokesman in the United States said Wednesday that an Israeli-Egyptian treaty "is not going to accomplish much" and should not disrupt shipment of oil to the U.S. market.

Shariar Rouhani, who has been Iran's chief official representative here since Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini came to power, said Iran would take into account "any treaty which jeopardizes our Palestininan brothers."

However, he said, "This treaty is not going to accomplish much anyway, so it is not going to be important."

Yasser Arafat, leader of the Palestine Liberation Organization, has said he will call for an embargo of Middle Eastern oil shipments to the United States because of its role in arranging the treaty.

But Rouhani told reporters at a news conference that resumption of Iranian oil shipments—suspended by strikes and the revolution—"entirely depends on American intentions and American friendship" toward Iran.

Rouhani blamed recent protests by Iranian women against Khomeini's strict Islamic rules of dress and conduct on interference by foreigners—specifically American feminist Kate Millett, who was expelled from Iran for her activities. "This is a chauvinist, imperialist attitude that we cannot tolerate," Rouhani said.

Friday is final day for dropping classes

Do you want to drop a course you can't handle or don't need?

Friday is the last day to drop a course, for any reason, without receiving a transcript grade of withdraw passing (WP) or withdraw failing (WF) grade, Don Foster, director of records, said.

Students must use the drop-add form from his adviser to drop a course. Students in the College of Arts and Sciences should turn their completed forms into the records office in the basement of Farrell Library. All other students will turn forms into their respective dean's office, Foster said.

The records office in the basement of the library will close at 4:45 p.m. Friday, he said.

If a student receives a WF it is figured into his grade-point average as an "F" although a WP will have no effect, Foster said.

Each student was sent a copy of his class schedule on March 14, he said, and it should be checked for errors, he said.

To correct any errors, students in engineering or education must contact the engineering and education dean's offices. All other students should report to the basement of the library with copies of all drop-adds not completed.

Students who did not receive a copy of their schedule may check their schedules for accuracy in the basement of the library, Foster said.

Copies of the summer and fall 1979 line schedules should be available by Wednesday, if paper can be obtained to print them, he said.

This fish got away—in a car

PALMER—Bob Lovgren, 65, loves fishing, especially for the big, yellow catfish of the streams and lakes in north central Kansas.

He also has a tall story to tell about the granddaddy of them all that got away.

That monster, he says, yanked him out of his boat and into the river. Not to be outdone by a fish, Lovgren followed his fishing line under water and found the catfish hiding inside a submerged car.

"I reached in to grab him, but he rolled the window up on my arm," Lovgren said, straight-faced.

Looking for bride number 23

LOS ANGELES—Glynn de Moss "Scotty" Wolfe, 70 years old and already listed by Guinness as the World's Most Married Man, says he's looking for bride No.23, and his Hollywood press agent will help him choose her.

After all, Wolfe says, she'll be marrying a star. Wolfe has been a minor celebrity for years as the number of his wives, and ex-wives, increased.

He is listed in the Guinness Book of World Records as making the greatest number of marriages in the monogamous world. His first marriage was in 1927. Many of his brides were teen-agers, and some of his wives have been recycled. He says his longest marriage lasted five years, the shortest 38 days. He claims to have 39 children.

General Services administrator quits

WASHINGTON—Jay Solomon resigned Wednesday as administrator of the scandal-marked General Services Administration, effective March 31. President Carter said he accepted it "with regret."

White House Press Secretary Jody Powell told reporters the selection of a new GSA chief "is very near" and could come later this week.

Solomon, who had talked about quitting before mid-year, became a focal point of controversy in January when he learned from a reporter that the White House had begun searching for a successor without his knowledge.

Political ballet sends pot bill to House

TOPEKA—With the help of a little legislative maneuvering, the House Judiciary Committee approved and sent to the House a bill Wednesday which would lessen the penalties for simple possession of marijuana.

The maneuvering came by amending the heart of a Senate bill which would have reduced the penalty for simple possession into another less controversial bill which has already passed the Senate and been sent to the House.

The parliamentary ballet was orchestrated by Rep. Mike Glover (D-Lawrence) who has gained notoriety during past years for different attempts at reforming the state's marijuana laws.

As it now goes to the House, the bill applies primarily to possession of one ounce or less of marijana and would establish the crime as a Class D misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of up to $100 with no jail sentence.

Nine-year-old killed; mother charged

GARDEN CITY—A Garden City mother was charged with first-degree murder Wednesday after her 9year-old son was shot to death at the family home as three siblings watched, authorities said.

Finney County Attorney Don Vsetecka said Elizabeth Jo Locklear was charged and bond was set at $100,000. She was to be sent to Larned State Hospital for a mental examination, he said.

"There really seems to be no reason (for the killing), and that's why I requested the mental evaluation," Vsetecka said. "We're still trying to sort it out."

Vsetecka said 9-year-old Lloyd Locklear Jr. was shot with a rifle about 4 p.m. Wednesday and a struggle followed in which the victim's father, Lloyd Locklear, wrestled the weapon from his wife. The bullet entered the child's left shoulder and exited through his back behind the right shoulder, the county attorney said. Only one shot was fired, he said.

The three other children escaped injury, Vsetecka said.

Weather

There's a 90 percent chance today's weather forecast will be wrong. True, this is a stunning admission, but our track record lately has been terrible. Showers and thunderstorms, possibly heavy at times, are likely through tonight (if we predict rain long enough, it's bound to happen). Highs today will be in the upper 50s to low 60s. There will be decreasing cloudiness Friday with highs in the upper 50s.

Opinions

Running from the issue

Suddenly everyone is talking about a constitutional convention.

So far, 28 states have approved resolutions asking Congress to call a convention to consider an amendment requiring a balanced federal budget. Petitions are needed from 34 states to mandate the calling of such a convention.

With two more states expected to do the same soon, Sen. Jason Boe, president of the National Conference of State Legislatures, could be right in predicting the needed states will have acted by this summer.

No amendment to the Constitution has ever been proposed for ratification through the convention method. Only the 21st amendment, to repeal prohibition, was ratified by submission to state conventions.

This lack of precedent, coupled with the lack of guidelines in the Constitution for such a convention, has raised questions on just how it would work.

Constitutional experts are afraid the amendments coming out of a convention could not be limited, leading to extensive tampering with the Constitution. (Even though any amendment coming out of a convention would face ratification in three-fourths of the state legislatures.)

To add to the confusion, if the present pace continues, the convention would fall during presidential primaries.

All this talk—and states' actions—has some politicians running scared.

Some have thrown their support to the balanced-budget amendment not because it merits passage but because they fear a constitutional convention. For example, House Minority Leader John Rhodes, after abandoning public opposition to the amendment, said he changed his mind because "it's better than having a constitutional convention."

A White House task force is now working at urging legislative leaders in remaining key states to defeat proposals calling for such a convention. President Carter wants to block a convention because he said it would upset the constitutional balance of the government.

With all this talk about the convention, the amendment behind its formation is often lost. The amendment calls for a balanced federal budget by outlawing deficit spending.

The effect and outcome of such of an amendment needs explaining but most people get caught up in the convention controversy instead.

There are arguments against the amendment. There are arguments against a constitutional convention. They must be kept separate.

Appreciate what you've got

In the midst of grueling college life, the drab of booking it again after spring break, feeling cooped up in a classroom when the snow has disappeared and the sun's rays pull you out to Tuttle, it's easy to put the harsh realities of poverty on the dusty shelves of our minds.

Sure, college life isn't extravagant, but it's generally safe from the worry of where our next meal will come from or where we can sleep at night.

Just think of all the extras we enjoy that less fortunate people never experience. What about the morning when you get out of bed (some people don't have a bed), and turn off your alarm clock (much less an alarm clock), right into the shower (when some go to the YMCA for a shower) and wash your hair with shampoo (instead of soap). Then you turn on your hair dryer (what a luxury!) and gaze through your wardrobe to decide what to wear (many don't have a wardrobe large enough to offer a choice).

HOW MANY of us would be in school if our parents weren't fortunate enough to keep us here? How many of us would have the drive to put ourselves through college?

We take our parents for granted. Do they really deserve to foot our bill through school? What if they couldn't afford to? Then we'd be in the same position as many who are struggling to get their degree.

I commend those who are paying their way—their education will be a treasure. They will know the pride of reaching a goal with toil and diligence.

A large portion of our college education is being paid for by people who never see this University. They put us through school with their hard-earned tax dollars, whether or not they can afford to put their own kids through school.

SURE, IT'S easy to say: "Well, if he'd get of his butt and go to work, he could have the things I have."

But how many of us would overcome the obstacles many people are faced with in trying to get ahead? What if the Good Lord had let us be born in a poor family?

I'm not knocking our good fortune, I only wish we didn't take it for granted and forget those who would love to have our problems.

We're damn lucky to be here and it's a crime if we don't acknowledge the fact.

Campus issues neglected

Editor,

I cannot understand why your paper continues to make an issue of the restoration of the president's office. If those who built this campus over the last 50 years were as nearsighted as many of your staff, including Julie Doll, there would not be many students on this campus today.

The restoration of the president's office was undertaken for the good of this university and the work will remain long after all of us, including the president, have left. Case closed.

Doll should have granted the "Golden Fleece Award" to the legislator in Topeka who admitted that all he does during legislative sessions is fear for the state. Must the state continue to pay this man's salary?

Your paper would better serve the needs of the University community if it spent some time investigating the relationship between KP&L (Kansas Power and Light) and the University, but that is very hard work. Did you ever try to get any information from KP&L?

To begin with, you might try to find out why KP&L was the source of information for the Kansas Legislature on the University's power needs.

Secondly, you might discuss the possiblity that the University may be closed next winter since it now ranks seventh or eighth on KP&L's emergency priority list, which would go to second or third should the University agree to produce less of its own power in the future.

It seems to me that those who tell us "together we will see it through," and "use energy wisely," have us (the University) over a barrel. No pun intended, and should you see one you must agree that it is not a very funny one.

Typecast Capt. Video, Al Hodge, dies at 66

NEW YORK (AP)—As the dashing, daring Captain Video, Al Hodge blasted his way through space and into the fantasies of millions of television viewers.

Then the show died in 1956, a year before the Russians launched Sputnik and began the space age for real. Hodge's acting career nearly died with it.

When the 66-year-old actor was discovered dead Monday in an east side hotel room, investigators found suitcases full of old fan letters and press clippings. A stack of actor's resumes, dated Feb. 18, 1976, read: "1962-Present: Inactive while engaged in other pursuits."

His body lay unclaimed in the morgue for several hours until authorities reached his relatives.

Like George Reeves, television's Superman, Al Hodge was typecast. He could never separate himself from the role that made his face familiar to the American public. Captain Video propelled his career—and ultimately consumed it.

"When I go after dramatic parts, they say my Captain Video identification would destroy character illusion," Hodge once said. "When I look for jobs to do commercials, they say: 'Whoever heard of Captain Video selling cigarettes?"

After the show was yanked from the air, few parts came his way.

He moved to California where he picked up small parts in "Alfred Hitchcock Presents," "Tightrope" and "Hawaiian Eye" before returning to the East Coast to work briefly as host of a short-lived educational program called "Space Explorers."

Secrets? Not here; Senate invites you in Student Senate is dusting off its welcome mat and putting it outside the K-State Union Big 8 Room.

Anyone associated with the University is invited to attend senate's weekly meetings beginning tonight, Senate Chairman Rich Macha said.

"It has always been our policy to allow people to sit in on our meetings," Macha said. Now there will also be a 30-minute period at the beginning of each meeting when visitors can speak without first contacting the chairman, he added.

A resolution to support students of the Strong Complex (Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile Halls) "in preserving the quality of their living situations" and approval of cabinet positions appointed by Student Body President Greg Musil are scheduled for senate's discussion.

Senate's meeting is scheduled for 7 p.m. today.

'Weekend' goes astray; destination is unknown

EDITOR'S NOTE: "Weekend" will be shown today at 3:30 p.m. in the Union Little Theater and at 7:30 p.m. in Forum Hall. Admission is $1.25.

By CAROL WRIGHT
Contributing Writer

FLASH: A FILM GONE ASTRAY IN THE COSMOS--"Weekend" is anything but the TV series "Battlestar Galactica." The plot plays about the universe until it tires, breathless, then quivers among the stars not knowing exactly where to land.

"Weekend" is a pun of poetic riddles ambiguious enough to tickle Shakespeare's mind and force him to gag on his quill pen.

This movie, written by Jean Luc-Godard with assistant director Claude Miller, could be a satire on class struggle. Certain scenes are similar to Parker and Hart's comic strip, "The Wizard of Id," but they need Merlin's touch.

The way Darwin's philosophy about evolution is exploited would make him croak and bury his head for 200 centuries like an ostrich in the Galopagos Islands.

Luc-Godard grabs the viewer's attention in the beginning by tricking him into believing the film is going to be gung-ho erotica.

It's all right to lead or lure the viewer along this path and allow him to wander. This particular scene of a couple discussing and elaborating on voyeurism and other sexual gratifications, however, just isn't atuned to the movie. (And I'm still wandering through the focal point of the film's message.)

A VARIETY OF characters, some real and some fictional, explore the mystery of human nature through a conglomeration of historic symbolisms. Just who's who is a challenge for the imagination. This direction works well at times. It's nice to figure puzzles, but not all day.

This movie runs close to two hours, and some episodes could have been cut from their stagnant ten or 12 minutes to a good, crisp four.

"Weekend" centers around a couple who are destined for a village called Oinville where the wife's mother lives. They want to assure they receive a perfect 50-50 split of her mother's will.

On their way, they ask directions and have little luck with answers. Some people they come into contact with climb straight out of fairy tales. Like the Girl in Forest who portrays Emily Bronte. This actress does an excellent job in her role of Little Bo Peep (or whatever).

IT'S TOO BAD there weren't more like her in the film. All the viewer needed at this point was Jack and the Beanstalk, Tom Thumb or the Pied Piper.

Generally, the movie has its ups and downs, unfortunately, more downs than ups. The stage movements of the actors are poor and awkward. Some pretty colorful gory scenes might turn off the viewer completely.

Some interesting points of the movie are the director's use of color to emphasize symbolic moments. Although the film's French, and there are English subtitles, the viewer gets a splash of sporadic entertainment from English narration at the climax.

Some episodes are similar to the hidden philosophy Woody Allen employs in his direction. Some images also are reminiscent of Andy Warhol's influence.

"Weekend" should have expanded upon Allen's dynamics and Warhol's images.

Junk food junkies, take heart! No more sneaking red-faced into the neighborhood Kentucky Fried Chicken restaurant! No more hiding behind a newspaper in the back of McDonald's! Junk food junkies, arise and be proud!

According to representatives of McDonald's, Pizza Hut and Kentucky Fried Chicken, their fast-food products are just as nutritious as comparable food eaten at home.

However, the three firms say government regulations are prohibiting them from "telling all" to counter the "junk food" image of their products.

In testimony before the Senate Nutrition Subcommittee Feb. 9, representatives of the three fast-food chains said their products are "very nutritious," and they would provide nutritional information to the public if the government did not threaten to intervene.

The companies objected to regulations of the Food and Drug Adminstration (FDA) which require disclosure of full nutritional ingredients on labels when nutritional claims are made. Although restaurants have generally been exempted from such rules, they have been unable to get clear guidelines from the FDA about the kinds of information they can provide.

JOHN MANN of Kentucky Fried Chicken and Norman Axelrad of McDonald's said they wanted to disclose nutritional information but were afraid doing so would trigger broad labeling requirements.

"Kentucky Fried Chicken is just as nutritious as Mom's," Mann said. "Three pieces of chicken, mashed potatoes and gravy, cole slaw and a roll provide 80 percent of the Recommended Daily Allowance (RDA) for protein."

"McDonald's menu satisfies (nutritional) requirements in three of the four basic food groups," Axelrad said. A quarter pounder with cheese, french fries and a chocolate shake provide 80 percent of the protein RDA, he said.

Pizza Hut provides the most protein of any of the meals, Gerald Aaron, spokesman for Pizza Hut, said.

Aaron cited an article from a May, 1975, issue of Consumer Reports, which said Pizza Hut's meals far exceeded the whole day's RDA for any age.

"This was clearly the best food if you consider that the pizza alone would provide a single meal's worth of protein for two persons," the article said.

THE FDA SAYS it opposes allowing the restaurants to disclose nutritional information because it believes the chains will use the information as advertising gimmicks.

The Attorney General's office has issued a warning about a company which is currently offering trip packages in Kansas. The Chicago-based company, Columbia Research Corporation, is being sought by the Attorney General's office for deceptive business practices. Anyone who is approached by this organization should contact either the Consumer Relations Board in the Union or the Attorney General's office.

Gasoline prices, as anyone who drives a car knows, are going up, up, up these days. Here are a few pointers which can help improve gas mileage:

After starting a cold engine, be ready to drive off at a moderate speed as soon as the engine is running smoothly. A car gets zero miles per gallon at idle, and driving off immediately warms the engine up more quickly.

Avoid fast starts and hard braking. Anticipating traffic conditions helps keep braking and acceleration to a minimum. On the highway, maintain steady, moderate speeds.

KEEP THE ENGINE in good tune. A misfiring spark plug or a clogged air filter can waste lots of fuel. Be sure tires are properly inflated, and use the air-conditioner as little as possible.

Don't use the trunk as a storage compartment; extra weight wastes fuel. A roof rack causes considerable wind resistance, so it is best left off when it's not in use.

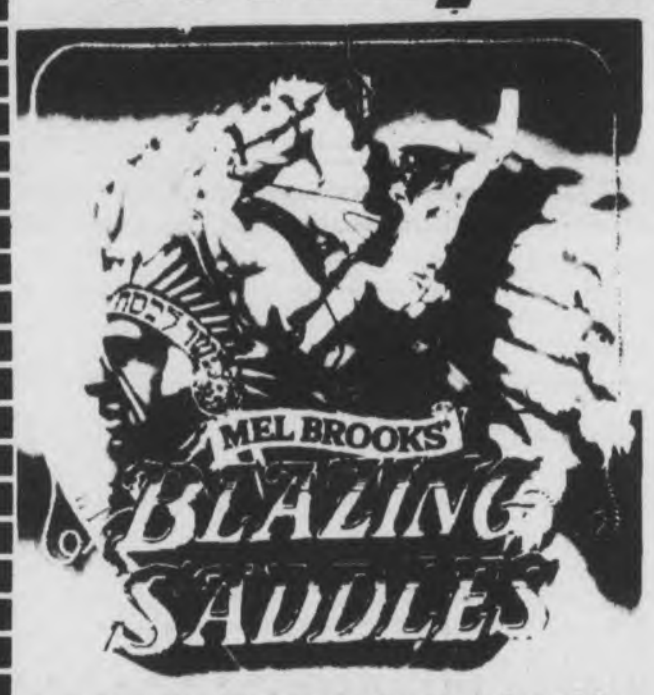
Circulators of a current form of chain letter claim to have contacts with God. The letter contains threats of disease, disaster and pestilence for those impious types who cross Him by trashing the correspondence. The consumer affairs office doubts God has truly taken to conning the faithful into unlawful correspondence. Yea, though I trash this chain letter, I will fear no evil for the law is on my side.

Painter to speak to art assembly

Jim Roche, contemporary American painter and sculptor, will speak to an art assembly at 8 p.m. tonight in Kedzie Auditorium.

Roche, professor of art at Florida State University, Tallahassee, has exhibited his works since earning his Master of Arts, and Master of Fine Arts degrees from the University of Dallas.

His first one-man show in 1974, was at the Whitney Museum of American Art in New York City.



Roche served on the Visual Arts Advisory Panel in 1977, which reviews and selects recipients of Individual Artist Fellowship Grants through the National Endowment for the Arts.

Throughout 1978, he worked on 13 paintings titled "The End Result of Constructivist Theory", and published two works of prose in audio form.

K-Staters have a smashing good time—sometimes

Fans' exuberance costly to Aggieville merchants

By JEFF MYRICK
Collegian Reporter

"I'm so happy we won I think I'll just break this window to show how proud I am of the 'Cats." Bam. Crash. Tinkle, tinkle. There goes another window for an Aggieville merchant to replace.

Vandalism in Aggieville isn't a big problem all the time, but it does have its seasons, according to Aggieville merchants and the police department.

"It's usually when we have a large influx of students at the first of the year, at the end of the big games, especially football games and we have a problem (with vandalism) late in April and in May when school is coming to a close," Inspector Dana Kyle of the Riley County Police Department (RCPD) said.

"We don't have much trouble at all during the winter because the people go straight to the bars and then straight back to their cars and on home," Kyle said.

"As far as outright vandalism in Aggieville, you can count on some game days some windows will get broken, some cars will get vandalized and there will be some burning in the street, but that is very rare. We'll see some large crowds on the weekends in Aggieville, too, normally fairly well-mannered and not distruptive, but there are times that we do have property damage," Kyle said.

THE POLICE DEPARTMENT schedules its force to handle the big crowds after games, as well as their normal patrol, to insure the merchants that they'll have windows in their businesses the next day, he said.

"We have one officer assigned on the weekends to walk Aggieville and, as the need arises, we will assign an individual out of a car and take them down to Aggieville to walk, so occasionally we'll have a two-man patrol down there. During the big games, obviously, we put six, eight or sometimes 10 people down there," Kyle said.

Other than window breaking, the only type of vandalism that occurs is inside the bars, and it is just minimal damage compared with what goes on outside. Irate pinball and foosball players take out their frustrations on the walls and fixtures around the machines and occasionally there will be an increase in glassware breakage.

"I've seen people playing pinball completely lose it and start kicking the wall next to the machine when they lose. As long as they don't kick a hole in the wall, I'll just ask them to calm down, but if they do manage to bust through the paneling, I'll take their name and address down and make them pay for it," Jeff Filby, a doorman at Brother's Tavern, said.

"We also lose a lot of glassware some nights when it gets wild and people can't seem to hold onto their beer, but, as long as I don't think it's on purpose, I'll just make sure it gets cleaned up. For the most part, we lose more steins by theft than breakage," Filby said.

ACCORDING TO MAX Strunk, manager of Brother's Tavern, "The main thing with vandalism is that it is done by only a very small group of people that come in and we can pretty well keep those people out of the bar."

"Students are pretty good about not tearing things up. They don't want to see the place tore up any more than we do," Steve Dunaway, manager of Kites, said.

"We seldon get reports from inside the bars concerning vandalism,, but sometimes they'll contact us if there is an individual that did something maliciously and there is a large amount of damage and there appears to continue to be a problem," Kyle of the RCPD, said.

Hearse driver delivers quickly; family upset over methods

KANSAS CITY (AP)—A funeral procession that allegedly turned into a high-speed chase to the cemetery has prompted an unusual lawsuit against a Kansas City, Kan., funeral home.

The five children of Mrs. Nellie Gearhart, 80, who died Oct. 24, 1978, have filed suit against Simmons Funeral Home, charging that delivery of her body to a cemetery plot in Lamar, Mo., was something less than orthodox.

The family alleges that on the Oct. 25 trip from Kansas City to Lamar, a distance of about 130 miles, the unnamed driver:

—Drove in an "unconscionable manner," weaving, passing and once even hitting a culvert, causing the casket to be bounced around;

—"Outdistanced members of the family," then "drove to a roadside eating place to have a sandwich while parking the hearse unattended outside."

—Resumed the journey at the family's insistence, but had to be "forced" by them to stop along the highway after he picked up speed and drove down the median strip.

Once at the cemetery, the family was afraid to open the casket for fear of seeing that (their) mother had "sustained damage," the petition added.

The suit asks more than $10,000 each for actual and punitive damages and demands a jury trial.

Secretary gets employee award

For Mildred Moore, Cowley County extension secretary, 25 years as a dedicated employee may have seemed insignificant. But to her employers, it was worthy of recognition.

Moore was named Classified Employee of the Year Tuesday afternoon at the Classified Employee Recognition Program. She was one of six finalists considered for the award.

Moore began working at the Cowley County Extension Office in 1953 as a temporary employee. Today, she is the head secretary, telephone and office receptionist and head bookkeeper.

Nina Donohue, one of her employers, nominated her for the award because she knew that Moore was completing her 25 years of work and she thought that Moore deserved recognition.

Gov. John Carlin gave the address and Board of Regents member John Conard also spoke.

Besides recognizing the finalists and semi-finalists, approximately 735 other employees were recognized.

TEACHERS WANTED

Positions are available this spring and fall for college seniors and graduate students with degrees in Math, Physics, Chemistry, and Engineering (U.S. citizenship, under the age of 28) to teach college and graduate level courses at The Navy's Nuclear Power School in Orlando, Florida. Women regents appointed to post

TOPEKA (AP)—Gov. John Carlin's two appointees to the Kansas Board of Regents were confirmed Wednesday without opposition, although four Republican senators refused to vote.

Mrs. Margaret Glades of Yates Center and Mrs. Sandra McMullen of Hutchinson were confirmed to the regents' posts on a vote of 35-0.

Former House Democratic Majority Leader Patrick Hurley of Leavenworth also was confirmed Wednesday as secretary of the state Department of Administration and as a member of the Pooled Money Investment Board.

Confirmation of the two women regents puts to a final rest the controversy surrounding their appointments, after Carlin refused to accept the appointees of former Gov. Robert Bennett.

Senate President Ross Doyen, and Sens. Charlie Angell of Plains, Wes Sowers of Wichita and Wint Winter of Ottawa, refused to vote in apparent disgust over the defeat they suffered when one of Bennett's two appointees, Walter Hiersteiner of Fairway, was rejected by the Senate.

Three vacancies were created on the Board of Regents in January. Bennett announced he was reappointing Hiersteiner and former state Sen. Glee Smith of Larned to second terms. Bennett said he would leave the third post open for Carlin to fill after Carlin was sworn as the new governor.

Carlin announced he opposed the two Bennett appointees, leading to a bitter Senate battle over confirmation of the two. Smith was confirmed, but Hiersteiner became the first sitting regent to be rejected for a second term.

'Mental lapse' causes 'Cats first season loss

After shutting out Minnesota-Morris 9-0 in the first game of a doubleheader Wednesday afternoon, the K-State baseball team's 12-game winning streak came to an end as they lost to the Cougars, 3-2 in the second game.

At the end of the regulation seven innings at Frank Myers Field the second game was tied 2-2, but Cougar shortstop Al Kreb opened the ninth inning with a what proved to be the winning run. Kreb went three for four at the plate during the second game.

Sports

The 'Cats had a chance to rally in the bottom of the ninth, but with the bases loaded, Cougar pitcher Bob Behren struck out K-State's Mark Nordyke.

K-State Coach Dave Baker attributed his team's loss to a "mental lapse by his players" as well as a good effort by the Cougars.

"We didn't put any string of hits together. This was the worst we'd run the bases all year," Baker said. The Wildcats had only three hits while their opponents accumulated 11.

BAKER SAID K-State pitcher Steve Preston, who pitched all but the last inning of the game "did a super job."

"He gave up a couple home runs but that didn't hurt us. We just didn't score," he said.

K-State was a different ball club in the first game, dominating the hitting 5-2. A six-run fourth inning put the 'Cats way out ahead.

Pitching the entire game, Mike Laughlin, the only veteran pitcher on the K-State roster, the walked only two and struck out three.

K-State's Mike Baker led the field in the first game with a pair of stolen bases and two runs batted in while Nordyke connected on two of three times at the plate and rounded the bases twice.

K-State will meet Oral Roberts University today in a doubleheader and a single game Friday in Tulsa, Okla. before taking on Missouri Southern Saturday.

The 'Cats will return home for a doubleheader against Benedictine College Wednesday.

'Cats among national powers in Oklahoma softball tourney

Some of the best collegiate softball teams in the nation will be potential Wildcat opponents as the Oklahoma Invitational begins in Norman today.

The K-State softball team will meet Northwestern at 2:30 p.m. today. Northwestern finished last season with a 7-13 record.

Among the powerful teams in the tourney will be Minnesota (No. 3-ranked last year) and Texas Women's University (No. 4 last year).

"We will be seeing a variety of good teams from different parts of the country," Coach Mary Phyl Dwight said. "For Kansas State, it's a chance for some really good competition."

The 'Cats second-round opponent will be Southwest Missouri State (31-7 last year) at 12:30 p.m. Friday. K-State will complete pool play at 6:30 p.m. Friday against Texas A&M (27-6) last fall).

THE TOP two teams from each of the six pools will advance to single elimination championship brackets beginning at 9 a.m. Saturday.

The Wildcats, who have an 0-2 record after dropping a doubleheader to Fort Hays State Tuesday, will be "somewhat at a disadvantage in that most of the other teams have already played several games," Dwight said.

Orta home run beats Royals in 11th

SARASOTA, Fla. (AP)—Jorge Orta blasted his third home run of the spring in the 11th inning Wednesday to break a tie and give the Chicago White Sox a 7-5 victory over the Kansas City Royals.

Harry Chappas, whose bunt single had been instrumental in a two-run ninth by which the White Sox tied the score, opened the 11th with his second single and scored on Orta's homer.

Home runs accounted for three earlier Chicago runs, a solo blast by Rusty Torres in the second inning and a two-run shot in the fifth by Chet Lemon.

Kansas City scored all five of its runs in the fifth against Mike Proly and Pablo Torrealba when manager-second baseman Don Kessinger was charged with an error that made the final run unearned.

Indiana captures NIT title on last-second 20-footer

NEW YORK (AP)—Butch Carter's 20-foot jump shot with six seconds to go followed some unusual Indiana strategy and lifted the underdog Hoosiers to a 53-52 victory over Purdue last night in the National Invitation Tournament championship game.

Carter's dramatic shot from the top of the key came after Indiana's coach, Bobby Knight, had called three consecutive time outs with 16 seconds remaining.

Then Indiana brought the ball into the forecourt and Carter became the hero.

Earlier it looked like he would be the goat.

With 4:30 to play and Indiana trailing 52-51, Knight's patient Hoosiers held the ball for 3 minutes, 20 seconds, then Carter threw an errant pass which was intercepted by Mike Scearce.

Purdue tried to kill the remaining time, but Carter fouled the Boilermakers' 7-1, 240-pound center Joe Barry Carroll with 22 seconds left.

But Carroll, the game's high scorer with 14 points, missed for the fifth time in seven free throw attempts.

Excited fan's celebration reinjures Bird's left thumb

NEW YORK (AP)—Larry Bird, Indiana State's All-America basketball whiz, disclosed Tuesday that an excited fan grabbed and twisted his ailing left thumb following last Saturday's regional victory over Arkansas.

"I dropped him with a punch," the 6-9 forward admitted.

Bird had the thumb wrapped in an ace bandage when he flew into New York to accept a coaches' award as the college basketball player of the year.

"It had got to a point it didn't bother me," he told a press conference, referring to a hairline fracture suffered prior to the playoffs. "Now it has started hurting again. I can still handle the ball and shoot. I intend to stick it out."

The injury becomes a factor because Bird is spearhead of the unbeaten Sycamores from Terre Haute, Ind., (32-0) who meet DePaul in Saturday's semifinals of the NCAA championships in Salt Lake City. The other game involves Michigan State and Penn, with the survivors clashing for the collegiate title Monday night.

"As we were leaving the floor, this fan grabbed my left hand and started twisting it," Bird explained. That's when he belted the offender, he said, adding: "He was just celebrating—I can't be too mad at him."

THE STRAPPING, blond-haired senior from French Lick, Ind., was loose and talkative after accepting the annual Eastman Award based on a poll of the National Association of Basketball Coaches.

"I am happy to get it" he said. "I want to thank everybody. I want to thank all my teammates. It takes all of them—not just me—to make this team go."

Bird, rated one of the most complete basketball players to come out of college ranks, discarded his self-imposed gag rule for the occasion, saying to the large gathering of news, radio and TV men:

"I am not uncomfortable around the press. Everybody is under a great deal of pressure, not just me. People have written things about me I didn't like. They were always pestering members of my family.

"Besides, we are not a one-man team. There are five guys on the floor."

BIRD was asked if some of the pressure possibly stemmed from the fact that he is one of the most publicized athletes of the year, a talent who could draw the highest salary ever paid in the National Basketball Association—perhaps as much as $5 million. He has been drafted by the Boston Celtics.

"No, I have put that in the back of my mind," he replied. "Right now, I am interested in one thing—helping Indiana State win the NCAA championship.

Bird said the Celtics realized the importance of the NCAA playoffs and had not pestered him about the terms of a pro contract.

Bird was asked what he would do if the Celtics failed to meet his terms.

"I will go to the team with the most money," he replied, straight-faced.

Happy Birthday

Feminist aim: 3 in 3½; extension starts today

WASHINGTON (AP)—Thursday is the day the Equal Rights Amendment would have been buried if Congress had not intervened to give supporters of the controversial proposal another 3½ years to win ratification.

The ERA is one of the shortest and simplest amendments to the Constitution ever proposed by Congress, but it has become the most controversial since Prohibition.

The operative section of the ERA states "Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex."

Supporters say the ERA would outlaw legal discrimination against women, such as restrictions on property ownership, the right to credit and equal employment opportunity. Men backing the ERA say it would liberalize alimony and child custody law.

But opponents have contended the amendment would strip women of protections such as assurance of alimony and child support.

IT WAS SEVEN years ago, on March 22, 1972, when the Senate completed action on the ERA and sent it to the states for ratification, allowing seven years for 38 states to approve it.

The original seven years expires Thursday. At this time, 35 states have approved the ERA. Legislatures in five states have voted to rescind their approval.

The validity of that move is in question and the Justice Department has said it is up to Congress to decide.

Last fall, under pressure from feminists, Congress extended the deadline by 3½ years.

On the surface, the 3½-year extension looks like a reprieve for the ERA. But there appear to be more states trying to back out of their previous approval of the ERA than there are those eager to give their blessing to the amendment for the first time.

The ERA started out strong. Twenty-two states ratified it the first year and 30 had done so by the end of 1973. But the proposal bogged down as traditionalists counterattacked.

IN 1974 THREE states ratified, only one in 1975 and none in 1976.

The last state to ratify was Indiana on Jan. 18, 1977. Since then, the ERA has been stopped, its latest defeat in Arkansas last week.

Proposals for ratification also have been defeated this year in Arizona, Nevada, North Carolina and Virginia.

In addition, there is a question whether states can make their ratification of the ERA conditional on its being approved by the original deadline, as 30 states did. So even if the ERA is approved by three more states it may take years for the courts to resolve the issue.

Califano pleads for cost lid

KANSAS CITY, Mo. (AP)—Joseph Califano Jr. implored health care workers Wednesday to "understand and appreciate the need" for health cost containment legislation even if they won't fully support it.

The Department of Health, Education and Welfare secretary told an auditorium packed with more than 2,500 health care professionals that rising hospital costs are the "most serious inflation problem in the economy."

He added that more than a third of the hospitals in the country already keep costs below HEW's proposed 9.7 percent increase and "we think they all can meet that standard."

Califano said President Carter had suggested he make the trip to the Midwest to explain the administration's proposed legislation to control hospital costs. The legislation has been assailed by some hospital administrators and health care organizations who say government regulation itself is costly.

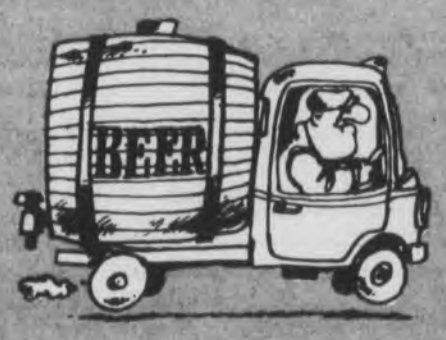
Talk of government regulation in the health care industry has occupied much of the three-day Midwest Health Congress in Kansas City this week. About 8,000 health care workers from Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska, Arkansas, Oklahoma and Wyoming are attending.

"We think health care cost containment legislation is the fairest way to deal with the problem that is raising absolute hell with the inflation rate," Califano said. "This is a prudent way to enhance the quality of medical care."

He said the proposed cost containment program "gives a chance for a voluntary program to work" by excusing from mandatory cost controls those hospitals where costs are rising less rapidly.

He added the 9.7 percent figure allows for increases in the cost of goods and services, population increases and the increase in services and production at hospitals.

Free hand needed in peanut probe



WASHINGTON (AP)—Senate Democratic Leader Robert Byrd asserted Wednesday there must be a written guarantee that Special Counsel Paul Curran will have a free hand to conduct the government's probe of President Carter's peanut business.

The West Virginia Democrat said the investigation must "leave no doubt...that justice has been done." Byrd said he was disappointed that Attorney General Griffin Bell chose to name Curran a special counsel rather than use legislation that authorizes appointment of a special prosecutor.

In raising similar questions Tuesday, seven Republican members of the Senate Judiciary Committee had urged Bell to use provisions of the newly enacted Ethics in Government Act to appoint a special prosecutor. They argued that designation of Curran only as a special counsel was inadequate.

Is there life after 'outlaw' school?

GEORGE'S, Grenada (AP)—David Baras of Port Jervis, N.Y., wants to be a doctor and thinks he is as qualified as any student in the United States.

But, because he is a student at an "outlaw" medical school, the St. George's University School of Medicine, Baras still does not know where he will take his hospital training next September.

Baras is one of some 500 Americans at the 2-year-old school on this Caribbean island, one of several "offshore" schools in the Caribbean catering to Americans rejected by U.S. medical schools.

Similar schools have opened recently on the nearby islands of Montserratt and Dominica and another has been operating for some years in the Dominican Republic. Best known of all is the Universidad Autonoma de Guadalajara in Mexico.

The schools lack U.S. accreditation, and the Association of American Medical Colleges and other American medical groups say the schools are "outlaw" organizations that take economic advantage of frustrated U.S. students.

THE ST. GEORGE'S school was founded in January 1977, the brainchild of Charles Modiga, a New York attorney.

The school has two campuses of about five acres each. One, with most of the administrative offices, occupies what was a resort hotel on a quiet bay. The other, about two miles away at a place called True Blue, includes dormitory facilities, two lecture halls, a small library and a new histology department and lab. Next to it, more than half a million dollars of construction is under way for new labs.

The atmosphere of the school on this island of nearly 110,000 people is one conducive to study. Students, dressed in shorts and T-shirts, walk between campuses or ride special vans or bikes. But the quiet atmosphere belies the controversy surrounding the school.

Its vice chancellor, Dr. Geoffrey Bourne, and other faculty members insist their school should not be classified as one whose only purpose is to make money and grind out degrees.

"Our admissions standards are very strict," Bourne said. "We had 3,000 applications this year."

Bourne blames the American Medical Association and the medical colleges association for the problems of schools like his. "There are deliberate restrictions on the number of doctors in the United States," he charges. "The AMA acts like a big commercial trust."

A spokesman at AMA headquarters in Chicago said the AMA has no hand in medical school admissions but only participates on the two committees that accredit U.S. medical schools.

"The biggest problem with offshore schools is lack of facilties and faculty. They're usually isolated...and they have problems turning out graduates with the tools to continue their education in the United States," said the spokesman, who declined to be identified.

Graduates of foreign medical schools who wish to practice in the United States must pass the Education Commission for Foreign Medical Graduates test. In the last school year, 476 foreign-educated Americans who passed the test entered "fifth pathway" programs at U.S. medical schools, spending a year in a clerkship training program before internship.

Bourne said he is confident his students can pass the exam for foreign students.

But recent figures seem to support charges by U.S. medical groups that training in the offshore schools is less than adequate. In 1977, according to the magazine Forum on Medicine, 2,751 foreign-trained students took the tests and 902 passed.

ST. GEORGE'S HAS not graduated any students and will face its first obstacle in the next few months when some students are ready for hospital training.

Bourne admits the school is having problems placing students in U.S. hospitals, partly because of a medical colleges association statement advising medical schools and hospitals to be cautious in admitting to hospital clerkships students from offshore schools.

"In assessing solicitations from foreign schools," the statement said, "U.S. medical faculty and teaching hospitals should exercise due caution...and should become thoroughly familiar with the quality of the educational experience offered at the foreign institutions."

Psychiatrists testify: 'the guy's crazy'

INDEPENDENCE (AP)—Dennis Harris shot and killed a fellow community college student last fall because "he's just plain nutty," a psychiatrist testified Wednesday in Harris' murder trial.

Harris, 28, of Rogers, Ark., is charged in the death of Robert Arnold, 19, Neodesha. Both men were sitting in a graphic engineering class at Independence Community College when the shooting occurred.

William McKnelly and Warren Phillips, psychiatrists from the University of Kansas Medical Center in Kansas City, were called to the witness stand Wednesday by the defense.

Charles Forsyth, Harris' attorney, asked McKnelly how much Harris could be expected to help with his own defense.

"Not very much," McKnelly said. "He's crazy, insane, mentally incapacitated. Put it any way you want to, but they are all words for the same thing—the guy's crazy."

McKnelly testified that Harris said he heard voices and felt someone was out to get him.

"He thought the guy (Arnold) was calling him...all kinds of homosexual names," the psyhiatrist said. "He heard these voices, and he's just plain nutty, so he shot him (Arnold)."

County Attorney Paul Oakleaf pointed out that neither doctor had met Harris until Feb. 1, nearly five months after the shooting.

Under cross-examination, Phillips acknowledged that Harris probably realized the act he committed was wrong. "But I don't know at what point in time (he realized it)," the doctor said. "Whether it was before, during or after he pulled the trigger, it would be impossible to determine."

The prosecution agreed to allow the defense to call the psychiatrists to the stand Wednesday, even though the state had not completed its case.

Allocation wheels to start turning

By MARY JO PROCHAZKA
SGA Editor

The allocation of about $728,000 Student Senate has to allocate among 24 groups requesting $753,000 begins Saturday when Finance Committee will hear requests from nine groups.

Last year, senate allocated about $728,000 among 27 organizations.

The money available for allocations comes from the $24.25 each full-time student pays as part of tuition and the $11.50 each part-time student similarly pays.

Patrick Miller, Finance Committee chairman, said each group will be allotted 40 minutes with Finance Committee during which the group representative will make a presentation and answer questions about the budget request.

Finance Committee will not make recommendations during the budget hearings but will meet separately Tuesday, Miller said.

'We'll go through group by group, there'll be more discussion and we"ll decide by majority vote on each area," he said.

FINANCE COMMITTEE members include four student senators, two students who are not senators, one faculty member and the vice president for Student Affairs as well as the chairman. As chairman, Miller can only vote to break a tie.

"They want to get into more depth," senate's Financial Advisor Susan Angle said about the hearings. "This is the time they're (committee members) going to be asking the questions they really need to ask."

As far as determining the amount of money to allocate to each group, Angle and Miller agreed there is nothing "absolutely standard."

Some groups could take 10 minutes and some groups an hour before an allocation is recommended, both said.

Meeting separately to decide recommendations will give Finance Committee members a better perspective for making decisions, Angle said.

As a rough estimate of the amount of money available for allocation for the 1979-80 academic year, Finance Committee is using the amount of money for this year, Angle said.

DURING the week of April 1, more accurate estimates will be available, but actual enrollment figures will not be known until the 20th day of classes this fall, she said.

Enrollment figures affect senate's allocations in two ways.

Because the sole source of student activity fees is students' tuition payments, fewer students means fewer dollars for senate to allocate.

Line items are groups funded a set amount per student, so final enrollment figures determine the exact amount of allocations to these groups.

Line item groups include college councils, Recreational Services, Student Publications, the K-State Union, Fine Arts Council and Associated Students of Kansas.

Other groups—non-line items—are considered individually instead of by a set dollar amount per student.

Ater budget hearings for the remaining 14 groups, scheduled for April 7 and 8, Student Senate will begin determining tentative allocations. Meetings are scheduled for April 12, 18, 19, 25 and 26, in the Union Big 8 Room, Angle said.

Following completion of tentative allocatons, senate will vote on final allocations this fall after final enrollment figures are known.

Groups are allowed to spend up to 25 percent of their tentative allocation after July 1 and before final allocations are decided, according to SGA guidelines.

The groups to be heard Saturday are Consumer Relations Board, Drugg Education Center, FONE, Infant and Child Care Center, University For Man, University Learning Network, Women's Resource Center, Recreational Services and Debate Squad.

'Strong' students offer options to hall food service shut-down

By Suzanne Schlender
Collegian Reporter

Residents of the Strong Hall Complex, comprised of Boyd, Putnam and Van Zile halls, made their first plea to Student Senate last night in a resolution seeking support in "preserving the quality of their living situation."

K-State's housing department is considering closing the food services of the three small halls as a money-saving measure. Residents would eat in the Derby Complex.

The residents' goal is "to keep things as they are with three separate food services," said Mike Murphy, senior in business administration and a member of a committee investigating the Strong Complex.

"Slowly and surely things (programming and social activities) are being phased out," Murphy said.

MURPHY OUTLINED several alternative solutions to the financial woes of the three small halls:

—Leave the Strong Complex food services as they are and update their kitchen equipment as needed.

—Close the food services at Van Zile, Putnam or both halls, requiring those residents to eat at Boyd Hall.

—Close all three kitchens and send all residents to Derby Food Center to eat.

—Establish differential pricing for housing, where residents of Strong Complex would pay more than other hall residents and be allowed to keep their food services.

The resolution to support the Strong Complex residents was a first reading in senate and will be considered as new business at Thursday's meeting.

Library growth plan sent to commissioners

Expansion may soon come to the Manhattan Public Library.

Plans have been submitted to the City Commission by the city library staff to expand the present building to house an additional 63,000 volumes and provide more seating space.

In the library's 10 years, it has witnessed an increase in usage of 121 percent.

"I think they (the City Commission) recognize that we have a fine library that is used perhaps by more people than any other public institution in the city," Margaret Gates, head librarian, said.

"I think that they feel that they must address themselves to the question and try to move forward so that when we have met the capacity, they will fund us," she said. "They had a very positive attitude towards the project."

When the building was constructed 10 years ago, it was designed to allow for expansion by remodeling the interior and enclosing the southeast deck to facilitate another 10 years of growth.

"Mainly, we just need to look forward to the fact that we have got to have more space for our seating and our book stacks, if we are going to continue to have a good institution," Gates said.

If renovation plans are not made within the next two years, the library will be out of space and it will either have to do away with seating or throw away books, Gates said.

The proposed renovation will give the library an additional 7,179 square feet of floor area at an estimated cost of $34.82 per square foot or a rough total of $250,000. The equipment and delivery system in the library were designed to accommodate the expansion and only the 2,709 square feet of additional space on the southeast deck area would require additional heating and cooling systems.

The increased use of the library has been most dramatic in adult non-fiction books, which had an increase in circulation of from 38,112 in 1968 to 121,815 in 1978—an increase of 220 percent, she said.

Americans still assert fuel shortage a hoax

By THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Most Americans think reports of oil and gasoline shortages are a hoax to get consumers to pay more, an Associated Press-NBC News poll shows.

The poll also indicates that almost one-fifth of the people haven't even tried to cut energy use. And more than one-fourth of those questioned say that even if gasoline hits $1 a gallon, they will drive their cars just as much as they do now.

Separate interviews in addition to the poll found that people who are turning down thermostats, driving less or otherwise cutting back are doing so to save money—not because they are worried about energy supplies.

"I'm a senior citizen and I try to save every damn penny I can," explained Rosellen Wyman, 76, of South Boston.

Mrs. Ernest Matthews of Boise, Idaho, said: "We...don't use any more (energy) than we have to. At these prices, you can't afford to."

Is Matthews driving less, cutting out non-essential trips as President Carter has suggested? "How can I cut any more?" she replied. "We don't have any money to go on any trips. About the only thing I use the car for is to go shopping and to work."

THE 1,600 people interviewed by telephone Monday and Tuesday in the AP-NBC News poll were asked whether they thought the oil shortage was real or a hoax to drive up prices. Sixty-eight percent said they thought it was a hoax; 22 percent said the shortage was real; and 10 percent said they weren't sure. Asked the same question about a gasoline shortage, 70 percent said it was a hoax. Twenty-two percent said the shortage was real and 8 percent were unsure.

Asked whether they had cut energy consumption in the past month or two, 19 percent of those questioned said no. Thirty-seven percent said they had turned down the thermostat, 20 percent said they were driving less and 16 percent said they used lights or appliances less.

The AP-NBC News poll also indicated that higher prices for gasoline may not have much effect on driving.

Asked: "If gasoline prices increase to $1 a gallon in the near future, which of the following are you most likely to do," 26 percent—more than one in four—said they would continue to use their cars as they do now. Forty-four percent said they would drive less; 19 percent said they would buy a smaller, fuel-efficient car; 9 percent said they'd switch to mass transit and 2 percent said they were not sure.

PRESIDENT CARTER has appealed to Americans to ease the energy crunch caused by the Iranian revolution by turning down the thermostat, driving less and taking other conservation steps. But Energy Secretary James Schlesinger says the appeals for voluntary savings have not worked; he warns that mandatory measures may be needed.

P.O.W. returns home—13 years later

BANGKOK, Thailand—U.S. Marine Robert Garwood flew out of Vietnam and headed home Thursday after 13 years behind a curtain of secrecy in that war-torn land. He may face charges of collaboration with the enemy in the United States.

Pfc. Garwood, 33, of Greensburg, Ind., refused to talk to reporters on arrival at Bangkok airport on a regularly scheduled Air France flight from Ho Chi Minh City, formerly Saigon.

He later was flown aboard a U.S. military transport to Okinawa, where he arrived early Friday. He is to remain there for a few days for a "medical checkup," a Marine Corps spokesman said.

In New York, a lawyer who said he has been hired by Garwood's family objected to the length of time Garwood will be in Okinawa, on grounds his client would be tempted during that period to tell his side of the story in ways that could damage him.

The attorney, Dermot Foley, also said the Marines had ignored requests to release funds from Garwood's back pay account to finance the presence of a civilian lawyer in Bangkok when he was released.

In Washington, Marine spokesman Lt. Col. Art Brill said allegations against Garwood are being studied to determine whether there should be a court martial. He said the allegations include soliciting American combat forces to throw down their weapons and refuse to fight; attempting to cause insubordination; disloyalty and refusal of duty among fellow prisoners of war; suspicion of desertion in time of war; unlawful dealings with the enemy, and misbehavior while a prisoner of war.

Israeli mood sours on eve of signing

TEL AVIV, Israel—Golda Meir used to say she had a vision of Israelis dancing and singing when peace came to the Middle East. But on the eve of the signing of the Egyptian-Israeli peace treaty, Israel's mood is withdrawn, at times downright sour.

The misgivings, questions and suspicions were illustrated repeatedly in the marathon debate over the treaty in Parliament, which ended Thursday with a 95-18 vote in favor of the pact.

The sense of mistrust seems to have percolated into every sphere of Israeli society, though opinion pollsters and social observers say the mood may yet turn to euphoria when Israelis actually watch Menachem Begin and Anwar Sadat put their signatures to the treaty in Washington next Monday.

But for the moment the atmosphere is one of anti-climax.

"God help us," said Lily Cohen, a mother of two, when asked what she thought of the treaty. "Well," she added, "I don't want to sound too strong about it. We're pleased, but with reservations.

"We worry each time we hear about something new that we have given up for peace. It comes out in bits and pieces, and I'm sure we haven't been told everything yet."

"Peace?" snapped a janitor in a Tel Aviv office building, "What peace? You really believe all this?"

Booze—cheaper by the franchise?

TOPEKA—The Kansas Senate Thursday approved a franchise system for wholesale liquor sales in Kansas, which sponsors say will reduce the cost of liquor to Kansas consumers. The vote was 21-18.

The franchise system will allow manufactuers to have one distributor in each area, replacing the current system of the state's guaranteeing that prices and inventories are identical for all wholesalers.

Kahn cites 'widespread non-compliance'

WASHINGTON—Administration inflation-fighters have told four unidentified companies they apparently are violating President Carter's voluntary price standards, presidential adviser Alfred Kahn said Thursday.

Kahn told a Senate banking subcommittee the four have been sent notices of non-compliance and if officials are "not satisfied with the replies, we will make them (the names) public."

The disclosure came as Kahn, chairman of the Council on Wage and Price Stability and Carter's top inflation adviser, said organized labor and the nation's 500 largest corporations appear to be complying for the most part with the president's anti-inflation guidelines.

But, he added, "When you get down to anything below the top 500...I think you have to believe that there is widespread non-compliance."

Weather

Shazbot! Thursday's forecast was correct!! And, contrary to popular belief, we weren't surprised that we finally picked one right. Putting this hot streak on the line, here is today's forecast: mostly cloudy and cooler today with a chance of rain until noon. Highs will be in the upper 40s to low 50s. Saturday is expected to be sunny and warmer with highs in the mid 50s.

Opinions

Rowdy reputation lousy

K-Staters are known for their warmth, friendliness, love of a good party and rowdiness when having a good time.

There is nothing wrong with the first three, but the last causes problems—not the least being damage to K-State's reputation.

A while ago, while on a Union Program Council trip, I noticed the groans among the locals when informed K-State had a group staying there.

After asking why, I was informed K-State groups are known for their rowdiness—vandalism being one result of their stay.

This rowdiness isn't limited to trips, as indicated by Aggieville vandalism and the result of last semester's football victory over KU.

To stretch the point further, the results of keggers at Tuttle and the littering on campus show rude disregard of beauty and property.

When this is pointed out to students, the attitude seems to be "Well, you're only young once and kids will be kids."

The problem is these "kids" are supposed to be preparing for a position in the adult world, and might have trouble facing reality—vandalism is unacceptable behavior "out there."

Prospective employers might think twice about going to a campus known for rowdiness to recruit employees.

Next time you're having a good time and think about busting a window or two, remember drunkenness isn't a good excuse.

Little touches such as refraining from adding to desk graffiti and picking up Union lunch trays go a long way toward impressing visitors with K-State.

Warmth, friendliness and love for a good party are a nice reputation—it would be better if courtesy and respect could be added to it.

Good job Carter, but...

With the Knesset vote of approval for the Isreal-Egypt peace treaty, peace is a real possibility for the first time in 30 years.

President Carter, the inexperienced outsider in Washington, is the man the world has to thank.

He put his name, and the United States' name, up for collateral in his bid for peace.

Carter proved he is a gambler—a good one. He turned a poor hand into a surprising victory.

Going against impossible odds, Carter used ingenuity, manipulation and genius to get what he wanted.

Carter deserves, and will receive, the gratitude of many for his effort. He has proven he is capable in foreign affairs.

If only he would focus that ingenuity, genius and gambler instinct on workable solutions for problems the U.S. faces, such as inflation, unemployment, energy...

Just another four-letter word

QUESTION: What's a four-letter word which could be the answer to all of the problems in the world, but instead is the cause of them all?

Hint: It has been defined hundreds of times, yet each time around it gets a new meaning.

It was called a "splendid thing" in a song of the '50s and conversely it's the score of zero in a popular sport.

The word, of course, is love. And with it, life seems that much better. Problems become trivial and only the good things in life seem to matter.

When you're "in" love, dreams are always pleasant.

Take that love away, and the nightmares begin.

Every morning, the wrong side of the bed is both sides. At night, the same bed becomes an escape from the pressures of loveless life.

This lack of love can take away, in one instant, a beautiful relationship with someone which had lasted a month, a year or a decade.

It alone can ruin a family who has had love for 28 years.

WITHOUT HAVING somebody to love, you're called a "nobody," according to one songwriter. Perhaps he's right.

Is it worth all the time you put into trying to love someone, only to discover later it was just a temporary thing?

Love seems to be one of those things which reaches a peak, then goes downhill from there on in. The peak sometimes takes a month to reach. Sometimes a year. Sometimes the peak grows and grows and never ends.

But those times are far and few between. What's more, once the peak of love is reached, the downhill fall is almost premature, ending instantly.

So, the question remains: why spend all the time and energy climbing the hill in the first place?

Why not remain on level ground forever?

Why not just kiss love goodbye?

For most, it can't be done. Love means too much in a person's life to go without it for any length of time. Everyone needs to be loved.

Everyone but a small minority; and that's where I fit in.

I've loved and felt loved before. And I've loved it.

But when loving and feeling it stops, that's what I hate. It ruins life. It takes too much time and pain to recover.

And I don't want to experience that pain ever again.

'Pot' calling kettle black

Editor,

If we are to use marijuana laws as a barometer of a state's backwardness, Kerry Taylor would do well to review Texas' past record. Until a few years ago, Texas had some of the harshest pot laws in the nation. Thus, according to Kerry, Texas was even more backwards than Kansas.

I agree the laws need changing. In the meantime, Kerry, I suggest you move back to the "fun and sun" in Texas until our poor little backward state can accomodate you properly.

Fat-eating pesticides starve-out 'hoppers

WASHINGTON (AP)—The Agriculture Department has been given permission to use a new fat-eating natural pesticide against grasshoppers in a trial project this year, the Environmental Protection Agency (EPA) said Thursday.

Officials said the pesticide consists of one-celled organisms called Nosema locustae that occur naturally in a small percentage of grasshoppers.

"These organisms digest the fat bodies of 'hoppers, eventually killing them," the EPA said.

The agency said the department was given "emergency permission" to use the pesticide from May through Sept. 30 "for any part of the country with serious 'hopper infestations."

However, only a limited supply of the compound is available this year so specialists will apply it only to about 100,000 acres of livestock grazing land in northeastern Wyoming.

The pesticide was developed by Agriculture Department scientists at the Range Insect Laboratory, Bozeman, Mont., and so far has not been produced commercially.

Ohlsson to play 97-key piano

The concert of New York pianist Garrick Ohlsson at 8 tonight in McCain Auditorium features a 97-key Bosendorfer piano.

The Bosendorfer is unusual because it has nine additional keys in the lower register, according to Robert Edwards, assistant professor of music.

"The music performed on the instrument is not any different, but the nine extra strings add richness to the harmonics," Edwards said.

The auditorium stage crew is obtaining the instrument from a Kansas City music company. Edwards said the Viennese piano of this type usually sells for $43,000.

Ohlsson has recorded 10 albums of Chopin, Brahms and Rachmaninoff compositions. Presently he is recording the Brahms concertos.

Last season Ohlsson, 30, flew to Europe to perform as soloist with orchestras in Berlin, Munich, Zurich and London. In this country he appeared with orchestras in Philadelphia, New York and Boston.

In 1970, he became the first and only American to win the Chopin International Piano Competition in Warsaw.

'Saturday Night Fever'

Film deserves respect

By DAVID GREUSEL
Collegian Reviewer

Like comedian Rodney Dangerfield the movie "Saturday Nght Fever" never gets any respect.

Just about every aspect of the movie has been joked about, from John Travolta's tight pants and polyester shirts to the gum-popping lyrics of the trillion-selling Bee Gees songs which beat relentlessly through the film's soundtrack.

Collegian Review

But "Saturday Night Fever" is not about John Travolta, his clothes or the Bee Gees.

It is a highly complex film involving several themes, ranging from the realities of Brooklyn street life to the contradictions of being a member of a close-knit Italian family.

The mortar which holds these lumps of plot together is John Travolta, as a Brooklyn kid who grew up smart-mouthed and street-wise.

Personally, I thought Travolta acted better with his mouth closed. There is more emotional in his eyes than in his lines. The dialogue in "Saturday Night Fever"' is loaded with tidy little homilies like "you have to do what you think is right," "It's a stinkin' rat race," and, my favorite, "even humpin's dumpin' most of the time."

IF THAT last bit of wisdom makes you wince, stay awy from "Saturday Night Fever." "Humpin"' is the mildest expletive to be found in the movie. This R-rated version of the film is definitely not for the pure of ear.

Perhaps the prevalance of obscenity in "Saturday Night Fever" can be understood if one accepts the film's main point—living in a world without promise, beauty and hope is an obscenity in itself. Indeed, the three young hoodlums who accompany Travolta through this film epitomize the hopelessness of ghetto youth.

But Travolta's character, Tony Manero, brings a touch of grace and beauty to Bay Ridge, Brooklyn, with his hypnotic disco dancing.

Tony, a classic hero who has traded in his white hat for a white three-piece suit, shuns beer and drugs because, he says, "dancing gets me high."

Dancing would get me high, too, if I could dance with Karen Lynn Gorney, a stunnngly attractive actress who portrays Stephanie, Tony's dancing partner and only true love.

Gorney is quite amusing as a young secretary type who shuns her Brooklyn heritage for the sophistication of life "across the river" in Manhattan. She devotes her life to things interesting and refined. Travolta, with his rude charm, is a tremendously attractive obstacle to her goal.

So, there's something for everybody in "Saturday Night Fever," right? Wrong.

There is nothing in it for aspiring cinematographers, screenwriters, or hopeless romantics. There is also nothing in it for those who blush easily. But "Saturday Night Fever" may just be the best documentary ever set to a disco beat.

Edmonds and Curley comic act scheduled

The comedy team of Edmonds and Curley, scheduled to appear on Saturday Night Live this year, will perform this weekend in the K-State Union Catskeller.

The team has appeared several times on NBC's Tonight Show, and on both the Mike Douglas and Merv Griffen Shows.

Edmonds and Curley have opened performances by Melissa Manchester, B.B. King, John Denver, Harry Chapin, Billy Joel and George Benson.

During the past six years, Edmonds and Curley have become the number one team in college appearances. They have made over 1,000 appearances at colleges in six states.

Tonight's show will be presented in a coffeehouse setting. Tickets for the 8 p.m. performance are $2.

Saturday night's dinner theater begins at 6:30 and the $6 tickets must be purchased in advance.

Tickets for both evenings are on sale today at the Union ticket office from 9:30 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. Tickets for tonight's show may be purchased at the door.

The program is sponsored by the Union Program Council Coffeehouse Committee.

SNAFU
WHEN AND IF THE NEW FIELDHOUSE IS BUILT, WHAT WILL IT BE CALLED?

M.H.

Dear M.H.

Since the fieldhouse is still in the planning stages, it has no name. It's been said that the alumnus who donates $3 million or more will someday have a K-State fieldhouse named after him.

Second in runnning is the person who convinces the State Legislature to approve money for the arena..

It's my feeling, however, that K-State students should choose the name.

And so, SNAFU begins the search for a name with a contest that ends April 15.

Send your entries to: SNAFU, 116 Kedzie Hall, Kansas State University, 66502, or just drop them by Kedzie 116 or 103.

SNAFU
What the hell is room 10-B in Durland Hall used for?

M.B., S.T., J.Y., D.L.

Well MBSTJYDL,

I called Frank Tillman—head of industrial engineering—and put the question to him.

"That's a good question," Tillman said. (Aren't you pleased that you ask good questions?)

The door with 10-B labeled above it, is found inside the men's restroom located in the southeast corner of Durland's lower level. Beyond the door is a roughly 4-foot by 6-foot shaft which runs to ground level—open at the top. Set into the floor of the shaft is a storm drain.

SNAFU'S guess was a possible escape route for Spiderman, but Tillman had different ideas.

"It could be used for fire control—only you couldn't get out—but there are no windows on that side of Durland so fire hoses could be brought in through the shaft—but there aren't any steps, but if there was a fire they'd probably have ladders anyway."

Considering that Durland is the chemical engineering hall a fresh air exchange is important, so, "It might be for fresh air exchange, we need about a 20 percent mix of outside air and this could be part of it," Tillman said.

SNAFU,
What does SNAFU mean?

M.R.

I really wish you hadn't asked this. SNAFU is a word coined by a witty GI during World War II. The letters in the word are the first letters to: Situation Normal—All Fouled Up. (The GI used a more graphic term than fouled.)

There were several variations of SNAFU which followed.

FUBAR means Fouled Up Beyond All Recognition. TARFU is Things Are Really Fouled Up. CUMMFU means Complete Utter Magnificent Military Foul Up. JANFU means Joint Army Navy Foul Up. And, finally, SUSFU means Situation Unchanged Still Fouled Up.

Zoning rules out drive-in window

By LARRY RIBORDY
Collegian Reporter

The new Andy's Restaurant on Bluemont Avenue is just like any other Andy's restaurant, including the drive-through serving window—except Manhattan's drive-up window currently is just for looks.

The Andy's sign stands with a large strip of tape covering the offer of drive-through service.

The entrance driveway curves around behind the building to a not-yet-connected order sign. The black rail fence leads the driver to the east side of the restaurant and to a large service window. Because of zoning regulations, there isn't a pretty face to talk to behind the window.

Zoning regulations for the Aggieville area state that no restaurant will have drive-through services.

"I don't know why they built it with a drive-up window," Gary Stith, chief planner for Manhattan, said. He said the firm was told drive-through services for restaurants in that zone weren't permitted.

Stith said the building permit was issued July 20, 1978 and the permit stated "no drive-up order station" to meet the special conditions for that zone.

STITH SAID the Kansas State Bank is allowed to operate because the regulations are for restaurants. He also said the bank produces less litter than drive-through restaurants.

"We didn't know (about the zoning regulation) until about two weeks before our opening," Randy Rainer, co-manager of Andy's, said.

The restaurant managers learned they couldn't operate the window on Feb. 15, the day the sign permit was issued, Rainer said.

He said all of the company's restaurants have drive-through windows. Plans were submitted and then there was a mix-up, he said, but he wasn't sure what had happened.

Rainer said they were losing roughly $500 to $800 per day because the window can't be used. He said his figures were based on his previous experiences with drive-through windows.

Manhattan to plant 600 Arbor Day trees

Manhattan will be a little greener than usual this spring.

The Manhattan Forestry Division will do their part to celebrate Arbor Week this year by planting hundreds of trees around town.

The week of March 25-31 was recently declared Arbor Week and March 30 as Arbor Day in an official proclamation by Manhattan Mayor Robert Linder.

Throughout the week, trees will be planted in the city parks and local school yards, Harvey Lerman, the city's new forestor, said. Several civic groups will be participating, he said.

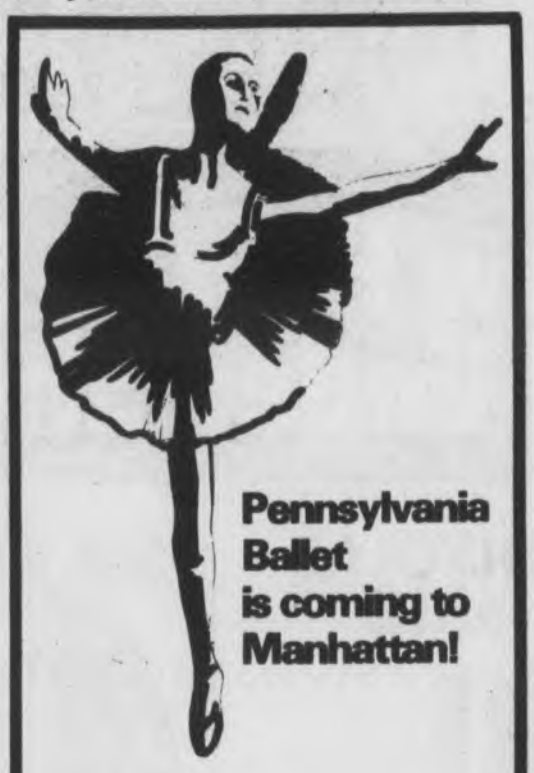
During April, the forestry division will be planting about 600 trees in the residential areas of Manhattan. The trees—12 varieties between 5 and 6 feet high—will be planted so as not to look haphazard, Lerman said.

"What we try to do is match the right tree to the right location," he said. "This results in less maintenance, longer life for the tree and less problems with city utilities." Most of the trees will be planted on the city easement, which extends 14-and-a-half feet from the curb.

Lerman said although they will try to concentrate their planting in newer areas with fewer trees, people can request a tree be planted on their private property.



But there are a few stipulations, he said. The trees have to be placed in the front yard so others can benefit, and although the planting is done free of charge, the homeowner is responsible for the care and maintenance of the tree.

Lerman said he wanted people to feel free to request trees for their areas; they can talk to the planting crew about it or call him at his office.

There will be someone going ahead of the planting crew asking homeowners if they object to having trees planted in their areas. "We don't want to offend people," Lerman said. "We just want to keep Manhattan full of beautiful trees."

Along with the 600 trees, the city also purchased 300 seedlings which will be planted in a one-acre nursery east of the new sewage treatment plant, off Highway 24. The seedlings were purchased for $150 and will be ready for planting in 3 to 5 years.

A special Arbor Day ceremony is planned for 1 p.m. Wednesday in front of City Hall.

Chinese flee Vietnam; bribe way to safety

MANILA, Philippines (AP)—Pham Dang Bao, son of a former South Vietnamese foreign minister and now a refugee in a Philippine camp, says Vietnamese officials extorted money from ethnic Chinese while expelling them from Vietnam as "boat people."

Bao, in a written account given to The Associated Press, said the scheme was carried out under a program called "Registration of Vietnamese of Chinese Descent to Go Abroad."

He said the more than 3,000 refugees aboard the ship on which he sailed out of Vietnam paid more than $1 million in gold for passage and still more money to Vietnamese officials. He said the gold was paid to "middlemen," but that he could not further identify them.

Before departing, they were searched twice by Vietnamese policemen for more gold and jewelry, he said.

BAO'S STORY was smuggled out of his refugee camp to The Associated Press. Although the report could not be confirmed independently, the AP has learned the Philippine government is using Bao's testimony as a major part of its investigation of the boat people situation. Earlier charges have been made of official Vietnamese involvement in the seaborne exodus.

Bao, 30, is the son of the late Pham Dang Lam, a two-time foreign minister, head of the South Vietnamese delegation to the Paris peace talks and ambassador to Britain when the South Vietnamese government fell in 1975.

Bao told Filipino investigators that the ship transferred its cache of gold to another ship on the South China Sea after leaving Vietnam. He said his ship was called the Kylu, but it is believed to be the Skyluck, which has been stranded at Hong Kong for six weeks with 3,000 refugees aboard.

Hong Kong officials believe the Skyluck is the same ship that dumped Bao and 572 people in the central Philippines a week before.

BAO IS NOT Chinese and like all ethnic Vietnamese he was barred from leaving Vietnam. He said his plans for an illegal escape began last Jan. 16 when his brother-in-law, identified only as Thau, offered him a chance to flee from Ben Tre, a port city on the Mekong River delta.

"According to Thau, the Ben Tre police and Coast Guards had received instructions from above to clear the city of all Chinese merchants by the end of March," Bao said. "The objective was to seize their properties and to prevent an eventual formation of a Chinese fifth column in case border clashes would escalate into an open war."

Bao said he first had to buy false papers identifying himself, his wife and four members of Thau's family as Chinese, which he did in the Chinese quarter of Ho Chi Minh City, the former Saigon.

THE MIDDLEMEN'S price for six seats was 40 ounces of gold, worth about $9,600, he said. Thau bargained down the price to 20 ounces.

"That was relatively low-priced," Bao said. "In Vietnam, the middlemen between the police and prospective escapees really made a lot of money by putting the average price at 10 to 12 ounces per person."

The middlemen were not identified. Earlier reports have suggested that businessmen in Hong Kong or elsewhere were behind the evacuation of boat people, but Bao's account implied that the operation was organized from the beginning by the Vietnamese government.

The group rode a bus to Ben Tre, where they met their Chinese "family," which now had 30 "members," Bao said.

'Cats face tough field in LSU 'super meet'

The K-State track team, minus a few of its key performers, travels to Baton Rouge, La., today for what could be one of its toughest outdoor meets this season.

The 'Cats will match themselves Saturday against Florida and Louisiana State as well as two Big 8 powerhouses: Missouri, the 1979 Big 8 Indoor champion, and Oklahoma, last year's Big 8 Outdoor champion.

Sports

"This should be a super meet," Jerome Howe, K-State assistant track coach said.

Florida and LSU are two of the stronger teams in their divisions, Howe said.

"We're looking at one of the toughest meets we'll have. Missouri has both strength and depth and they can do everything," he said.

Although some of K-State's outstanding performers will remain at home due to injuries, Howe said the team as a whole is not as badly injured as it was at this time last year.

"We're leaving a lot of good kids at home. Hopefully, they'll get healthy," he said.

SOPHOMORE Ray Bradley, who has already qualified for the Texas Relays, is expected to do well in both the shot put and discus events.

Senior Frank Perbeck, last year's Big 8 champion, and freshman Joe Bramlage should place in the javelin throw, Howe said.

"We're taking three pole vaulters. They could do a good job, but you never can tell," he said. "They are all capable of vaulting over 16 feet and if they do, we should do real well."

K-State quartermilers Ray Hanf and Bill Tanner and triple jumper Vince Parrette will remain at home with injuries.

'Back in the saddle again'; K-State hosts NIRA rodeo

K-State students will be "back in the saddle again" to compete in the 23rd annual K-State National Intercollegiate Rodeo Association (NIRA) rodeo on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.
